Mr. President, no sooner does a new interest spring up in the country, no sooner does it commence to exhibit itself, and to show that it has merit and promise, than gentlemen who have charge of our revenue system begin to consider it as an interesting object of taxation. The Committee on Finance, casting their eyes abroad over the productions of the country, have discovered this new production, and it seems not only to have attracted their attention, but also to have inspired their ingenuity—if I may so express myself—in argument, in order to bring it under this proposed fifty-cent tax. They say that the duty is, in fact, under the proposed bill less than under the existing law. That is very true. The present duty is one dollar. They propose to make it fifty cents; and they tell us that this is a boon to the vineyard men, and to the manufacturers of wine and brandy from grapes. It is very true that the duty is reduced in amount one half, but this question of duties upon spirits is a relative one. You are to consider all your duties together. You are to consider how one article can command a market in competition with other articles; how one form of alcoholic spirits can get into the market, and can command the market in competition with other forms of production.

Now, then, you observe that the case as to the production of brandy from grapes is entirely changed. When you lower the general spirit duties from two dollars to fifty cents you have a new field, you have a new question; and to apply the reasoning which we have heard here, that you are favoring this particular interest because you reduce its burden one half, seems to me absurd or inconsequential, in view of the fact that you reduce other spirit duties four times. It is a relative question, and you are to take into view all the facts which pertain to it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania permit me to suggest to him that the only article that comes in competition with this grape brandy is an imported article, the duties upon which remain at three dollars a gallon.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I do not understand it so. I understand that there is a competition in the markets of the country and in the consumption of the country between different domestic spirits, a thing I considered so manifest that no gentleman would question it.

One other remark and I will leave this amendment to its fortunes. During several years past I have been much interested in reading accounts from California, in agricultural papers of the eastern States, of the cultivation of vineyards and generally of the development, new and astonishing, of agricultural interests in that State. I shall not, however, recite reminiscences of my reading. I will sum up what I have to say in a few words. I have obtained the impression that California affords one of the most eligible locations for vineyards in the world, and that by treating the vineyard interest in that State indulgently by our legislation in Congress we can greatly promote its development and success, and may secure a very valuable production not only for domestic consumption but also to enter into the general commerce of the world. Vines are now being planted there by the million. Of course those vineyards are new; they are not yet fully grown; they are not yet felt in the commerce of the country; they do not yield very large and astonishing results in our returns of taxation; but I am entirely convinced that if we permit those interests connected with vineyard cultivation in California to have free course, to grow up, we will reap in our revenue, directly and indirectly, hereafter, very great advantage, and we will get a valuable article for exportation abroad.

Sir, instead of looking with disfavor upon the growth of vineyards in California, or seeking to tax them or their productions severely, I would regard them kindly and bear very lightly upon them. I would enable them, if I could, to spring up and to grow into a great national interest. I agree entirely, so far as my information enables me to form an opinion, with the arguments which have been made by the Senators from California on this subject, and I shall, with great cheerfulness, vote for the amendment which they propose.

Mr. FOWLER. I wish to make one remark in this connection. From the reports that I have got from California and from Senators from the Pacific coast, it is very evident that that country is well qualified for the production of grapes, and of course for the manufacture of wine and brandy. The mere tax of fifty cents a gallon on the production of brandy amounts to nothing, as they are already protected by a duty of three dollars a gallon on the imported article. Here is a bounty of two dollars and fifty cents a gallon upon the production of brandy made from grapes in the State of California. Besides, this tax really amounts to nothing. Last year I understand it was only $11,000 in California.

Mr. SHERMAN. Sixty-seven thousand dollars in California.

Mr. STEWART. And $11,000 in Ohio.

Mr. FOWLER. It does not amount to much, at any rate. If it were necessary to protect this production to any greater extent than it is already protected, we had better remit the entire tax. That would be little more than reducing it to twenty-five cents. I do not know how much it would be necessary to pay in order to protect this reduction if $2 50 a gallon is not sufficient. To what extent can we go? The argument of the Senator from Pennsylvania would show that we ought to encourage this branch of industry. If this is not a sufficient encouragement, pray how many more dollars would be required in addition? Remember that it has been stated that the foreign article is the only article that enters into competition with brandy made from grapes in this country. If whisky or spirits competed with it, of course the whole thing should be taken into consideration; but this is a specific article and it has a protection larger than almost any other in this country. Again, it is the only possible duty which you can get from the article. If you do not get this tax, you will get none at all. If it be true, as has been stated, and I have no doubt it is, that this brandy is made from the refuse after the manufacture of wine, I see no reason why it should not pay a tax of fifty cents a gallon, whereas in apple and peach brandy the whole fruit is entirely lost as soon as the brandy is made from it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California, [Mr. COLE.]

Mr. CONNESS. I ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CONNESS. I desire to say one word before the vote is taken, and that is to the Senator from Tennessee. In California, where this interest is known and understood, I want to acquaint him with what the practice is touching the relative tax imposed upon different classes of property in our local State legislation. It is well known, and I need not state it here, that California in the production of the cereals is equal if not superior, according to its area, to any other State in the Union, and the agricultural or grain-growing interest in that State may predominate in the legislation of the State when it pleases; but it sustains a statute in that State exempting vineyards until they are five years old from all taxation whatever, so universal is the opinion of the necessity, to use a common phrase, of "letting up" on this interest in which so much is invested and which takes such a length of time to mature. If the opinion of that State does that, certainly the relative taxation imposed of last year may be kept up here.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 11, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Chandler, Cole, Conness, Hendricks, Howard, McCreery, Morton, Stewart, Sumner, and Williams—11.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Cattell, Conkling, Cragin, Davis, Edmunds, Fessenden, Fowler, Frelighuysen, Harlan, Howe, Johnson, McDonald, Morgan, Morrill of Vermont, Osborn, Patterson of New Hampshire, Pomeroy, Ross, Sherman, Tipton, Van Winkle, Welch, and Yates—24.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Cameron, Corbett, Dixon, Doolittle, Drake, Ferry, Grimes, Henderson, Morrill of Maine, Norton, Nye, Patterson of Tennessee, Ramsey, Rice, Saulsbury, Sprague, Thayer, Trumbull, Vickers, Wade, Willey, and Wilson—23.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk continued the reading of the bill, as follows;

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That proof-spirit shall be held and taken to be that alcoholic liquor which contains one half of its volume of alcohol of a specific gravity of seven thousand nine hundred and thirty-nine ten thousandths at sixty degrees Fahrenheit; and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, for the prevention and detection of frauds by distillers of spirits, is hereby authorized to adopt, procure, and prescribe for use, at the expense of the United States, such hydrometers, saccharometers, weighing and gauging instruments, meters, or other means for ascertaining the quantity, gravity, and producing capacity of any mash, wort, or beer used or to be used in the production of distilled spirits, and the strength and quantity of spirits subject to tax, as he may deem necessary; and he may prescribe rules and regulations to secure a uniform and correct system of inspection, weighing, marking, and gauging of spirits. And in all sales of spirits hereafter made a gallon shall be taken to be a gallon of proof-spirit, according to the foregoing standard set forth and declared for the inspection and gauging of spirits throughout the United States.

The committee reported two amendments to this section. The first was, in line eight, to strike out the word "procure," and after the word "use," in the same line, to strike out the words "at the expense of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add at the end of the section the following:

And the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is hereby authorized, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to exempt distillers of brandy from apples, peaches, or grapes, exclusively, from such of the provisions of this act relating to the manufacture of spirits as, in his judgment, may seem expedient.

Mr. HOWARD. I think the phraseology of this amendment is rather peculiar, and may lead to misunderstanding. I should like the chairman of the committee to explain it. It seems to me it gives the Secretary of the Treasury a discretionary authority even to remit entirely the tax upon these articles.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will say to the Senator from Michigan it is copied from the old law, and is intended simply for this purpose. This bill provides for a great number of reports and a great amount of stringent legislation to guard against frauds in the distillation of grain. These are not applicable to the little distilleries where fruit is distilled into brandy. This provision is the same as that contained in the old law. It always has been a part of the law. It simply authorizes the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, by general regulation, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to relieve distillers of brandy from apples, peaches, or grapes, from such of the provisions of this act relating to the manufacture of spirits, that is the mode and manner of making the accounts &c., as in his judgment may seem expedient.

Mr. HOWARD. Is it simply to relieve them from some of the details of the legislation?

Mr. SHERMAN. That is all.

Mr. HOWARD. It does not authorize the Secretary to remit the tax?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir; not at all.

Mr. ANTHONY. It does not intend to do it; but does it not do it?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir.

Mr. HOWARD. I suggest to the chairman to alter the phraseology so as to make it plain and specific.

Mr. SHERMAN. The proof of the pudding is in the eating of it. This provision has always been in the law, and it has never interfered with the collection of the tax.

Mr. HOWARD. If the chairman is satisfied that it is sufficiently explicit I have nothing further to say.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Finance whether the word "relating" might not be changed to "regulating?"

Mr. SHERMAN. These are the same words that are in the old law.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I know they are; but would not "regulating" be a better chosen word?

Mr. SHERMAN. The language is here "relating to the manufacture of spirits." You cannot make anything else out of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment, to insert as section three the following:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That whenever the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall adopt and prescribe for use any meter, meters, or meter sales it shall be the duty of every owner, agent, or superintendent of a distillery to make application to the collector of his district for such meter, meters, or meter sales to be used in his distillery, and the same shall be furnished and attached to the distillery at the expense of the distiller, whose duty it shall be to furnish all the pipes, materials, labor, and facilities necessary to complete such attachment in accordance with the regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who is hereby further authorized to order and require such changes of or additions to distilling apparatus, connecting pipes, pumps, or cisterns, or any machinery connected with or used in or on the distillery premises, or may require to be put on any of the stills, tubs, cisterns, pipes, or other vessels such fastenings, locks, or seals as he may deem necessary.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee whether this contemplates a meter beside that already established?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir. I will say to the Senator that this section is in accordance with the existing law. The House undertook in the second section of this bill to require the United States at its own expense to furnish meters to distilleries; but very many of the distilleries have already furnished themselves with meters in accordance with the regulations of the law.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The only reason why I made the inquiry was that I supposed, under the present regulations, distillers had already gone to this expense, and that this contemplated an abandonment of that and the adoption of some other plan.

Mr. SHERMAN. On the contrary, it contemplates going on with the present system.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Then I have no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read the third section of the House bill, now become section four, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That distilled spirits, spirits, alcohol, and alcoholic spirit, within the true intent and meaning of this act, is that substance known as ethyl alcohol, hydrated oxide of ethyl, or spirit of wine, which is commonly produced by the fermentation of grain, or starch, or sugar, including all dilutions and mixtures of this substance; and the tax which shall attach to this substance as soon as it is in existence as such, whether it be subsequently separated as pure or impure spirit, or be immediately, or at any subsequent time, transferred into any other substance, either in the process of original production or by any subsequent process; and no mash, wort, or wash fit for distillation or the production of spirits or alcohol shall be made or fermented in any building or on any premises other than a distillery duly authorized according to law; and no such mash, wort, or wash so made and fermented shall be sold or removed from any distillery before being distilled; and no person other than an authorized distiller shall by distillation, or by any other process, separate the alcoholic spirits from any fermented mash, wort, or wash; and no person shall use spirits or alcohol or any vapor of alcoholic spirits in manufacturing vinegar or any other article, or in any process of manufacture whatever, unless the spirits or alcohol so used shall have been produced in an authorized distillery and the tax thereon paid, or shall have been lawfully imported into the United States and the duties thereon paid. Any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this section shall be fined, for every offense, not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned for not less than six months nor more than two years.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment, in line seven to strike out the word "which."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert at the end of the section the following proviso:

Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed as imposing any additional tax on fermented liquors, or any regulations respecting the manufacture thereof, other than those elsewhere provided for.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. [4] 5. And be it further enacted, That every person having in his possession or custody, or under his control, any still or distilling apparatus set up, shall register the same with the assistant assessor of the division in which said still or distilling apparatus shall be, by filing with him duplicate statements, in writing, subscribed by such person, setting forth the particular place where such still or distilling apparatus is set up, the kind of still and its cubic contents, the owner thereof, his place of residence, and the purpose for which said still or distilling apparatus has been or is intended to be used; one of which statements shall be retained and preserved by the assistant assessor, and the other transmitted to the assessor of the district. Stills and distilling apparatus now set up shall be so registered within sixty days from the time this act takes effect, and those hereafter set up shall be so registered immediately upon their being set up. Any still or distilling apparatus not so registered, together with all personal property in the possession, or custody, or under the control of such person and found in the building, or in any yard or inclosure connected with the building, in which the same shall be set up, shall be forfeited. And any person having in his possession or custody, or under his control, any still or distilling apparatus set up which is not so registered, shall pay a penalty of $500, and on conviction shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, and imprisoned for not less than one month nor more than two years.

No amendment being reported to this section, the Chief Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. [5] 6. And be it further enacted, That every person engaged in, or intending to be engaged in, the business of a distiller or rectifier, shall give notice in writing, subscribed by him, to the assessor of the district within which such business is to be carried on, stating his name and place of residence, and if a company or firm, the name and place of residence of each member thereof, the place where said business is to be carried on, and whether of distilling or rectifying. And if such business be carried on in a city, the residence and place of business shall be indicated by the name of the street and number of the building. In case of a distiller the notice shall also state the kind of stills, and the cubic contents thereof, the number and kind of boilers, the number of mash-tubs and fermenting-tubs, and the cubic contents of each tub, the number of receiving cisterns, and the cubic contents of each cistern, together with a particular description of the lot or tract of land on which the distillery is situated, with the size and description of the buildings thereon, and of what material constructed. The notice shall also state the number of hours in which the distiller will ferment each tub of mash or beer, the estimated quantity of distilled spirits which the apparatus is capable of distilling every twenty-four hours, and the names and residence of every person interested or to be interested in the business, and that said distillery and the premises connected therewith are not within six hundred feet of any premises authorized to be used for rectifying or refining distilled spirits by any process. In case of a rectifier, the notice shall state the precise location of the premises where such business is to be carried on, the name and residence of every person interested or to be interested in the business, by what process the applicant intends to rectify, purify, or refine distilled spirits, the kind and cubic contents of any still used or to be used for such purpose, and the estimated quantity of spirits which can be rectified, purified, or refined every twenty-four hours in such establishment, and that said rectifying establishment is not within six hundred feet of the premises of any distillery registered for the distillation of spirits. In case of any change in the location, form, capacity, ownership, agency, superintendency, or in the persons interested in the business of such distillery or rectifying establishment, or in the time of fermenting the mash or beer, notice thereof, in writing, shall be given to the said assessor or to the assistant assessor of the division within twenty-four hours of said change. And any assistant assessor receiving such notice shall immediately transmit the same to the assessor of the district. Every notice required by this section shall be in such form and shall contain such additional particulars as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may from time to time prescribe. Any person failing or refusing to give such notice shall pay a penalty of $1,000, and on conviction shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $2,000, and any person giving a false or fraudulent notice shall, on conviction, in addition to such penalty or fine, be imprisoned not less than six months nor more than two years.

No amendment being reported to this section, the Chief Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. [6] 7. And be it further enacted, That every distiller shall, on filing his notice of intention to continue or commence business, with the assessor before proceeding with such business, make and execute a bond in form prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with at least two sureties, to be approved by the assessor of the district. The penal sum of said bond shall not be less than double the amount of tax on the spirits that can be distilled in his distillery during a period of fifteen days; but in no case shall such bond be for a less sum than $5,000. The condition of the bond shall be that the principal shall faithfully comply with all the provisions of this act in relation to the duties and business of distillers, and will pay all penalties incurred or fines imposed on him for a violation of any of the said provisions; that he will not suffer the lot or tract of land on which the distillery stands, or any part thereof, or any of the distilling apparatus, to be incumbered by mortgage, judgment, or other lien during the time in which he shall carry on said business. The assessor may refuse to approve said bond when, in his judgment, the situation of the distillery is such as would enable the distiller to defraud the United States; and in case of such refusal, the distiller may appeal to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, whose decision in the matter shall be final. A new bond shall be required in case of the death, insolvency, or removal of either of the sureties, and may be required in any other contingency, at the discretion of the assessor or Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Any person failing or refusing to give the bond hereinbefore required, or giving any false, forged, or fraudulent bond, shall forfeit the distillery, distilling apparatus, and all real estate and premises connected therewith, and on conviction shall be fined not less than $500, nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than six months nor more than two years.

The committee reported two amendments to this section. The first was in line twenty-four, to strike out "shall" and insert "may;" and in line twenty-six to strike out the words "may be required;" so as to read:

A new bond may be required in case of the death, insolvency, or removal of either of the sureties, and in any other contingency, at the discretion, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line twenty-nine, after the word "required" to insert the words "or to renew the same."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. [7] 8. And be it further enacted, That no bond of a distiller shall be approved unless he is the owner in fee, unincumbered by any mortgage, judgment, or other lien, of the lot or tract of land on which the distillery is situated, or unless he files with the assessor in connection with his notice, the written consent of the owner of the fee, and of any mortgage, judgment creditor, or other person having a lien thereon, duly acknowledged, that the premises may be used for the purpose of distilling spirits, subject to the provisions of this act, and expressly stipulating that the lien of the United States for taxes and penalties shall have priority of such mortgage, judgment, or other incumbrance, and that in case of the forfeiture of the distillery premises, or any part thereof, the title of the same shall vest in the United States discharged from any such mortgage, judgment, or other incumbrance. In any case where the owner of a distillery or distilling apparatus, erected prior to the passage of this act, has an estate for a term of years only in the lot or tract of land on which the distillery is situated, the lease or other evidence of title to which shall have been duly recorded prior to the passage of this act, the value of such lot or tract of land, together with the building and distilling apparatus, shall be appraised in the manner to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and the assessor is hereby authorized to except, in lieu of the said written consent of the owner of the fee, the bond of said distiller with not less than two sureties, who shall be residents of the collection district or county, or an adjoining county in the same State, in which the distillery is situated, and shall be the owners of unincumbered real estate in said district or county, or adjoining county, equal to such appraised value. The penal sum of said bond shall be equal to the appraised value of said lot or tract of land, together with the buildings and distilling apparatus, and conditioned that in case the distiller, distilling apparatus, or any part thereof, shall, by final judgment, be forfeited for the violation of any of the provisions of this act, the obligors will pay the amount stated in said bond. Said bond shall be in such form as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall prescribe.

The committee reported an amendment to this section in line twenty-five, to strike out the word "except" and to insert "accept."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read the following sections, to which no amendments were proposed:

Sec. [8] 9. And be it further enacted, That every distiller and every person intending to engage in the business of a distiller shall, previous to the approval of his bond, cause to be made, under the direction of the assessor of the district, an accurate plan and description, in triplicate, of the distillery and distilling apparatus, distinctly showing the location of every still, boiler, doubler, worm-tub, and receiving cistern, the course and construction of all fixed pipes used or to be used in the distillery, and of every branch thereof, and of every cock, or joint thereof, and of every valve therein, together with every place, vessel, tub, or utensil from and to which any such pipe shall lead, or with which it communicates. Such plan and description shall also show the number and location of every cubic contents of every still, mash-tub, and fermenting-tub, together with the cubic contents of every receiving cistern, and the color of each fixed pipe, as required in this act. One copy of said plan and description shall be kept displayed in some conspicuous place in the distillery; two copies shall be furnished to the assessor of the district, one of which shall be kept by him and the other transmitted to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The accuracy of every such plan and description shall be verified by the assessor, the draughtsman, and the distiller; and no alteration shall be made in such distillery without the consent, in writing, of the assessor, which alteration shall be shown on the original or by a supplemental plan and description, and a reference thereto noted on the original, as the assessor may direct; and any supplemental plan and description shall be executed and preserved in the same manner as the original.

Sec. [9] 10. And be it further enacted, That immediately after the passage of this act every assessor shall proceed, at the expense of the United States, with the aid of some competent and skillful person, to be designated by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to make survey of each distillery registered or intended to be registered for the production of spirits in his district to estimate and determine its true producing capacity, and in like manner shall estimate and determine the capacity of any such distillery as may hereafter be so registered in said district, a written report of which shall be made in triplicate, signed by the assessor and the person aiding in making the same, one copy of which shall be furnished to the distiller, one retained by the assessor, and the other immediately transmitted to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. If the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall at any time be satisfied that such report of the capacity of a distillery is in any respect incorrect or needs revision, he shall direct the assessor to make in like manner another survey of said distillery; the report of said survey shall be executed in triplicate and deposited as hereinbefore provided. And, in like manner and under like restrictions and provisions, there shall be ascertained, recorded, and reported the capacity of every establishment now existing, or that may be hereafter commenced, for redistilling distilled spirits.

Sec. [10] 11. And be it further enacted, That after the passage of this act it shall not be lawful for any assessor to assess a special tax upon any distiller, or for the collector to collect the same, or for any distiller who has heretofore paid a special tax as such to continue the business of distilling until such distiller shall have given the bond required by this act, and shall have complied with the provisions of law having reference to the registration and survey of distilleries, and having reference to the arrangement and construction of distilleries, and the premises connected therewith, in manner and as required by this act; nor shall it be lawful for any assessor of internal revenue to assess, or for any collector to collect, any special tax for distilling on any premises distant less than six hundred feet from any premises used for rectifying, nor shall any assessor assess or collector collect any special tax for rectifying distilled spirits on any premises distant less than six hundred feet from any distillery when the distillery and rectifying establishments are occupied and used by different persons; nor shall the processes of distillation and rectification both be carried on within the distance of six hundred feet. In all cases where a distillery and rectifying establishment, distant from the one from the other less than six hundred feet are occupied and used by the same person said person shall have the right to elect which business shall be discontinued at that place. In all cases where rectifying or distilling shall be discontinued under the provisions of this section, and the time for which the special tax for rectifying or distilling was paid remains unexpired, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to refund out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, on requisition of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, a proportionate part of any sum originally paid for special tax therefor, which shall be in such ratio to the whole sum paid as the unexpired time for which special tax was paid shall bear to the whole term for which the same was paid. Any collector or assessor of internal revenue who shall fail to perform any duty imposed by this section, or shall assess or collect any special tax in violation of its provisions, shall be liable to a penalty of $5,000 for each offense.

Sec. [11] 12. And be it further enacted, That no person shall use any still, boiler, or other vessel for the purpose of distilling in any dwelling-house, nor in any shed, yard, or inclosure connected with any dwelling-house, nor on board of any vessel or boat, nor in any building or on any premises where beer, lager beer, ale, porter, or other fermented liquors, vinegar or other are manufactured or produced, or where sugars or sirups are refined, or where liquors of any description are retailed, or where any other business is carried on; and every person who shall use any still, boiler, or other vessel for the purpose of distilling, as aforesaid, in any building or other premises where the above specified articles are manufactured, produced, refined, or retailed, or other business is carried on, or on board of any vessel or boat, or in any dwelling-house or other place, as aforesaid, or shall aid or assist therein, or who shall cause or procure the same to be done, shall, on conviction, be fined $1,000, and imprisoned for not less than six months nor more than two years, in the discretion of the court: Provided, That saleratus may be manufactured, or meal or flour ground from grain in any building or on any premises where spirits are distilled; but such meal or flour only to be used for distillation on the premises.

Mr. CORBETT. Are these provisions to be disposed of as we go along?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the order of the Senate.

Mr. CORBETT. It seems to me that this is a very singular provision:

That saleratus may be manufactured, or meal or flour ground from grain in any building or on any premises where spirits are distilled; but such meal or flour only to be used for distillation on the premises.

Mr. SHERMAN. As soon as the amendments of the committee are disposed of, the whole bill will be open to amendment, and the Senator can then move to amend that provision of the bill, although that provision is a necessary part of any tax bill because they must grind their grain at the distillery. Still, it will all be open to amendment at another stage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Chief Clerk read the next section, as follows:

Sec. [12] 13. And be it further enacted, That there shall be assessed and collected monthly, in the same manner as other taxes are assessed and collected, on every registered distillery having an aggregate capacity for mashing and fermenting twenty bushels of grain or less, or sixty gallons of molasses or less, in twenty-four hours, two dollars per day; and two dollars per day for every twenty bushels of grain or sixty gallons of molasses of said capacity in excess of twenty bushels of grain or sixty gallons of molasses in twenty-four hours. But any distiller who shall stop work, as provided by this act, shall pay only two dollars per day during the time the work shall be so suspended in his distillery.

The Committee on Finance reported several amendments to this section. The first was in lines two, three, and four, to strike out the words "in the same manner as other taxes are assessed and collected, on every registered distillery having," and to insert "from every authorized distiller whose distillery has."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line seven, after "hours" to insert "a tax of;" and after "day" to insert "Sundays excepted;" and in line eight to insert the words "a tax of" before "two."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line twelve, to strike out "stop" and to insert "suspend."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read the next section, as follows:

Sec. [13] 14. And be it further enacted, That any person who shall manufacture any still, boiler, or other vessel, to be used for the purpose of distilling, shall, before the same is removed from the place of manufacture, notify in writing the assessor of the district in which such still, boiler, or other vessel is to be used or set up, by whom it is to be used, its capacity, and the time when the same is to be removed from the place of manufacture; and no such still, boiler, or other vessel shall be set up without the permit in writing of the said assessor for that purpose; and any person who shall set up any such still, boiler, or other vessel, without first obtaining a permit from the said assessor of the district in which such still, boiler, or other vessel is intended to be used, or who shall fail to give such notice, shall pay in either case the sum of $500, and shall forfeit the distilling apparatus thus removed or set up in violation of law.

No amendment being proposed to this section, the next was read, as follows:

Sec. [14] 15. And be it further enacted, That every distiller shall provide at his own expense a warehouse to be situated on and to constitute a part of his distillery premises, to be used only for the storage of distilled spirits, of his own manufacture, but no dwelling-house shall be used for such purpose, and no door, window, or other opening shall be made or permitted in the walls of such warehouse leading into the distillery or into any other room or building; and such warehouse, when approved by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, on report of the collector, is hereby declared to be a bonded warehouse of the United States, to be known as a distillery warehouse, and shall be under the direction and control of the collector of the district, and in charge of an internal revenue forekeeper assigned thereto by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and the tax on the spirits stored in such warehouse shall be paid before removal from such warehouse, unless removed in pursuance of this act.

The committee reported an amendment to this section, to strike out the last words, "unless removed in pursuance of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wished to inquire of the chairman, while the twelfth section was being read, as to the adoption in this bill of the policy of having extraordinary taxes. Why not in one sum fix the tax by the gallon? Here is a tax in this twelfth section by the day.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state that this came from the House, and we have modified it only in language. The purpose of this section, so far as I know, is to discriminate against very small distilleries, so as not to encourage the distillation of spirits except in distilleries where the distillation amounts to the aggregate here stated. It is not large. If I had my way in a tax bill I would at least quadruple the minimum of this bill; but the committee did not see proper to amend it as fixed by the House. As a matter of course, if a little distillery with a capacity of mashing only ten bushels of grain should be started, it would have to pay two dollars a day. To that extent it would be a discrimination against the very small distilleries.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It would cost that man more than another?

Mr. SHERMAN. The purpose is to discourage, by this language, the very small distilleries. I will say to the Senator that I do not think there are any distilleries in Indiana or Ohio that have not the capacity of mashing twenty bushels a day. I think it would make it more effective if it were a tax upon distilleries having less than a capacity of mashing one hundred bushels of grain a day. Then it would probably discourage the distillation of small distilleries.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I supposed the tax was evaded more frequently by large establishments than by small ones.

Mr. SHERMAN. Large establishments have evaded the tax in removal from bonded warehouse for transportation or for rectifying. The Senator will see that this bill is framed on the idea that no liquor shall be removed from the place of distillation for any purpose except after the payment of the tax.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Do I understand that it is not to be removed for the purpose of exportation without paying tax?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is not to be removed for any purpose without payment of tax, but there is a provision that in case of exportation in a certain way a drawback shall be paid.

Mr. TRUMBULL. And it must be exported in order to get that drawback?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; it must be on ship board and cleared for exportation, and then the drawback is paid on the delivery of a bond to secure the bona fide exportation. The Senator will find some fifty pages further on the machinery by which whisky may be exported. There is no provision by which whisky can be got out of the distillery warehouse except upon payment of the tax on the basis of this act.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That is very objectionable, I know, to many of the distillers in my State. I have received many letters in regard to it and have sent some of them to the committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know that; but that principle is adopted in framing the bill, and as a matter of course if that principle is abandoned the whole bill will have to be reframed. The whole theory of this bill and the striking difference between this and the present system is that under this bill no whisky of any kind can be removed from the distillery warehouse without payment of the tax, and the guards and machinery provided are with a view to detect and take possession immediately of distilled spirits, put them in warehouse, and keep them till the tax is paid.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I suppose the committee have considered the objections that are made by manufacturers of whisky in the West, where it is chiefly manufactured, to this system of requiring the tax to be paid there when the market is not there, and the advantage that it gives to other portions of the country.

Mr. SHERMAN. As a matter of course we have considered them fully. If the Senator wants to raise the question at any time, I am prepared to discuss it at length; but I am satisfied, and I think the whole country is satisfied, and every officer of the Government is satisfied, that it is utterly impossible to collect the tax on spirits unless that tax is levied at the place of distillation. That may be said to be an axiom upon which we have based the whole bill. If that axiom is overthrown, as a matter of course the bill entirely fails. I do not choose to go into the discussion unless required to do so.

Section fifteen, now sixteen, was next read, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That the owner, agent, or superintendent of any distillery established as hereinbefore provided, shall erect in a room or building to be provided and used for that purpose, and for no other, and to be constructed in the manner to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, two or more receiving cisterns, each to be at least of sufficient capacity to hold all the spirits distilled during the day of twenty-four hours, into which shall be conveyed all the spirits produced in said distillery; and each of such cisterns shall be so constructed as to leave an open space of at least three feet between the top thereof and the floor or roof above, and of not less than eighteen inches between the bottom thereof and the floor below, and shall be so situated that the officer can pass around the same, and shall be connected with the outlet of the worm or condenser by suitable pipes or other apparatus so constructed as always to be exposed to the view of the officer, and so connected and constructed as to prevent the abstraction of spirits while passing from the outlet of the worm or condenser to the receiving cisterns; such cisterns and the room in which they are contained shall be in charge of and under the lock and seal of the internal revenue gauger designated for that duty; and on the third day after the spirits are conveyed into such cisterns the same shall be drawn off into casks or other packages, under the supervision of such gauger in the presence of the storekeeper; and shall be immediately inspected, gauged, proved, and the casks or packages marked, as herein provided by law, and be removed directly to the distillery warehouse; and on special application to the assessor or assistant assessor by the owner, agent, or superintendent of any distillery, the spirits may be drawn off from the said cisterns under the supervision of the gauger at any time previous to the third day. All locks and seals required by law shall be provided by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, at the expense of the owner of the distillery or warehouse; and the keys shall be in charge of the collector or such gauger as he may designate.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend the section by striking out the words "or other packages" after "casks" in line twenty-four.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out in lines twenty-five, twenty-six, and twenty-seven the words "and shall be immediately inspected, gauged, proved, and the casks or packages marked as herein provided by law."

The amendment was agreed to.

Section sixteen, now seventeen, was read as follows:

And be it further enacted, That the door of the furnace of every still or boiler used in any distillery shall be so constructed that it may be securely fastened and locked. The fermenting tubs shall be so placed as to be easily accessible to any revenue officer, and each tub shall have distinctly painted thereon in oil colors its cubic contents in gallons, and the number of the tub. There shall be a clear space of not less than one foot around every wood still, and not less than two feet around every doubler and worm tank. The doubler, or doubler and worm tanks, shall be elevated not less than one foot from the floor; and every fixed pipe to be used by the distiller, except for the conveyance of water, or of spent mash or beer only, shall be so fixed and placed as to be capable of being examined by the officer for the whole of its length of course, and shall be painted, and kept painted, as follows, that is to say: Every pipe for the conveyance of mash or beer shall be painted of a red color; every pipe for the conveyance of low wines back into the still or doubler shall be painted blue; every pipe for the conveyance of spirits shall be painted black; and every pipe for the conveyance of water shall be painted white. If any fixed pipe shall be used by any distiller which shall not be painted or kept painted as herein directed, or which shall be painted otherwise than as herein directed, he shall forfeit the sum of $1,000. No assessor shall approve the bond of any distiller until all the requirements of the law and all regulations made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in relation to distilleries, in pursuance thereof, shall have been complied with. Any assessor who shall violate the provisions of this section shall forfeit and pay $2,000, and shall be dismissed from office.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this section by striking out the words "or doubler," after "doubler," in line ten.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next section, seventeen, now eighteen, was read, as follows:

SEC. 18. And be it further enacted, That every person engaged in distilling or rectifying spirits, and every wholesale liquor dealer and compounder of liquors, and every keeper of a warehouse for distilled spirits, shall place and keep conspicuously on the outside of his distillery, rectifying establishment, place of business, or warehouse, a sign, in plain and legible letters, not less than three inches in length, painted in oil colors or gilded, and of a proper and proportionate width, the name or firm of the distiller, rectifier, wholesale dealer, compounder, or warehouse-keeper, with the words: "Registered distillery," "rectifier of spirits," "wholesale liquor dealer," "compounder of liquors," or "warehouse for distilled spirits," as the case may be; and no fence or wall of a height greater than five feet shall be erected or maintained around the premises of any distillery, nor shall the gate or door of such fence or wall be kept locked or otherwise fastened, so as to prevent easy and immediate access to said distillery; and every distillery shall furnish the assessor of the district with as many keys of the doors of the distillery as may be required by the assessor, from time to time, for any revenue officer or other person who may be authorized to make survey or inspections of the premises or of the contents thereof; and said distillery shall be kept always accessible to any officer or other person having any such key. Any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this section by negligence or refusal, or otherwise, shall pay a penalty of $500. Any person not having paid the special tax, as required by law, who shall put up the sign required by this section, or any sign indicating that he may lawfully carry on the business of a distiller, rectifier, wholesale liquor dealer, keeper of a warehouse for distilled spirits, or compounder of liquors, shall forfeit and pay $1,000, and, on conviction, shall be imprisoned not less than one month nor more than six months; and any person who shall work in any distillery, rectifying establishment, warehouse, wholesale liquor store, or in the store of any compounder of liquors, on which no sign shall be placed and kept as hereinbefore provided, and any person who shall knowingly carry or convey any distilled spirits to or from any such distillery, rectifying establishment, warehouse, or store, or who shall knowingly carry and deliver any grain, molasses, or other raw material to any distillery on which such sign shall not be placed and kept, shall forfeit all his horses, carts, drays, wagons, or other vehicle or animal used in carrying or conveying such property aforesaid, and, on conviction, shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, and imprisoned not less than one month nor more than six months.

The Committee on Finance proposed several amendments to this section. The first was after the words "compounder of liquors," in line three, to strike out "and every keeper of a warehouse for distilled spirits."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line six to insert "or" before the words "place of business," and after "business" to strike out "or warehouse."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert the word "or" before "compounder," in line ten, and after "compounder" to strike out "or warehouse keeper."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was before "compounder of liquors," in line twelve, to insert "or," and after "liquors" to strike out "or warehouse for distilled spirits."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines fifteen and sixteen to strike out the words "nor shall the gate or door of such fence or wall be kept locked or otherwise fastened."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line eighteen to strike out "distillery" and insert "distiller."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line nineteen before the word "doors" to insert "gates and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was before the word "provisions," in line twenty-six, to insert the word "foregoing."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the words "liquor dealers," in line thirty-one, to strike out "keeper of a warehouse for distilled spirits;" and in line thirty-six to strike out "warehouse."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was before the word "carry," in line forty-one, to insert "knowingly receive at or."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line forty-seven, to strike out "and" before "imprisoned," and insert "or be."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next section was read as follows:

SEC. 18. And be it further enacted, That every person making or distilling spirits, or owning any still, boiler, or other vessel used for the purpose of distilling spirits, or having such still, boiler, or other vessel so used under his superintendence, either as agent or owner, or using any such still, boiler, or other vessel, shall, from day to day, make, or cause to be made, true and exact entry in a book or books, to be kept by him, in such form as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, of the kind of materials, and the quantity in pounds, bushels, or gallons purchased by him for the production of spirits, from whom and when purchased, and by what conveyance delivered at said distillery, together with the amount paid therefor, the kind and quantity of fuel purchased for use in the distillery, and from whom purchased, the amount paid for ice or water for use in the distillery, the repairs placed on said distillery or distilling apparatus, the cost thereof, and by whom and when made; and in another book shall make like entry of the name and residence of each person employed in or about the distillery, and in what capacity employed, the quantity of grain or other material used for the production of spirits, the time of day when any yeast or other composition is put into any mash or beer for the purpose of exciting fermentation, the quantity of mash in each tub, designating the same by the number of the tub, the number of dry inches, that is to say, the number of inches between the top of each tub and the surface of the mash or beer therein at the time of yeasting, the gravity and temperature of the beer at the time of yeasting, and on every day thereafter its gravity and temperature at the hour of twelve meridian; also the time when any fermenting tub is emptied of ripe mash or beer, the number of gallons of spirits distilled, the number of gallons placed in warehouse, and the proof thereof, and the number of gallons sold or removed, with the proof thereof, and the name, place of business, and residence of the person to whom sold; and every fermenting tub shall be emptied at the end of the fermenting period, and shall remain empty for a period of twenty-four hours. On the 1st, 11th, and 22d days of each month, or within five days thereafter, respectively, every distillery shall render to the assistant assessor an account in duplicate, taken from his books, stating the quantity and kind of materials used for the production of spirits each day, and the number of wine gallons and of proof gallons of spirits produced and placed in warehouse. And the distiller or the principal manager of the distillery shall make and subscribe the following oath, to be attached to said return:

"I, ———, distiller, (or principal manager as the case may be,) of the distillery at ———, do solemnly swear that, since the date of the last return of the business of said distillery, dated ——— day of ——— to ——— day of ———, both inclusive, there was produced in said distillery, and withdrawn and placed in warehouse, the number of wine gallons and proof gallons of spirits, and there were actually mashed and used in said distillery, and consumed in the distilling of spirits therein, the several quantities of grain, sugar, molasses, and other materials, respectively, hereinbefore specified, and no more."

These said books shall always be kept at the distillery, and be always open to the inspection of any revenue officer, and, when filled up, shall be preserved by the distiller for a period not less than two years thereafter, and whenever required shall be produced for the inspection of any revenue officer. If any false entry shall be made in either of said books, or any entry required to be made therein shall be omitted therefrom, for every such false entry made, or omission, the distiller shall forfeit and pay a penalty of $1,000. And if any such false entry shall be made, or any entry shall be omitted therefrom with intent to defraud or to conceal from the revenue officers any fact or particular required to be stated and entered in either of said books, or to mislead in reference thereto, or if any distiller as aforesaid shall omit or refuse to provide either of said books, or shall cancel, obliterate, or destroy any part of either of such books, or any entry therein, with intent to defraud, or either of them, the same to be done, or such books, or either of them, be not produced when required by any revenue officer, the distillery, distilling apparatus, and the lot or tract of land on which it stands, and all personal property of every kind and description on said premises, or used in the business there carried on, shall be forfeited to the United States. And any person making such false entry or omitting to make any entry hereinbefore required to be made, with the intent aforesaid, or who shall cause or procure the same to be done, or who shall fraudulently cancel, obliterate, or destroy any part of said books, or any entry therein, or who shall willfully fail to produce such books or either of them, on conviction, shall be fined not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than six months nor more than two years.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this section by striking out after the word "and," in line seventeen, the words "in another book shall make like entry," and after the word "employed," in line twenty, to insert "and in another book shall make like entry."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line thirty, before the word "gravity," to insert "quantity."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line forty, to strike out "distillery," and insert "distiller."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line sixty, after the word "inspection," to insert "and examination."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line eighty, to strike out the word "or" between "premises" and "used."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next section was read as follows:

SEC. [19] 20. And be it further enacted, That on the receipt of the distiller's first return in each month the assessor shall proceed to inquire and determine whether said distiller has accounted in his returns for the preceding month for all the spirits produced by him; and to determine the quantity of spirits thus to be accounted for, the whole quantity of spirits produced from the materials used shall be ascertained; and forty-five gallons of mash or beer brewed or fermented from grain shall represent not less than one bushel of grain, and seven gallons of mash or beer brewed or fermented from molasses shall represent not less than one gallon of molasses. In case the return of the distiller shall have been less than the quantity thus ascertained, the distiller shall be assessed for such deficiency at the rate of fifty cents for every proof gallon, and the collector shall proceed to collect the same as in cases of other assessments for deficiencies; but in no case shall the quantity of spirits returned by the distiller, together with the quantity so assessed, be for a less quantity of spirits than eighty per cent. of the producing capacity of the distillery.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend the section by striking out the words "proceed to" before "inquire" in line three.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the word "ascertained," in line seven, to insert "by reckoning not less than twelve quarts of proof-spirits for every bushel of grain used, nor less than seven tenths of one proof gallon of spirits for every gallon of molasses used."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the word "gallon," in line eighteen, to insert "and four dollars for every cask of forty proof gallons."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the word "distillery," at the end of the section to insert "as estimated and determined by the provisions of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Section twenty of the House bill, now become section twenty-one, was read, as follows:

SEC. [20] 21. And be it further enacted, That the storekeeper assigned to any distillery warehouse shall also have charge of the distillery connected therewith; and, in addition to the duties required of him as a storekeeper in charge of a warehouse, shall keep in a book to be provided for that purpose, and in the manner to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, a daily account of all the meal and vegetable productions or other substances brought into said distillery, or on said premises, to be used for the purpose of producing spirits, from whom purchased, and when delivered at said distillery, the kind and quantity of all fuel used, and from whom purchased, and of all repairs made on said distillery, and by whom and when made, the names and places of residence of all persons employed in or about the business of the distillery, of the materials put into the mash-tub or otherwise used for the production of spirits, the time when any fermenting tub is emptied of ripe mash or beer, recording the same by the number painted on said tub, and of all spirits drawn off from the receiving cistern, and the time when the same were drawn off. Any distiller or person employed in any distillery who shall use, cause, or permit to be used any material for the purpose of making mash, wort, or beer, or for the production of spirits, or shall remove any spirits in the absence of the storekeeper, or person designated to act as said storekeeper, shall forfeit and pay double the amount of taxes on the spirits so produced, distilled, or removed, and, in addition thereto, be liable to a penalty of $1,000.

It was proposed to amend this section by striking out the words "the business of" before "the distillery," in line fifteen.

The amendment was agreed to.

Section twenty-one of the House bill, now section twenty-two, was next read, as follows:

SEC. [21] 22. And be it further enacted, That every distiller, at the hour of twelve meridian, on the third day after that on which his bond shall have been approved by the assessor, shall be deemed to have commenced and thereafter to be continuously engaged in the production of distilled spirits in his distillery, except in the intervals when he shall have suspended work, as hereinafter authorized or provided. Any distiller desiring to suspend work in his distillery may give notice in writing to the assistant assessor of his division, stating when he will stop work; and on the day mentioned in said notice said assistant assessor shall, at the expense of the distiller, proceed to fasten securely the door of every furnace of every still or boiler in said distillery, by locks and otherwise, and shall adopt such other means as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall prescribe to prevent the lighting of any fire in such furnace or under such stills or boilers. The locks and seals, and other materials required for such purpose shall be furnished to the assessor of the district by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to be duly accounted for by said assessor. Such notice by any distiller, and the action taken by the assistant assessor in pursuance thereof, shall be immediately reported to the assessor of the district, and by him transmitted to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. No distiller, after having given such notice, shall, after the time stated therein, carry on the business of a distiller on said premises until he shall have given another notice in writing to said assessor, stating the time when he will resume work; and at the time so stated for resuming work the assistant assessor shall attend at the distillery to remove said locks and other fastenings; and thereupon, and not before, work may be resumed in said distillery, which fact shall be immediately reported to the assessor of the district, and by him transmitted to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Any distiller, after the time fixed in said notice declaring his intention to stop work, who shall carry on the business of a distiller on said premises, or shall have mash, wort, or beer in his distillery, or on any premises connected therewith, or who shall have in his possession or under his control any mash, wort, or beer, with intent to distill the same on said premises, shall incur the forfeitures, and be subject to the same punishment as provided for persons who carry on the business of a distiller without having paid the special tax.

It was proposed to amend this section by striking out "stop" and insert "suspend" before "work" in line ten and in line thirty-five respectively.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 23. And be it further enacted, That all distilled spirits shall be drawn from the receiving cisterns into casks or packages, each of not less capacity than twenty gallons, wine measure, and shall be immediately removed into the distillery warehouse, and shall thereupon be gauged and proved by an internal revenue gauger, who shall mark, by cutting on the cask or package containing such spirits, in a manner to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the quantity in wine gallons, and in proof gallons, of the contents of such cask or package, and shall, in presence of the storekeeper of the warehouse, place upon the head of the cask or package an engraved stamp, which shall be signed by the collector of the district and the storekeeper and gauger, and shall have written thereon the number of proof gallons contained therein, the name of the distiller, the date of the receipt in the warehouse, and the serial number of each cask or package, in progressive order, as the same shall be received from the distillery. Such serial number for every distillery shall begin with number one (No. 1) with the first cask or package deposited therein after this act takes effect, and no two or more casks or packages warehoused at the same distillery shall be marked with the same number. The said stamp shall be as follows:

[Distillery warehouse stamp No. —.]
Issued by —, Collector, — District, State of —, Distillery warehouse of —, 15—. Cask No. —, contents — gallons proof-spirit.

United States Storekeeper.

Attest: —,
United States Gauger.

And the distiller or owner of all spirits so removed to the distillery warehouse shall on the 1st, 11th, and 21st days of each month, or within five days thereafter, enter the same for deposit in such warehouse, under such rules and regulations not inconsistent herewith, as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe; and said entry shall be in triplicate and shall contain the name of the person making the entry, the designation of the warehouse in which the deposit is made, and the date thereof, and shall be in form as follows:

[Entry for deposit in distillery warehouse.]
Entry of distilled spirits deposited by —, in distillery warehouse —, in the — district, State of —, on the — day of —, A. D. —.

And the entry shall specify the kind of spirits, the whole number of casks or packages, the marks and serial numbers thereon, the number of gauge or wine gallons and of proof gallons, and the amount of the tax on the spirits contained in them; all of which shall be verified by the oath or affirmation of the distiller or owner of the same attached to the entry; and the said distiller or owner shall give his bond in duplicate, with one or more sureties satisfactory to the collector of the district, conditioned that the principal named in said bond will pay the tax on the spirits, as specified in the entry, or cause the same to be paid before removal from said distillery warehouse, and within one year from the date of said bond, unless the same shall be removed by him from said warehouse according to the provisions of this act; and the penal sum of such bond shall not be less than double the amount of the tax on such distilled spirits. One of said entries shall be retained in the office of the collector of the district, one sent to the storekeeper in charge of the warehouse, to be retained and filed in the warehouse, and one sent with the duplicate of the bond to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to be filed in his office.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend the section by striking out the words "or package" after "cask," and "or packages" after "casks," wherever they occur.

The amendment was agreed to.

It was also proposed in lines fifty-nine and sixty to strike out the words "unless the same shall be removed by him from said warehouse according to the provisions of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert at this point as section twenty-four, the following:

SEC. 24. And be it further enacted, That any distilled spirits may, on payment of the tax thereon, be withdrawn from warehouse on application to the collector of the district in charge of such warehouse, on making a withdrawal entry, in duplicate, and in form as follows:

[Entry for withdrawal of distilled spirits from warehouse. Tax paid.]

Entry of distilled spirits to be withdrawn, on payment of the tax, from — warehouse by —, deposited on the — day of —, A. D. —, by —, in said warehouse.

And the entry shall specify the whole number of casks or packages, with the marks and serial numbers thereon, the number of gauge or wine gallons, and of proof gallons, and the amount of the tax on the distilled spirits contained in them; all of which shall be verified by the oath or affirmation of the person making such entry; and on payment of the tax the collector shall issue his order to the storekeeper in charge of the warehouse for the delivery. One of said entries shall be filed in the office of the collector, and the other transmitted by him to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

The amendment was agreed to.

Section twenty-three of the House bill, now section twenty-five, was next read as follows:

SEC. 25. And be it further enacted, That whenever an order is received from the collector for the removal from any distillery warehouse of any cask or package of distilled spirits, on which tax has been paid, it shall be the duty of the gauger by whom the same is gauged and inspected, in presence of the storekeeper, before such cask or package has left the warehouse, to place upon the head thereof, in such manner as to cover no portion of any brand or mark prescribed by law already placed thereon, a stamp, on which shall be engraved the number of proof gallons contained in said cask or package, on which the tax has been paid, and which shall be signed by the collector of the district, storekeeper, and gauger, and which shall state the serial number of the cask or package, the name of the person by whom the tax was paid, and the person to whom and the place where it is to be delivered; which stamp shall be as follows:

Received —, 18—, from —, tax on — gallons proof-spirit, cask No. —, warehouse at —, for delivery to — at —.
Attest: Collector — District, State of —.
United States Storekeeper.
United States Gauger.

Whenever any cask or package of rectified spirits shall be filled for shipment, sale, or delivery, on the premises of any rectifier, who shall have paid the special tax required by law, it shall be the duty of a United States gauger to gauge and inspect the same and place thereon an engraved stamp, which shall be signed by the collector of the district and the said gauger, and state the date when affixed, which stamp shall be as follows:

[Stamp for rectified spirits No. —.]
Issued by —, collector — district, State of —, rectifier of spirits in the — district, State of —, 13—.

U. S. Gauger.
Whenever any cask or package of distilled spirits shall be filled for shipment, sale, or delivery, on the premises of any wholesale liquor dealer or com-pounder, it shall be the duty of a United States gauger to gauge and inspect the same, and place thereon an engraved stamp, signed by the collector of the district and the said gauger, stating the name of the compounder or dealer and the date when affixed, which stamp shall be as follows:

[Wholesale liquor dealer's stamp No. —.]
Issued by —, collector —, District, State of —,
—, wholesale liquor dealer, of —, —, district, State of —, —, 18—.

— U. S. Gauger.
— District, State of —.

All blanks in any of the above forms shall be duly filled in accordance with the facts in each case. And the stamps above designated shall be affixed so as to fasten the same securely to the cask or package and duly canceled, and shall then be immediately covered with a coating of transparent varnish or other substance, so as to protect them from removal or damage by exposure; and such affixing, cancellation, and covering shall be done in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall by regulation prescribe; but such stamps shall in every case be affixed to a smooth surface of the cask or other package, which surface shall not have been previously painted or covered with any substance.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend the section by striking out the words "or package" after "cask" wherever those words occur.

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee also proposed to amend the section by inserting after line twenty-seven the following:

And at the time of affixing the tax-paid stamp or stamps, the gauger shall, in the presence of the storekeeper, cut or burn upon each cask the name of the distiller, the district, the date of the payment of the tax, the number of proof gallons, and the number of the stamp, which burning shall be erased when such cask is emptied, by cutting or burning a canceling line across such marks or brands, which branding and cancellation shall be done under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move to amend the amendment by inserting "cutting or" before "burning." It now provides for cutting or burning, but provides for erasing only one.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The twenty-fourth section, now twenty-six, was read, as follows:

SEC. 26. And be it further enacted, That all stamps required for distilled spirits shall be engraved in their several kinds in book form, and shall be issued by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to any collector, upon his requisition, in such numbers as may be necessary in the several districts. Each stamp shall have an engraved stub attached thereto with a number thereon corresponding with an engraved number on the stamp, and the stub shall not be removed from the book. And there shall be entered on the corresponding stub such memoranda of the contents of every stamp as shall be necessary to preserve a perfect record of the use of such stamp when detached.

Section [twenty-five] twenty-seven was next read, as follows:

SEC. 27. And be it further enacted, That every stamp for the payment of tax on distilled spirits shall have engraved thereon words and figures representing a decimal number of gallons, and a similar number of gallons shall be engraved on the stub corresponding to such stamp, and between the stamp and the stub and connecting them shall be engraved nine coupons, which, beginning next to the stamp, shall indicate in succession the several numbers of gallons between the number named in the stamp and the decimal number next above. And whenever any collector shall receive the tax on the distilled spirits contained in any cask or package, he shall detach from the book a stamp representing the denominate quantity nearest to the quantity of proof-spirits in such cask or package, as shown by the gauger's return, with such number of the coupons attached thereto as shall be necessary to make up the whole number of proof gallons in said cask or package, and any quantity in addition to the number of full gallons less than one gallon shall be regarded as a full gallon; and all unused coupons shall remain attached to the marginal stub; and no coupon shall have any value or significance whatever when detached from the stamp and stub. And the tax-paid stamps with the coupons may denote such number of gallons, not less than twenty, as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may deem advisable.

It was proposed to amend the section by striking out the words "or package" after "cask" wherever they occurred.

The amendment was agreed to.

Section [twenty-six] twenty-eight was next read, as follows:

SEC. [26] 28. And be it further enacted, That the books of tax-paid stamps issued to any collector shall be charged to his account at the full value of the tax on the number of gallons represented on the stamps and coupons contained in said books; and every collector shall make a monthly return to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue of all tax-paid stamps issued by him to be affixed to any cask or package containing distilled spirits on which the tax has been paid, and account for the amount of the tax collected; and when the said collector shall return to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue any book of marginal stubs, which it shall be his duty to do as soon as all the stamps contained in the book, when issued to him from the office of internal revenue, have been used, and shall have accounted for the tax on the number of gallons represented on the stamps and coupons that were contained in said book, he shall be allowed a commission of half of one per cent. on the amount, in addition to any other commission by law allowed, on all money accounted for by him for tax collected on distilled spirits, which shall be equally divided between the collector receiving the tax and the collector of the district in which the distilled spirits were produced. All stamps relating to distilled spirits other than the tax-paid stamps shall be charged to collectors as representing the value of twenty-five cents for each stamp; and the books containing such stamps may be intrusted by any collector to the gauger of the district, who shall make a daily report to the assessor and collector of all such stamps used by him and for whom used, and from these reports the assessor of the district shall on his monthly list assess the person for whom they were used, and the collector shall thereupon collect the amount due for such stamps at the rate of twenty-five cents for each stamp issued during the month; and when all the stamps contained in any such book shall have been issued the gauger of the district shall return the book to the collector with all the marginal stubs therein.

It was proposed to amend this section by inserting after the word "amount," in line seventeen, the words "of the tax on spirits distilled after the passage of this act."

Mr. SHERMAN. I merely wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this amendment changes the commission allowed to collectors and assessors.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line twenty-one, to strike out "collector" and insert "assessor."

The amendment was agreed to.

Section [twenty-seven] twenty-nine was next read, as follows:

SEC. [27] 29. And be it further enacted, That any revenue officer who shall affix or cancel, or cause or permit to be affixed or canceled, any stamp relating to distilled spirits required or provided for in this act in any other manner or in any other place, or who shall issue the same to any other person than as provided by law or regulation made in pursuance thereof, or who shall knowingly affix or permit to be affixed any such stamp to any cask or package of spirits of which the whole or any part has been distilled, rectified, compounded, removed, or sold, in violation of law, or which has in any manner escaped payment of tax due thereon, shall, for every such offense, be fined not less than $500 nor more than $3,000, and be imprisoned for not less than six months nor more than three years.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. POMEROY.) The words "or package" will be stricken out after "casks," in line eight, to conform to previous amendments.

The following sections were read, to which no amendment was reported:

SEC. [28] 30. And be it further enacted, That if any distiller shall desire to reduce the producing capacity of his distillery, he shall give notice of such intention in writing to said assessor, stating the quantity of spirits which he desires thereafter to manufacture or produce every twenty-four hours, and thereupon said assessor shall proceed, at the expense of the distiller, to reduce and limit the producing capacity of the distillery to the quantity stated in said notice, by placing upon a sufficient number of the fermenting tubs close-fitting covers, which shall be securely fastened by nails, seals, and otherwise, and in such manner as to prevent the use of such tubs without removing said covers or breaking said seals, and shall adopt such other precautions as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to reduce the capacity of said distillery. And any person who shall break, injure, or in any manner tamper with any lock, seal, or other fastening applied to any furnace, still, or fermenting-tub, or other vessel, in pursuance of the provisions of this act, or who shall open or attempt to open any door, tub, or other vessel which shall have been locked or sealed, or otherwise closed or fastened as herein provided, or who shall use any furnace, still, or fermenting tub, or other vessel which shall be so locked, sealed or fastened, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction, shall be fined not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned for not less than one year, nor more than three years.

SEC. [29] 31. And be it further enacted, That whenever any officer shall require that the water contained in any worm-tub in a distillery, at any time when the still shall not be at work, shall be drawn off, and the tub and worm cleansed, the watershall forthwith be drawn off and the tub and worm cleansed by the distiller or his workmen accordingly; and the water shall be kept and continued out of such worm-tub for the space of two hours, or until the officer has finished his examination thereof; and for any refusal or neglect to comply with the requisition of the officer in this behalf, or the provision in this clause contained, the distiller shall forfeit the sum of $1,000, and it shall be lawful for the officer to draw off such water, or any portion of it, and to keep the same drawn off for so long a time as he shall think necessary.

SEC. [30] 32. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for any revenue officer, at all times, as well by night as by day, to enter into any distillery or building or place used for the business of distilling, or in connection therewith, for storage or other purposes, and to examine, gauge, measure, and take an account of every still or other vessel or utensil of any kind, and of all low wines, and of the quality and gravity of all mash, wort, or beer, and of all yeast, or other compositions for exciting or producing fermentation in any mash or beer, and of all spirits and of all materials for making or distilling spirits, which shall be in any such distillery or premises, or in the possession of the distiller; and if any revenue officer or any person called by him to his aid, shall be hindered, obstructed, or prevented by any distiller, or by any workman or other person acting for such distiller or in his employ, from entering into any such distillery or building or place as aforesaid; or if any such officer shall be by the distiller or his workman or any person in his employ, prevented or hindered from or opposed or obstructed or molested in the performance of his duty under this act, in any respect, the distiller shall forfeit the sum of $1,000. If any officer, having demanded admittance into a distillery or premises of a distillery, and having declared his name and office, shall not be admitted into any such distillery or premises by the distiller or other person having charge of the same, it shall be lawful for such officer, at all times, as well by night as by day, to break open by force any of the doors or windows, or to break through any of the walls of such distillery or premises necessary to be broken open or through, to enable him to enter the said distillery or premises; and the distiller shall forfeit the sum of $1,000.

SEC. [31] 33. And be it further enacted, That, on the demand of any revenue officer, every distiller, rectifier, or compounder of spirits shall furnish strong, safe, and convenient ladders of sufficient length to enable the officer to examine and gauge any vessel or utensil in such distillery or premises; and shall, at all times when required, supply all assistance, lights, ladders, tools, staging, or other things necessary for inspecting the premises, stock, tools, and apparatus belonging to such person, and shall open all doors, and open for examination all boxes, packages, and all casks, barrels, and other vessels not under the control of a revenue officer in charge, under a penalty of $500 for every refusal or neglect so to do.

SEC. [32] 34. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for any revenue officer, and any person acting in his aid, to break up the ground on any part of the distillery or premises of a distiller, rectifier, or compounder of liquors, or any ground adjoining or near to such distillery or premises, or any wall or partition thereof, or belonging thereto, or other place, to search for any pipe, cock, private conveyance, or utensil; and upon finding any such pipe or conveyance leading therefrom or thereto, he may break up any ground, house, wall, or other place through or into which such pipe or other conveyance shall lead, and break or cut away such pipe or other conveyance, and turn any cock, or examine whether such pipe or other conveyance may convey or conceal any mash, wort, or beer, or other liquor which may be used for distillation of low wines or spirits from the sight or view of the officer, so as to prevent or hinder him from taking a true account thereof.

SEC. [33] 35. And be it further enacted, That no malt, corn, grain, or other material shall be mashed, nor any wash, wort, or beer brewed or made, nor any still used by a distiller at any time between the hour of eleven in the afternoon of any Saturday and the hour of one in the forenoon of the next succeeding Monday; and any person who shall violate the provisions of this section shall be liable to a penalty of $1,000.

Section [thirty-four] thirty-six was next read, as follows:

SEC. [34] 36. And be it further enacted, That all distilled spirits found elsewhere than in a distillery or distillery warehouse, not having been removed therefrom according to law, shall be forfeited to the United States. And in case of the seizure of any distilled spirits found elsewhere than in a distillery, distillery warehouse, or other warehouse for distilled spirits authorized by law, or in the store or place of business of a rectifier, or of a wholesale liquor dealer, or of a compounder of liquors, or in transit from any one of said places; and in case of the seizure of any distilled spirits found in any one of the places aforesaid, or in transit therefrom, which shall not have been received into or sent out therefrom in conformity to law, or in regard to which any of the entries required by law to be made in the books of the owner of such spirits or of the storekeeper, wholesale dealer, rectifier, or compounder, have not been made at the time or in the manner required, or in respect to which the owner or person having possession, control, or charge of said spirits shall have omitted to do any act required to be done, or shall have done or committed any act prohibited in regard to said spirits, the burden of proof shall be upon the claimant of said spirits to show that no fraud has been committed, and that all the requirements of the law in relation to the payment of the tax have been complied with. And every person who shall remove, or shall aid or abet in the removal of any distilled spirits from a distillery to a place other than the distillery warehouse as provided by law, or who shall conceal or aid in the concealment of any spirits so removed, or who shall remove or shall aid or abet in the removal of any distilled spirits from any distillery warehouse, or other warehouse for distilled spirits authorized by law, in any manner other than as is provided by law, or who shall conceal, or aid in the concealment of any spirits so removed, shall be liable to a penalty of double the tax imposed on such distilled spirits so removed or concealed, and shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $200 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than three months nor more than three years.

The amendment proposed to this section was in line twenty-six, to strike out the words "from a distillery," and insert "on which the tax has not been paid."

The amendment was agreed to.

The following sections were read, to which no amendment was proposed:

SEC. [35] 37. And be it further enacted, That no person shall remove any distilled spirits at any other time than after sun-rising and before sun-setting, in any cask or package containing more than ten gallons from any premises or building in which the same may have been distilled, redistilled, rectified, compounded, manufactured, or stored, and every person who shall violate this provision shall be liable to a penalty of $100 for each cask, barrel, or package of spirits so removed; and said spirits, together with any vessel containing the same, and any horse, cart, boat, or other conveyance used in the removal thereof, shall be forfeited to the United States.

SEC. [36] 38. And be it further enacted, That any person who shall add or cause to be added any ingredient or substance to any distilled spirits before the tax imposed by law shall have been paid thereon, for the purpose of creating a fictitious proof, shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $100 nor more than $1,000 for each cask or package so adulterated, and imprisoned not less than three months nor more than two years, and every such cask or package, with its contents, shall be forfeited to the United States.

SEC. [37] 39. And be it further enacted, That any person who shall evade or attempt to evade the payment of the tax on any distilled spirits, in any manner whatever, shall forfeit and pay double the amount of the tax so evaded or attempted to be evaded; and any person who shall change or alter any stamp, mark, or brand on any cask or package containing distilled spirits, or who shall put into any cask or package spirits of greater strength than is indicated by the inspection mark thereon, or who shall fraudulently use any cask or package having any inspection mark or stamp thereon for the purpose of selling other spirits or spirits of quantity or quality different from the spirits previously inspected therein, shall forfeit and pay the sum of $200 for every cask or package on which the stamp or mark is so changed or altered or which is so fraudulently used, and, on conviction, shall be fined for each such offense not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, and imprisoned not less than one month nor more than one year.

SEC. [38] 40. And be it further enacted, That any person who shall knowingly use any false weights or measures in ascertaining, weighing, or measuring the quantities of grain, meal, or vegetable materials, molasses, beer, or other substances to be used for distillation, or who shall destroy, break, injure, or tamper with any lock or seal which may be placed on any cistern-room or building, by the duly authorized officers of the revenue, or shall open said lock or seal, or the door to such cistern-room or building, or shall in any manner gain access to the contents therein in the absence of the proper officer, shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than one year nor more than three years; and any person who shall use any molasses, beer, or other substance, whether fermented on the premises or elsewhere, for the purpose of producing spirits, before an account for the same shall have been registered in the proper record book provided for that purpose, shall forfeit and pay the sum of $1,000 for each and every offense so committed.

SEC. [39] 41. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for any internal revenue officer to seize and detain any cask or package containing, or supposed to contain, distilled spirits when such officer has reason to believe the tax imposed by law upon the same has not been paid, or that the same is being removed in violation of law; and every such cask or package may be held by such officer at a safe place until it shall be determined whether the property so seized is liable by law to be proceeded against for forfeiture; but such summary detention shall not continue in any case longer than forty-eight hours without process of law or intervention of the officer to whom such seizure is to be reported.

SEC. [40] 42. And be it further enacted, That no distillery seized for any violation of law shall be released to the claimant or any intervening party before judgment, except in case of a distillery for which the special tax has been paid, and which has a registered producing capacity of one hundred and fifty proof gallons or more per day, on showing by sufficient affidavits that there are hogs or other live stock, not less than fifty head in number, depending for their feed on the products of said distillery which would suffer injury if the business of such distillery is stopped; such distillery in that case may be released to the claimant, or any other intervening party, at the discretion of the court, on a bond to be given and approved in open court with two or more sureties for the full appraised value of all the property seized, which value shall be ascertained by three competent appraisers to be designated and appointed by the court. In case of the seizure of and judgment of forfeiture against any distillery used or fit for use in the production of distilled spirits having a registered producing capacity of less than one hundred and fifty gallons per day, or of any distillery for the non-payment of the special tax, the still, stills, doubler, worm, worm-tub, and all mash-tubs and fermenting-tubs shall be so destroyed as to prevent the use of the same or any part thereof for the purpose of distilling; and the materials shall be sold as in case of other forfeited property.

SEC. [41] 43. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of every person who empties or draws off, or causes to be emptied or drawn off, any distilled spirits from a cask or package bearing any mark, brand, or stamp required by law, at the time of emptying such cask or package, to efface, and obliterate said mark, stamp, or brand. Any such cask or package from which said mark, brand, and stamp, is not so effaced and obliterated, as herein required, shall be forfeited to the United States, and may be seized by any officer of internal revenue wherever found. Any railroad company or other transportation company, or person, who shall receive or transport, or have in possession with intent to transport, or with intent to cause or procure to be transported, any such empty cask or package, or any part thereof, having thereon any brand, mark, or stamp, required by law to be placed on any cask or package containing distilled spirits, shall forfeit $300 for each such cask or package, or any part thereof, so received or transported, or had in possession with the intent aforesaid; and any boat, railroad car, cart, drag, wagon, or other vehicle, and all horses or other animals used in carrying or transporting the same, shall be forfeited to the United States. Any person who shall fail or neglect to efface and obliterate said mark, stamp, or brand, at the time of emptying such cask or package, or who shall receive any such cask or package, or any part thereof, with the intent aforesaid, or who shall transport the same, or knowingly aid or assist therein, or who shall remove any stamp provided by this act from any cask or package containing or which had contained distilled spirits, without defacing and destroying the same at the time of such removal, or who shall aid or assist therein, or who shall have in his possession any such stamp so removed, as aforesaid, or have in his possession any canceled stamp or any stamp which has been used, or which purports to have been used, upon any cask or package of distilled spirits, shall be deemed guilty of felony, and, on conviction, shall be fined not less than $500 nor more than $10,000, and imprisoned not less than one year nor more than five years.

SEC. [42] 44. And be it further enacted, That any person who shall carry on the business of a distiller, rectifier, compounder of liquors, wholesale liquor dealer, retail liquor dealer, or manufacturer of stills, without having paid the special tax, as required by law, or who shall carry on the business of a distiller or rectifier without having given bond as required by law, or who shall engage in or carry on the business of a distiller, with intent to defraud the United States of the tax on the spirits distilled by him, or any part thereof, shall, for every such offense, be fined not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than six months nor more than two years. And all distilled spirits or wines, and all stills or other apparatus fit, or intended to be used, for the distillation or rectification of spirits or for the compounding of liquors, owned by such person, wherever found, and all distilled spirits or wines and personal property found in the distillery or rectifying establishment, or in the store or other place of business of the compounder, or in any building, room, yard, or inclosure connected therewith, and used with or constituting a part of the premises; and all the right, title, and interest of such person in the lot or tract of land on which such distillery is situated, and all right, title, and interest therein of every person who knowingly has suffered or permitted the business of a distiller to be there carried on, or has connived at the same; and all personal property owned by or in possession of any person who has permitted or suffered any building, yard, or inclosure, or any part thereof, to be used for purposes of ingress or egress to or from such distillery, which shall be found in any such building, yard, or inclosure, and all the right, title, and interest of every person in any premises used for ingress or egress to or from such distillery, who has knowingly suffered or permitted such premises to be used for such ingress or egress, shall be forfeited to the United States.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 39) authorizing the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to adjust the accounts of Mark Howard;

A bill (H. R. No. 1326) for the relief of Anthony Bucher;

A bill (H. R. No. 1354) to provide for the issue of arms for the use of the militia;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 305) in respect to the construction of bridges over the Ohio river;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 325) relative to the pay of the chief clerk in the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 323) in relation to surveys and examinations of rivers and harbors; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 324) to extend the time for the completion of the West Wisconsin railroad.

The message also returned to the Senate in compliance with its request the bill (H. R. No. 554) making a grant of land to the State of Minnesota to aid in the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi river, with the amendment of the Senate thereto.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to some and disagreed to other amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 605) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th June, 1869, and agreed to other amendments of the Senate with amendments; asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the said bill, and appointed Mr. ELIHU B. WASHBURN of Illinois, Mr. COLUMBUS DELANO of Ohio, and Mr. CHARLES E. PHELPS, of Maryland, managers at the same on its part.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 505) to amend section five of an act entitled "An act concerning the registering and recording of ships or vessels," approved December 31, 1792;

A bill (H. R. No. 502) to incorporate the congregation of the First Presbyterian Church of Washington;

A bill (H. R. No. 503) for the relief of William B. Todd;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 96) for the relief of John Sedgwick, collector of internal revenue, third district of California; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 321) in relation to the erection of a bridge in Boston harbor.

EXECUTIVE BUSINESS.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to have a short executive session, and I suggest to the honorable Senator from Ohio whether it would not be as well to stop here.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection.

Mr. SUMNER. Before that question is put I should like to understand from the Senator from Ohio whether he proposes an evening session.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir. I desire to continue the reading of the tax bill, and the consideration of the amendments of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before putting the question on the motion of the Senator from Ohio, the Chair will present some House bills for reference.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills received from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

A bill (H. R. No. 39) authorizing the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to adjust the accounts of Mark Howard—to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (H. R. No. 1326) for the relief of Anthony Bucher—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (H. R. No. 1354) to provide for the issue of arms for the use of the militia—to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 305) in respect to the construction of bridges over the Ohio river—to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 323) in relation to surveys and examinations of rivers and harbors—to the Committee on Commerce.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 325) relative to the pay of the chief clerk in the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House—to the Committee on Appropriations.

WEST WISCONSIN RAILROAD.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 324) to extend the time for the completion of the West Wisconsin railroad was read twice by its title.

Mr. HOWE. The Senate passed a joint resolution, of which this is a copy, the other day upon the recommendation of the Committee on Public Lands, and I see no necessity for sending it to a committee. I hope it will be passed now.

Mr. POMEROY. I think we may as well pass it at once.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to have the Senator state whether it is precisely the same resolution that we passed the other day.

Mr. HOWE. I have read it, and I think it is precisely the same, word for word. I was told so by a member of the other House, and such is my recollection. I have not compared it, but I will compare it if the Senate will pass it now, and if I find it not to be the same I will move a reconsideration.

The joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole, reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 605) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1869, disagreed to by the House, and the amendments of the House of Representatives to other amendments of the Senate; and,

On motion by Mr. MORRILL, of Maine,

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and disagree to the amendments of the House to other amendments of the Senate thereto, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. MORRILL of Maine, Mr. HOWE, and Mr. HENDRICKS, managers on the part of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion of Mr. FESSENDEN, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business, and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and the Senate, at five o'clock p. m., took a recess till half past seven.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 453) increasing the pension of Nancy Weeks, widow of Francis Weeks, a soldier of the war of 1812.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 869) prescribing an oath of office to be taken by persons from whom legal disabilities shall have been removed, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 326) for the relief of Henry B. St. Marie, and a bill (H. R. No. 396) for the relief of Samuel Tibbetts; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

OATH OF OFFICE.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I ask the consent of the Senate to concur in the amendment of the House to the bill in regard to the oath of office. It merely leaves out the words "and no other." I think there will be no objection to concurring in it.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 869) prescribing an oath of office to be taken by persons from whom legal disabilities shall have been removed; and the House amendment was concurred in.

INTERNAL TAXES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1284) to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to amend the tax on banks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will be continued.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. [43] 45. And be it further enacted, That every rectifier, wholesale liquor dealer, and compounder of liquors, shall provide himself with a book, to be prepared and kept in such form as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and shall, on the same day on which he receives any spirits, and before he shall draw off any part thereof, or add water or anything thereto, or in any respect alter the same, enter in such book, and in the proper columns respectively prepared for the purpose, the date when, the name of the person or firm from whom and the place whence the spirits were received, when and by whom distilled, rectified, or compounded, and when and by whom inspected, and, if in the original package, the serial number of each package, the number of wine gallons and proof gallons, the kind of spirit, and the number and kind of adhesive stamps thereon; and every such rectifier, compounder, and wholesale dealer, shall, at the time of sending out of his stock or possession any spirits, and before the same shall be removed from his premises, enter, in like manner, in the said book, the day when, and the name and place of business of the person or firm to whom such spirits are to be sent, the quantity and the kind or quality of such spirits, and the strength thereof; and also the number of gallons and fractions of a gallon at proof; and if in the original packages in which they were received, he shall enter the name of the distiller, and the serial number of the package. And every such book shall be at all times kept in some public or open place on the premises of such rectifier, wholesale dealer, or compounder of liquors, respectively, for inspection; and any revenue officer may make an examination of such book and take an abstract therefrom; and every such book, when it has been filled up as aforesaid, shall be preserved by such rectifier, wholesale liquor dealer, or compounder of liquors, for a period not less than two years; and during such time it shall be produced by him to every revenue officer demanding the same; and if any rectifier, wholesale dealer, or compounder of liquors, shall refuse or neglect to provide such book or to make entries therein as aforesaid, or shall cancel, alter, obliterate, or destroy any part of such book, or any entry therein, or make any false entry therein, or hinder or obstruct any revenue officer from examining such book or making any entry therein, or taking any abstract therefrom; or if such book shall not be preserved or not produced by any rectifier, or wholesale dealer, or compounder, as hereinbefore directed, he shall pay a penalty of $100, and on conviction shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than three months nor more than three years.

The Committee on Finance reported two amendments to this section. The first was in line ten, after the word "received," to strike out the words "when and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line twenty-two, after the word "spirits" to strike out the words "and the strength thereof."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read the following sections, to which no amendment had been reported:

SEC. [44] 46. And be it further enacted, That it shall not be lawful for any rectifier of distilled spirits, compounder of liquors, liquor dealer, wholesale or retail liquor dealer to purchase or receive any distilled spirits in quantities greater than twenty gallons from any person other than an authorized rectifier of distilled spirits, compounder of liquors, distiller, or wholesale liquor dealer. Any person violating this section shall forfeit and pay $1,000. Provided, That this shall not be held to apply to judicial sales, nor to sales at public auction made by an auctioneer who has paid a special tax as such.

SEC. [45] 47. And be it further enacted, That all distilled spirits drawn from any cask or other package and placed in any other cask or package containing not less than ten gallons, and intended for sale, shall be again inspected and gauged, and the cask or package into which it is so transferred shall be marked or branded, and such marking or branding shall distinctly indicate the name of the gauger, the time and place of inspection, the proof of the spirits, the particular name of such spirits as known to the trade, together with the name and place of business of the dealer, rectifier, or compounder, as the case may be; and in all cases, except where such spirits have been rectified or compounded, the name also of the distiller, and the distillery where such spirits were produced, and the serial number of the original package; and the absence of such mark or brand shall be taken and held as sufficient cause and evidence for the forfeiture of such unmarked packages of spirits.

The Chief Clerk read section [forty-six] forty-eight, as follows:

SEC. [46] 48. And be it further enacted, That on all wines, liquors, or compounds known or denominated as wine, not made from grapes grown in the United States, but made in imitation of sparkling wine or champagne, and on all liquors not made from grapes, currants, rhubarb, or berries grown in the United States, but produced by being rectified or mixed with distilled spirits, or by the infusion of any matter in spirits, to be sold as wine or by any other name, there shall be levied and paid a tax of six dollars per dozen bottles, each bottle containing more than one pint and not more than one quart; or three dollars per dozen bottles, each bottle containing not more than one pint, and at the same rate for any quantity of such merchandise, however the same may be put up or whatever be the package. And any person manufacturing, compounding, or putting up such wines, shall, without previous demand, make return, under oath or affirmation, to the assistant assessor, on the 1st and 15th day of each and every month, or within five days thereafter, of the entire amount of such wine manufactured or put up during the first fifteen days of the month, and the residue of the month, respectively, except when the wines so manufactured or put up are used exclusively by the family of the person manufacturing the same; and the tax herein imposed shall be payable at the time such return is made. And in case such manufacturer shall neglect or refuse to make such return within the time specified, the assessor shall proceed to ascertain the amount of tax due as provided in other cases of a refusal or neglect to make returns, and shall assess the tax, and add a penalty of fifty per cent. to the amount; which said tax, and also said penalty shall be collected in the manner provided for the collection of tax on monthly and other lists. Any person who shall fraudulently evade or attempt to evade the payment of the tax herein imposed shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $500, nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than six months nor more than two years.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to this section, in line two, after the word "wine," to insert "and made in imitation of sparkling wine or champagne, but;" and in line four, after the word "United States," to strike out the words, "but made in imitation of sparkling wine or champagne."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read section [forty-seven] forty-nine, as follows:

SEC. [47] 49. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury, on the recommendation of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, shall appoint one officer for each United States judicial district, to be called a supervisor of internal revenue on distilled spirits and tobacco, whose duty it shall be to reside in such district, and keep his office at some convenient place therein to be designated by the Commissioner, and who shall receive, in compensation for his services, such salary as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may deem just and reasonable, not exceeding $2,500 per annum, and shall be paid his necessary traveling expenses when absent from his office on official business. It shall be the duty of every supervisor of internal revenue on distilled spirits and tobacco, under the direction of the Commissioner, to see that all laws and regulations relating to the collection of internal taxes upon distilled spirits and tobacco are faithfully executed and complied with; to aid in the prevention, detection, and punishment of any frauds in relation thereto, and to examine into the efficiency and conduct of all officers of internal revenue within his district; and for such purposes he shall have power to examine all persons, books, papers, accounts, and premises, and to administer oaths and to summon any person to produce books and papers, or to appear and testify under oath before him, and to compel a compliance with such summons in the same manner as assessors may do. It shall be the duty of every supervisor of internal revenue as aforesaid to report in writing to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue any neglect of duty, incompetency, delinquency, or malfeasance in office of any internal revenue officer within his district of which he may obtain knowledge, with a statement of all the facts in each case, and any evidence sustaining the same; and he shall have power to transfer any inspector, gauger, or storekeeper from one distillery or other place of duty to another, or from one collection district to another, within his district, and may, by notice in writing, suspend from duty any such inspector, gauger, or storekeeper, and in case of suspension shall immediately notify the collector of the proper district and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and within three days thereafter make report of his action, and his reasons therefor, in writing, to said Commissioner, who shall thereupon take such further action as he may deem proper.

The Committee on Finance reported several amendments to this section. The first was in line three, after the word "revenue," to strike out "shall" and insert "may;" and after the word "appoint," to strike out the words "one officer for each United States judicial district" and to insert "not exceeding twenty officers."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line five, to strike out the word "a" before "supervisor;" and also to add the letter "s" to supervisor; and after the word "revenue" to strike out the words "on distilled spirits and tobacco."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line seven, to strike out the word "such" before "district" and to insert "a designated territorial."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line nine, after the word "receive," to insert "in addition to expenses necessarily incurred by him."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines twelve and thirteen, to strike out "two thousand five hundred" and to insert "three thousand" before "dollars."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line thirteen, after the words "per annum," to strike out the words "and shall be paid his necessary traveling expenses when absent from his office on official business."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line sixteen, to strike out the words "on distilled spirits and tobacco;" and in line nineteen, to strike out the words "upon distilled spirits and tobacco."

The amendment was agreed to.

The section, as thus amended, reads as follows:

SEC. [47] 49. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury, on the recommendation of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, may appoint not exceeding twenty officers, to be called supervisors of internal revenue, whose duty it shall be to reside in a designated territorial district, and keep his office at some convenient place therein to be designated by the Commissioner, and who shall receive, in addition to expenses necessarily incurred by him, in compensation for his services, such salary as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may deem just and reasonable, not exceeding $3,000 per annum. It shall be the duty of every supervisor of internal revenue, under the direction of the Commissioner, to see that all laws and regulations relating to the collection of internal taxes are faithfully executed and complied with; to aid in the prevention, detection, and punishment of any frauds in relation thereto, and to examine into the efficiency and conduct of all officers of internal revenue within his district, &c.

The Chief Clerk read section [forty-eight] fifty, as follows:

SEC. [48] 50. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act no general or special agent, by whatever name or designation he may be known, of the Treasury Department in connection with the internal revenue, except as provided for in this act, shall be appointed, commissioned, employed, or continued in office, and that the term of office or employment of all such general or special agents now authorized as aforesaid under employment at the time of the passage of this act shall expire ten days after this act shall take effect.

The committee reported amendments to this section. The first was to insert after the enacting clause, and before the word "that," the following clause:

That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall have power, whenever in his judgment the necessities of the service may require, to employ competent persons, not exceeding fifty in number at any one time, whose term of service shall continue at the pleasure of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who shall perform such duties and at such places as may be required of them by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, at a rate of compensation to be determined by the said Commissioner before the commencement of his employment.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It seems to me that is giving a very great discretion to the Commissioner, to fix the compensation as he pleases and appoint men to perform such duties as he pleases. It strikes me as very loose legislation.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator will look at the context he will see that it limits discretion. Under the present law, the Secretary of the Treasury has power to appoint special agents, general agents, &c., of various denominations, and inspectors. About three hundred altogether are employed. The House of Representatives, by section forty-eight, repealed all this authority and provided that the offices of all these persons should terminate within ten days after the taking effect of this act. We have left that provision, but in lieu of these general and special agents and inspectors of revenue, no longer necessary under this bill, we have provided for the smallest possible number acting on the best information we could get from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to perform the duties devolved on him. They are the agents, the employes, the right-hand men of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to perform the duties that are now being performed by special agents. They will be sent off unknown to any one, sent off to collectors or assessors who are under suspicion, and may be called upon to discharge very important functions. As a matter of course, their compensation cannot very well be fixed, because they may be employed but a few days or a week or a month. No commission issues to them. Indeed, we cannot under the Constitution authorize a commission to issue to them upon an appointment made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, because he is not the head of a Department. They are simply temporary employes of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do they have power to make seizures?

Mr. SHERMAN. They have the same power that special agents have.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that a power to make seizures?

Mr. SHERMAN. Upon the direction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. They have no independent power. They can only do what he tells them. He says, "Go to such a place to examine the books," and they have a right to do it. They are simply his employes, and the nature and character of their power are such as may be delegated to them by him from time to time. We considered this, after the most mature reflection, as an indispensable provision, especially if we repeal the authority for the whole army of special agents. The preceding section provided for sixty supervisors of internal revenue, one for each judicial district. We have reduced the number to twenty, and we have instead given him fifty persons to be employed at his pleasure to perform such duties as he may designate from time to time.

Mr. TRUMBULL. One of the great abuses under the present system has been the unlimited discretion in regard to special agents. The country has been filled with them. The Senate passed a bill early in the session cutting off this power to appoint special agents and send them all over the country to perform such duties as the Secretary of the Treasury might designate, and with such pay as he might designate. It is one of the great abuses of the Government, and an effort has been made at this session of the Senate to correct it. We passed a bill upon that subject. I am not objecting to the number of these employes. Fifty may be necessary. I am not sufficiently advised in regard to that. I am sorry that such a power has to be granted at all; but the committee having found that it is necessary I have nothing to say about that. But it is certainly very objectionable to vest the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with authority "to employ competent persons, not exceeding fifty in number at any one time, whose term of service shall continue at the pleasure of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who shall perform such duties and at such places as may be required of them by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, at a rate of compensation to be determined by the said Commissioner." It authorizes the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to pay any sum that he thinks proper, and assign any duties that he thinks proper to these officers. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] asked if they could make seizures. I suppose so. You make by this provision the Commissioner of Internal Revenue a legislator; he may devolve upon them any duties he thinks proper, and then pay any sum that he thinks proper. I do think there should be some limit to this, not exceeding so much a day, or not exceeding so much a year. We should have some limitation upon it, and not allow this officer to pay what he pleases, and assign what duties he pleases. I think the duties ought to be specified. It is a species of legislation that is very objectionable.

I can see from the framing of this bill that it is an attempt on the part of the Committee on Finance to get around the Constitution. Instead of appointing these persons as officers, requiring them to perform specific duties regulated by law, and to be responsible to somebody, they are called "employes," in order really to vest the appointment in the hands of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Perhaps it is better for that officer to do it; but I think there should be some limit as to the amount here, and I hope the committee will agree upon some sum. I would rather agree that they should not be paid exceeding twenty dollars a day than to have it in this loose way.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, there is, to be sure, a discretionary power given to the Commissioner to make these appointments and fix the salary; but the Senator from Illinois will bear in mind that the number is reduced from two hundred and fifty to seventy. The present number is about two hundred and fifty, all told, of various officers.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator from New York is aware that that has been a subject of vast complaint. In my State, at Chicago, I have been told that there have been a dozen of these special agents at one time.

Mr. MORGAN. The Committee on Finance have reduced the number from two hundred and fifty down to seventy, all told, fifty special agents and twenty supervisors, a great reduction that I should think would be entirely satisfactory.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am not complaining of the reduction, but I am complaining that there is no limit as to what these men are to be paid or what they are to do.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. It is true that these officers have been employed and there has been great abuse in regard to them; but simply because there has been great abuse it does not follow that we can wholly dispense with such officers. The number is so reduced by our bill that the Department will be compelled to employ such as are of use, or else the revenue service must vastly suffer. This number does not give one to a district; and it sometimes happens, for instance when a distillery is seized, or a tobacco warehouse, that it takes two or three of these men to attend to it. The services of some of these men are worth very much more in one case than in another. It may require an expert in one case whose services cannot be procured short of the rate of five or six thousand dollars a year for a short time, and in another case a man that might not be worth more than four dollars, or two or three dollars a day would answer the purpose. It is merely supplying a sufficient number of employes so that the actual business of the office shall not be crippled. I believe that we really ought to enlarge and give a greater number. All I can say in relation to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is that it ought to be within his power to nominate these men and control them. He knows more about the business on which they are to be sent than anybody else. Sometimes he has to send men from this city who are acquainted with the accounts of parties whose returns have been made. Sometimes they have to be taken to New York or Chicago. There is such a wide diversity of duties devolving upon these officers that we must leave something to the discretion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no doubt, Mr. President, that it is necessary in the enforcement of the intended revenue laws to have officers who shall possess powers of a somewhat indefinite description, revisory, supervisory, the powers of spies, if one may use an offensive word, powers of performing secret service, and of making instantaneous seizures when they discover what it is necessary to do. "Detectives" is a softer word that the chairman of the committee suggests, and I adopt it. But I want to ask the chairman of the committee and the rest of the Senators whether this is going to effect such an object? I put it to him as a question of law, can the Commissioner of Internal Revenue be authorized under our Constitution to "employ," as this term is, or appoint, whatever you call it, a person who shall have any power to interfere with the liberty or property of any citizen? It appears to me that in a government of laws no person can have the legal power to interfere with your property or mine, with your liberty or mine, unless he be an officer of the law; and I am quite sure the Constitution intended that when it provided that the President should commission all officers of the United States, and when it took great pains to prescribe a method by which all officers of the United States should be appointed; that is to say, by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, by the courts of law, or by the heads of Departments. They, by the Constitution, are made the fountains of appointment of all the officers of the United States.

If I am right in assuming (because it does not appear to me to be necessary to go into an argument to demonstrate that to a lawyer) that no person can interfere with the liberty or the property of another in this country unless he does it as an appointed officer of the law, executing the public will framed into a statutory enactment against that very person, thereby being the minister of that "due process of law" of which Magna Charta spoke, and of which all modern constitutions speak, then, I say, it is manifest that we cannot in this indirect method, by styling these persons employes of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue instead of officers, inferior officers, appointed by the head of a Department, infuse into them any other power than that mere observatory, ex-work power that the common laborer has about your grounds, not an officer at all. It appears to me, and I think the committee will agree, that these persons ought to have the power of officers of the law, power to put the whole forces of the law in operation in an instant, to arrest a man, to apply for a warrant, to execute it, to seize his distillery, to do all those things that it is unnecessary, and I do not want to occupy time to enumerate; so that, while I believe it is necessary to have these persons, I think we ought to adopt the same plan of providing for their appointment that we did for the special agents for this and for the customs service in the bill the Senator from Illinois has alluded to as having passed this body, and that is to provide that the head of a Department shall appoint them upon the nomination or designation of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The theory of that is that you are thus enabled to have the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who is from his position better able to select these agents, designate them to the Secretary of the Treasury; and the Secretary being the head of a Department will be authorized by the Constitution to clothe them with that power of representing the forces of the law which will make them enabled to carry it into execution. I will suggest, therefore, although I will not move it against the wish of the committee, that it should be put into some such shape as that it would be sure to stand fire.

Mr. SHERMAN. Rather than divide the Senate about a matter of this kind I prefer that it should go over. We have carefully considered this matter, and wish to invest the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with this power, and to hold him responsible for its exercise. But as I said, rather than divide the Senate, I prefer to have this section passed by and go on with the bill if that be the pleasure of the Senate, although I prefer of course that the Senate should agree to the section as it stands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do you maintain that you can give them any official power?

Mr. SHERMAN. I can go into an argument to show that we have the right to vest in a subordinate power power to employ temporary agents; but I do not wish to go into that because we have not a quorum here.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I call the attention of my colleague to this fact, that we only put on these persons such duties as may be required by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Is it to be supposed that duties will be put upon them that they are unable to perform?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I asked the chairman of the committee if it was understood that these persons were to have, as they ought to have, power to seize property which they found violating the law, and I understood the chairman to answer with that frankness which is characteristic of him, and that knowledge of business to which we all bow, that they should, as it is essential that they should. If, on the other hand, they are to be employed in such things as they can perform as mere detectives or spies, without the power to arrest and to seize, then it is a great deal of flourish for a very small amount of success, as it appears to me. Every detective, in the ordinary sense in which we understand that term, is, when you come to take off his overcoat, an officer of the law, with the badge of the police upon his breast, clothed by the law with power to exercise all the executive functions that a marshal or sheriff or constable has; and that is just the way with the present special agents, because they are appointed by a tribunal that the Constitution reposes that power to appoint in. This is my reply to my friend and colleague.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that this section be passed by informally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be passed over informally, if there be no objection.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I was going to remark that, in my judgment, the section throws on the Commissioner of Internal Revenue power to appoint officers to hold during his pleasure. There is no check upon him. It also gives him power to fix their compensation without any check whatever. It authorizes him to assign to them any official duties that he pleases without any check or regulation whatever.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let it go over.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I will not pursue the matter now.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think I can show that we can give him the power to employ persons to perform duties by law vested in him; but let it pass now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is a very abstract proposition. The question is whether he has power to name a person to make a seizure of the Senator's property or mine.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill, passing this section for the present.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line thirteen of the section the committee propose to insert the words "and no district inspectors;" and in line sixteen, after the word "agents," to insert "or inspectors."

Mr. BUCKALEW. I suggest that this whole section belongs together.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; because if we do not adopt the first part, as a matter of course we shall have to keep the special agents.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The whole section will be passed over.

The Chief Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 49. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act no assessor or collector shall be authorized to enter any other district than the one for which he has been appointed for the purpose of exercising any authority, except as expressly provided for by this act.

The Committee on Finance proposed to strike out the section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. [50] 51. And be it further enacted, That there shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury in any district such number of internal revenue storekeepers as may be necessary, who shall be bona fide residents of the district in which they may be appointed, the compensation of each of whom shall be five dollars per day, to be paid by the United States, one or more of whom shall be assigned by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to every bonded warehouse established by law; and no such storekeeper shall be engaged in any other business while in the service of the United States. Every storekeeper shall take an oath faithfully to perform the duties of his office, and shall give a bond, to be approved by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, for the faithful discharge of his duties, in such form and for such amount as the Commissioner may prescribe. Every storekeeper shall have charge of the warehouse to which he may be assigned, under the direction of the collector controlling the same, which warehouse shall be in the joint custody of such storekeeper and the proprietor thereof, and kept securely locked, and shall at no time be unlocked and opened or remain open unless in the presence of such storekeeper or other person who may be designated to act for him as hereinafter provided; and no articles shall be received in or delivered from such warehouse except on an order or permit addressed to the storekeeper and signed by the collector having control of the warehouse. Every storekeeper shall keep a warehouse-book, which shall at all times be open to the examination of any revenue officer, in which he shall enter an account of all articles deposited in the warehouse to which he is assigned, indicating in each case the date of the deposit, by whom manufactured or produced, the number and description of the packages and contents, the quantities therein, the marks and serial numbers thereon, and by whom gauged, inspected, or weighed, and, if distilled spirits, the number of gauge or wine gallons and of proof gallons; and before delivering any article from the warehouse he shall enter in said book the date of the permit or order of the collector for the delivery of such articles, the number and description of the packages, the marks and serial numbers thereon, the date of delivery, to whom delivered, and for what purpose, which purpose shall be specified in the permit or order for delivery; and in case of delivery of any distilled spirits, the number of gauge or wine gallons, and of proof gallons, shall also be stated; and such further particulars shall be entered in the warehouse-books as may be prescribed or found necessary for the identification of the packages, to insure the correct delivery thereof and proper accountability therefor. A daily return shall be furnished by every storekeeper to the collector of the district of all articles received in and delivered from the warehouse during the day preceding that on which the return is made, a copy of which shall be mailed by him at the same time to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and each storekeeper shall, on the first Monday of every month, make a report in triplicate of the number of packages of all articles, with the several descriptions thereof respectively, as above provided, which remained in the warehouse at the date of his last report, and of all articles received therein and delivered therefrom during the preceding month, and of all articles remaining therein at the end of said month; one of which reports shall be by him delivered to the assessor of the district, to be recorded and filed in his office; one delivered to the collector having control of the warehouse, to be recorded and filed in his office; and one transmitted to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to be recorded and filed in his office. Any internal revenue storekeeper may be transferred by the supervisor of the district commissioner of internal revenue from one warehouse to another within the same district. In case of the absence of any internal revenue storekeeper by sickness or from any other cause, the collector having control of the warehouse may designate a person to have temporary charge of such warehouse, who shall, during such absence, perform the duties and receive the pay of the storekeeper for the time he may be so employed; and for any violation of the law he shall be subject to the same punishment as storekeepers. Any storekeeper or other person in the employment of the United States having charge of a bonded warehouse who shall remove or allow to be removed any cask or other package therefrom without an order or permit of the collector, or which has not been marked or stamped in the manner required by law, or shall remove or allow to be removed any part of the contents of any cask or package deposited therein, shall be immediately dismissed from office or employment, and, on conviction, be fined not less than $500 nor more than $2,000, and imprisoned not less than three months nor more than two years.

The Committee on Finance reported several amendments to this section. The first was in line two, after the word "Treasury," to strike out the words "in any district."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line four, after the word "necessary," to strike out the words "who shall be bona fide residents of the district in which they may be appointed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line six, after the words "shall be," to insert "determined by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue not exceeding."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line nine, to strike out the word "bonded," and to insert "distillery" before "warehouse."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line twelve, after the words "United States," to insert "without the written permission of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line sixty-nine, to insert the word "or" before "Commissioner;" and in line seventy, to strike out the words "another within the same district" and to insert "any other;" so that the clause will read:

Any internal revenue storekeeper may be transferred by the supervisor of the district or Commissioner of Internal Revenue from one warehouse to any other.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOWE. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee if it is supposed to be necessary to have more than one of these storekeepers to a single warehouse.

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir.

Mr. HOWE. The bill provides for "one or more" being assigned to every warehouse.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator will see that we have provided that these storekeepers may be ordered from one district to another, and it may be possible that sometimes experienced storekeepers who have proved themselves faithful and good and shown themselves worthy may be sent to a distillery in another district and temporarily employed there.

Mr. HOWE. The section reads, "one or more of whom shall be assigned by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to every distillery warehouse."

Mr. SHERMAN. We have left it so that in certain cases two storekeepers may be assigned to some of the great distilleries. It may be necessary, and they may be transferred from one to another. The whole matter is left to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and to the supervisor of internal revenue of the district.

Mr. HOWE. It seems to me that if that should be necessary in any case, the section would have to be changed considerably, but then I may be mistaken about it. It provides for returns to be made by every storekeeper, so that if there are two storekeepers to a single warehouse there would be duplicate returns, each one would have to make his own report from time to time.

Mr. SHERMAN. Such a case as that would rarely occur. It would only occur in a great distillery where one might be sent to supervise or watch over another. Probably the case would very rarely occur; but we have allowed for the possibility of such a case: where a storekeeper may be under suspicion, another storekeeper may be sent there temporarily to discharge the duties.

Mr. HOWE. That is provided for by transfer, not by duplication.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 51. And be it further enacted, That there shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, in every collection district where the same may be necessary, one or more internal revenue gaugers, who shall each take an oath faithfully to perform his duties, and shall give his bond, with one or more sureties, satisfactory to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, for the faithful discharge of the duties assigned to him by law or regulations; and the penal sum of said bond shall not be less than $5,000, and said bond shall be renewed or strengthened as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may require. The duties of every such gauger shall be performed under the supervision and direction of the collector of the district to which he may be assigned, or of the collector in charge of exports at any port of entry to which he may be assigned. Fees for gauging and inspecting shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to be paid to the collector by the owner or producer of the articles to be gauged and inspected; and said collector shall retain all amounts so received as such fees until the last day of each month, when the aggregate amount of fees so paid that month shall, under regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, be paid to the gauger performing the duty; but in any city or part of a city within a district where there may be two or more gaugers on duty, the said fees shall be equally divided by the collector among them. In no case, however, shall the aggregate monthly fees of any gauger exceed at the rate of $3,000 per annum. All necessary labor and expense attending the gauging of any article shall be furnished and borne by the owner or producer of such articles. Every gauger shall, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, make a daily return, in duplicate; one to be delivered to the assessor and the other to the collector of his district, giving a true account, in detail, of all articles gauged and proved or inspected by him, and for whom, and the number and kind of stamps used by him. Any gauger who shall make any false or fraudulent inspection, gauging, or proof, shall pay a penalty of $1,000, and on conviction, shall be fined not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than three months nor more than three years.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this section by inserting in line twenty-two, after the word "gauger," the words "or gaugers."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the word "duty," in line twenty-three, to strike out the following clause:

But in any city or part of a city within a district where there may be two or more gaugers on duty, the said fees shall be equally divided by the collector among them.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line twenty-nine, to strike out the words "furnished and" before the word "borne."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment, to strike out sections fifty-two, fifty-three, and fifty-four of the House bill, in the following words:

SEC. 52. And be it further enacted, That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is hereby authorized to establish and designate at any port of entry in the United States bonded warehouses for the storage of distilled spirits in bond intended for exportation. Suitable buildings shall be selected for such warehouses, which shall not be of less capacity than sufficient to store five thousand barrels of distilled spirits, and shall have no opening into or connecting them with any other building, nor be within six hundred feet of any distillery or rectifying establishment, and shall be known as export bonded warehouses, and used exclusively for the storage of distilled spirits in bond; and no distilled spirits shall be withdrawn or removed from such warehouses except on an order or permit from the collector in charge of exports for immediate transfer to the vessel by which they are to be exported to a foreign country, as hereinafter provided; but no distilled spirit shall be removed from the distillery warehouse until the tax provided for in this act shall have been paid, anything contained in any law to the contrary notwithstanding.

SEC. 53. And be it further enacted, That a drawback shall be allowed upon alcohol and rum exported to foreign countries on which taxes have been paid under the provisions of this act, of which proof shall be furnished by the person exporting the same, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe. Before any drawback shall be paid the exporter claiming drawback shall furnish satisfactory proof that the articles exported have been landed in a foreign country and sold, or consigned for sale in such country, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to secure the Treasury of the United States against frauds. The drawback allowed shall include all the taxes levied and paid upon the alcohol or rum exported, not, however, exceeding fifty cents per gallon proof-spirit: Provided, however, That no claim for drawback shall be allowed on either of the said articles which shall have been exported as aforesaid prior to the time at which this act shall take effect; and that if any person or persons shall fraudulently claim or seek to obtain an allowance of drawback on any article or articles aforesaid on which no internal tax shall have been paid, or shall fraudulently claim any greater allowance or drawback than the tax actually paid thereon as aforesaid, such person or persons shall forfeit and pay to the Government of the United States triple the amount wrongfully and fraudulently sought to be obtained, and on conviction thereof shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary for a period not less than one year nor more than ten years.

SEC. 54. And be it further enacted, That any distilled spirits may, on payment of the tax thereon, be withdrawn from warehouse on application to the collector of the district in charge of such warehouse, on making a withdrawal entry, in duplicate and in form as follows:

[Entry for withdrawal of distilled spirits from warehouse. Tax paid.]

Entry of distilled spirits to be withdrawn on payment of the tax from — warehouse by —, deposited on the — day of —, A. D., by —, in said warehouse.

If withdrawn by any other than the person who made the deposit, the authority for so doing shall be attached to the entry signed by the person who made the deposit, and be in form as follows:

I authorize — to withdraw from warehouse — the distilled spirits described in this entry.

And the entry shall specify the whole number of casks or packages, with the marks and serial numbers thereon, the number of gauge or wine gallons, and of proof gallons, and the amount of the tax on the distilled spirits contained in them: all of which shall be verified by the oath or affirmation of the person making such entry; and on payment of the tax the collector shall issue his order to the storekeeper in charge of the warehouse for the delivery. One of said entries shall be filed in the office of the collector, and the other transmitted by him to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 53. And be it further enacted, That a drawback shall be allowed upon alcohol and rum exported to foreign countries on which taxes have been paid under the provisions of this act when exported as herein provided for. The drawback allowed shall include the taxes levied and paid upon the alcohol or rum exported, not, however, exceeding sixty cents per gallon proof-spirit, and shall be paid when having been placed on shipboard, the vessel has actually cleared on her voyage, and the proper bonds have been executed and filed as hereinafter required; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe such rules and regulations in relation thereto as may be necessary to secure the Treasury of the United States against frauds. And if any person shall fraudulently claim or seek to obtain an allowance of drawback on any alcohol and rum on which no internal tax shall have been paid, or shall fraudulently claim any greater allowance of drawback than the tax actually paid thereon, such person shall forfeit and pay to the Government of the United States triple the amount wrongfully and fraudulently sought to be obtained, and on conviction shall be imprisoned not less than one year nor more than ten years. And any owner, agent, or master of any vessel who shall knowingly aid or abet in the fraudulent collection or fraudulent attempt to collect any drawback upon rum or alcohol, or shall knowingly aid or permit any fraudulent change in the spirits shipped, shall, on conviction, be fined $5,000 and imprisoned not less than one year, and the ship or vessel on board of which such shipment was made, or pretended to be made, shall be forfeited to the United States, whether a conviction of the master or owner be had or otherwise, and proceedings may be had in admiralty by libel for such forfeiture.

SEC. 54. And be it further enacted, That alcohol and rum may be exported with the privilege of drawback, in quantities not less than two thousand gallons, and in packages containing not less than thirty gallons each, on application of the owner thereof to the collector in charge of exports at any port of entry, and under such rules and regulations, and after making such entries, and executing such bonds, and giving such other additional security as may be prescribed by law and by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The entry for such exportation shall be in triplicate, and shall contain the name of the person applying to export, the name of the distiller, and of the district in which the spirits were distilled, and the name of the vessel by which, and the name of the port to which, they are to be exported; and the form of the entry shall be as follows:

Entry of spirits distilled by —, in — district, State of —, to be exported by —, in the —, whereof — is master, bound to —.

And the entry shall specify the whole number of casks or packages, the marks and serial numbers thereon, the quality or kind of spirits as known in commerce, the number of gauge or wine gallons and of proof gallons; and amount of the tax on such spirits shall be verified by the oath or affirmation of the owner of the spirits, and that the tax has been paid thereon, and that they are truly intended to be exported to the port of —, and not to be relanded within the limits of the United States; and said owner shall give his bond, executed in duplicate, with one or more sureties satisfactory to said collector, conditioned that the principal named in said bond will export the spirits as specified in said entry to the port of —, and that the same shall not be landed within the jurisdiction of the United States. The penal sum named in said bond shall be equal to not less than double the amount of the drawback on such spirits. For the discharge of any such export bond the same shall be allowed, and the same certificates of landing and other evidence shall be required as is or may be provided and required for imported merchandise exported from the United States, that the said spirits have been landed at the port named, or at any other port, beyond the jurisdiction of the United States. One bill of lading, duly signed by the master of the vessel, shall be deposited with said collector, to be filed at his office with the entry, retained by him; one of said entries shall be sent to the collector of customs at said port of entry, and when the shipment is completed the other entry shall be transmitted, with the duplicate of the bond, to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to be recorded and filed in his office. The lading on board said vessel shall be only after the receipt of an order or permit signed by the collector in charge of exports and directed to the internal revenue gauger, and after each cask or package shall have been distinctly marked or branded by said gauger, as follows: "For export from U. S. A." The casks or packages shall be inspected and gauged alongside of or on the vessel by the internal revenue gauger, designated by said collector in charge of exports, under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe; and on application of the said collector in charge of exports, it shall be the duty of the surveyor of the port to designate and direct one of the custom-house inspectors to superintend such shipment. The gauger, as aforesaid, shall make a full return of such inspecting and gauging, certifying thereon that the shipment has been made, in his presence, on board the vessel named in the entry for export, which return shall be indorsed by said custom-house inspector, certifying that the casks or packages have been shipped under his supervision on board said vessel; and the said inspector shall make a similar certificate to the surveyor of the port, indorsed on, or to be attached to, the entry in the possession of the custom-house: Provided, however, That no claim for drawback shall be allowed on either of the said articles which shall have been exported as aforesaid prior to the time at which this act shall take effect.

Mr. BUCKALEW. It seems to me the penalty in the first of these sections is rather severe. "The ship or vessel on board of which such shipment was made, or pretended to be made, shall be forfeited to the United States, whether a conviction of the master or owner be had or otherwise, and proceedings may be had in admiralty by libel for such forfeiture." This is a forfeiture of the entire vessel in consequence of the misconduct of a mere agent, without default of the owner of the ship. I am told this is the present provision in our customs laws. Whether found in them or not, it seems to me a very unreasonable provision of law. The owner may not be at the port; he may confide his vessel to an agent in perfect good faith, and that agent, by his own misconduct and fraud, may induce an entire forfeiture of the vessel of the owner. I think it is a shocking provision—grossly unjust.

Mr. SHERMAN. This, as the Senator says, is substantially copied from the present law in regard to exported merchandise, and the forfeiture is only in cases of fraud.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Only where the owner shall "knowingly aid or abet."

Mr. SHERMAN. The language is "and the ship or vessel on board which such shipment"—that refers to the previous provision. "Any owner, agent, or master of any vessel, who shall knowingly aid or abet in the fraudulent collection or fraudulent attempt to collect any drawback upon rum or alcohol, or shall knowingly aid and permit any fraudulent change in the spirits so shipped"—in such cases where there is a palpable fraud by the owner, agent, or master of the vessel, it is to be forfeited. That is the present law in cases of fraud against the customs. It seems to me a less penalty than that ought not to be enforced.

Mr. BUCKALEW. It would be all right where the owner himself committed fraud, but this applies to cases where the agent does it, and he can do it at another port.

Mr. SHERMAN. Under the law of common carriers the owner of a vessel is liable for want of care, negligence, and so on, and may lose his whole vessel by the want of care or negligence of the master. The law of common carriers, as we all know, is extremely severe. This is no more severe than that. Where an owner intrusts his vessel to a master or agent employed by him, and that agent or master is guilty of a palpable fraud knowingly, the provision is that the vessel shall be forfeited. The same provision is made in cases of smuggling, and the same rule applies to all common carriers and to exporting goods in bond now. It is not a new principle at all, and my impression is that the clause is copied from the customs law.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I only wished to draw attention to it.

Mr. HOWE. I see the amount of drawback is limited to sixty cents. Why is that?

Mr. SHERMAN. The whole amount of tax levied on whisky by this bill amounts to about sixty-five cents.

Mr. HOWE. How is that?

Mr. SHERMAN. There is a special tax of four dollars on every cask of forty gallons. That is levied monthly, so that the actual tax levied by this bill directly on spirits is sixty cents, and in addition to that there are other taxes that bring the amount to about sixty-five cents.

Mr. JOHNSON. Not sixty-five cents in addition?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; about sixty-five cents altogether. We allow a drawback of sixty cents. Under the present drawback system five per cent. is always deducted.

Mr. SUMNER. The drawback is not quite enough, rather than too much.

Mr. SHERMAN. We think it is just about right. It is a little less than the tax.

Mr. JOHNSON. A part is always reserved. The amendment was agreed to.

The next section was read as follows:

SEC. 55. And be it further enacted, That all distilled spirits in any bonded warehouse shall, within six months after the passage of this act, be withdrawn from such warehouse, and the tax paid on the same; and the casks or packages containing said spirits shall be marked and stamped, and be subject, in all respects, to the same requirements as if manufactured after the passage of this act. And any distilled spirits remaining in any bonded warehouse for a period of more than six months after the passage of this act shall be forfeited to the United States, and shall be sold or disposed of for the benefit of the same in such manner as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The Committee on Finance propose to amend this section by striking out the word "six" and inserting "twelve" before "months" in lines two and nine respectively.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I suppose the committee have considered this subject carefully; I have not. I have been told by men from my State that this entire section is very objectionable. They allege that abroad liquors are allowed to remain in store an indefinite length of time under legal custody; and the effect of limiting the time here to six months or a year will be to interfere very seriously with certain manufacturers of fine spirits, what are called fine whiskies, for instance, where their value depends on the lapse of several years. The manufacturers of that article, above all others, ought to be encouraged; and if there be no very strong reason looking to the interests of the revenue for a limitation of six or twelve months, I think the time should be left indefinite. At all events, it should be made longer. Manufacturers in Pennsylvania and Kentucky of what are called fine whiskies, men of capital and of character also, who desire to hold in store for a number of years the very fine article which they manufacture, in my judgment ought to be permitted to do so. Frauds are not to be expected from these men; they are to be expected from the hasty operators in the cities and at other points who desire to manufacture in haste, and to dispose of the spirits in haste also, and realize returns; adventurers in the trade; men without solid capital; men who intend to conduct their business upon the absence of honest principles. Why should a manufacturer of what are called fine whiskies in western Pennsylvania and at other points be obliged to pay tax upon his whisky which he desires to hold in store, and will hold in store at all events years before he sells it?

Unless, as I said before, there is some very strong reason looking to the interests of the revenue, I think these persons ought not to be obliged to pay the tax within that limited time. It discourages the production of fine whisky. It presses upon the very class of producers who are entitled to favor and indulgence and who will treat the Government honestly, who, above all others, will pay the tax. Here you oblige them to pay it years before they desire to sell the article, force them to throw it upon the market at an unseasonable time. You embarrass and oppress them in their business; and, as far as I can understand, you do not advance the interests of the Government at all while you disturb the traffic in this article. The tendency of it, it seems to me, is very questionable; and I should like to have some explanation of the proposed limitation. The committee, as I said before, doubtless have considered this subject better than I have. I merely state the impressions on my mind.

Mr. SHERMAN. We certainly did consider this matter very fully, and made this change after hearing all who came before us. If the Senator will look at this section he will see that it does not relate to distilled spirits in a distillery warehouse; it simply applies to the stock on hand. We are about to change from one system to another. By this bill we abolish what is called the bonded-warehouse system; but we have now on hand twenty-five million gallons of whisky. Hereafter there will be no bonded warehouses in which whisky can be stored. It must be stored hereafter at the distillery warehouse; it cannot be taken from that until the tax is paid. The House of Representatives first proposed to give three months within which to pay the tax on all the stored whisky on hand in the United States. It was complained that this would be ruinous in many cases, requiring them to pay the tax before it could get to market. They asked for more time. The House, after considerable hesitation, gave them six months; that is, supposing the act takes effect on the 1st of August, it would give them until the 1st of February to pay the tax. The same parties, however, came to us, and said that six months would not be sufficient to absorb the whisky on hand, that for reasons with which we were perfectly familiar, on account of the passage of the law of last January, great quantities of whisky were in store, and they could not get a market for that large amount in six months. They complained, also, that new whisky which would be distilled would take the place of old whisky for a great variety of purposes, and the old whisky now in store would not be absorbed in the market in six months. Hence they wanted more time. So, after full consideration, we agreed to give them twelve months, which I believe is as much as any of them asked. We place the article on the same footing that we do the newly distilled spirits.

I have no doubt that we shall have more trouble in getting the assent of the House of Representatives to this extension of time for taking spirits out of bond than to any other amendment that is proposed. My own opinion is that the amendment is just, that twelve months is about a reasonable time within which a market must be found for the whisky, or, if not, the owners must take it and pay the tax on it and keep it in store themselves. We cannot continue the present bonded-warehouse system longer than one year for their benefit. It is said they have to pay their money and hold on to their whisky so much the longer; but why do they hold on to it? Simply because by holding on to it they enhance the price. In one year whisky doubles in value, in three years it trebles, and I suppose my friend from Maryland [Mr. JOHNSON] and my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCKALEW] know that in ten years whisky which originally cost twenty-five cents a gallon is worth five dollars a gallon. Those who own it make their profit by holding on, and they ought not to ask the Government of the United States to hold it in store at our risk and our expense and they get all the profit. As a matter of course, if we hold it in store for them we ought to share with them the profit of holding it; we ought to increase the tax according to the length of time it is held; but that is not proposed. I believe we have been very liberal to the holders of the stock on hand by giving them twelve months in which to pay the reduced tax of fifty cents a gallon. I believe there is no complaint in this regard. Indeed, if the House of Representatives assent to this amendment, it will be as much as they can expect, and I think as much as they do expect.

Mr. DAVIS. In two collection districts in Kentucky there are now upward of forty thousand barrels of whisky in bonded warehouses. The honorable Senator from Ohio has very frankly narrated the ground of complaint which the holders of that whisky made against the time allowed by the bill as it was passed by the House of Representatives. The twelve months now proposed is certainly much more advantageous to them than the six months would be, but it operates hardly upon them in this point of view: it forces them to bring a large stock of whisky upon the market, and flood the market, and will not enable them to make the more deliberate and more profitable disposition of the stock on hand which a still further extension of time would do. If the honorable chairman would consent to divide the time in which this tax shall be paid, so as to provide that one half shall be paid within twelve months, and one half within two years from the time the act goes into operation, I have no doubt it would be satisfactory to the distillers and to the holders of this liquor in my State.

The honorable Senator is partly right and partly wrong in another view which he takes of the subject. He says the value of the stock and its price increases as it becomes old. That is true, but not in anything like in proportion to the time of its age. The truth is that fine Bourbon whisky becomes nearly as good at the end of two years as it does afterward. It does improve afterward by age, but it is in a much slower ratio than it does in the first two years. If that time was given to the distillers to pay one moiety of the tax their liquor would have reached its highest perfection at the end of two years, and they would have that time within which to dispose of their stocks on hand, and they could do it without such a sacrifice as would necessarily ensue from bringing so large an amount of whisky into the market of the country at once. Nine tenths of the whisky that is distilled in Kentucky is distilled in the two districts to which I have referred, and I know from having conferred with those who hold the stocks within the last two weeks that the amount on hand now is between forty and fifty thousand barrels. If the honorable Senator's views of his duty as chairman of the Committee on Finance, and of the interests of the Government in collecting this tax, would permit him to allow twelve months within which to pay the first moiety of the tax, and an additional twelve months for the second moiety, it would be entirely satisfactory to the distillers, and I submit the proposition to his just consideration.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. The Senator from Kentucky will bear in mind that a very large portion of this whisky in bond has been already in bond for some time. Twelve months more is to elapse, and thus before the article can reach the consumer very nearly two years will have elapsed. There is another advantage to the whisky in bond, that the party holding it is assessed for nearly the amount that it will gauge at the time of the payment of the tax, and a barrel of whisky that is put in at forty gallons in one year will shrink four gallons, and in two years eight gallons. Thus the party having whisky in bond has a very great advantage; and if there is any question about it at all, it really is whether it ought not to be taxed a little more, for those having it in bond will not be required to pay anything like as much as those selling green whisky.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will be continued.

Section fifty-six, to which no amendment was reported, was read as follows:

SEC. 56. And be it further enacted, That any person owning, or having in his possession, any distilled spirits intended for sale, exceeding in quantity fifty gallons, and not in a bonded warehouse at the time when this act takes effect, shall immediately make a return, under oath, to the collector of the district wherein such spirits may be held, stating the number and kind of packages, together with the marks and brands thereon, and the place where the same are stored, together with the quantity of spirits, as nearly as the owner can determine the same. Upon the receipt of such return the collector, being first satisfied that the tax on said spirits has been paid, shall immediately cause the same to be gauged and proved by an internal revenue gauger, who shall mark, by cutting, the contents and proof on each cask or package containing five wine gallons or more, and shall affix and cancel an engraved stamp thereon, which stamp shall be as follows:

(Stamp for stock on hand, No.—)
Issued by ———, Collector
of ——— district, State of ———.
Distilled spirits. Tax paid prior to (here engrave the date when this act takes effect.) ——— proof gallons. Gauged ———, 18—, Gauger.

All distilled spirits owned or held by any person, as aforesaid, shall be included in the same return, and the gauging shall be continuous until all the spirits owned or held by such person are gauged and stamped, as aforesaid, and a report thereof in duplicate shall immediately be made by the gauger to the collector and assessor of the district, showing the number of packages, contents, and proof of each package gauged and stamped, and one of said reports shall be transmitted by the collector to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. No such spirits shall be gauged or stamped in any cistern or other stationary vessel. Any person owning or having in possession such spirits and refusing or neglecting to make such return shall forfeit the same; and all distilled spirits found, after thirty days from the time this act takes effect, in any cask or package containing more than five gallons, without having thereon each mark and stamp required therefor by this act, shall be forfeited to the United States. Any person who shall gauge, mark, or stamp any cask or package of distilled spirits under the provisions of this section, or who shall cause or procure the same to be done, knowing that the same were manufactured or removed from warehouse subsequent to the taking effect of this act, or that the taxes thereon have not been paid, shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than six months nor more than three years. All stamps required by this section shall be prepared, issued, and affixed upon casks and packages, and canceled in the same manner as provided for other stamps for distilled spirits in this act, and shall be charged at the rate of twenty-five cents for each stamp.

Section fifty-seven was read, as follows:

SEC. 57. And be it further enacted, That all distilled spirits sold by order of court, or under process of distraint, shall be sold subject to tax; and the purchaser shall immediately, and before he takes possession of said spirits, pay the tax thereon. And any distilled spirits condemned before the passage of this act, and in the possession of the United States, shall be sold as herein provided. And if any tax-paid stamps are affixed to any cask or package so condemned, such stamps shall be obliterated and destroyed by the collector or marshal after forfeiture and before such sale.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend the section by inserting between the words "spirits" and "sold," in line two, the words "forfeited to the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

Section fifty-eight was read by clauses, as follows:

SEC. 58. And be it further enacted, That the following special taxes shall be, and are hereby, imposed, that is to say:

Distillers producing fifty barrels, or less, of distilled spirits, counting forty gallons of proof-spirits to the barrel, within the year, shall each pay $200, and if producing more than fifty barrels shall pay in addition four dollars for each such barrel produced in excess of fifty barrels. And monthly returns of the number of barrels of spirits, as before described, distilled by him, shall be made by each distiller in the same manner as monthly returns of sales are made. Every person who produces distilled spirits, or who brews or makes mash, wort, or wash for distillation or for the production of spirits, or who by any process of vaporization separates alcoholic spirit from any fermented substance, or who, making or keeping mash, wort, or wash, has also in his possession or use a still, shall be regarded as a distiller: Provided, That a like tax of four dollars on each barrel, counting forty gallons of proof-spirits to the barrel, shall be assessed and collected from the owner of any distilled spirits which may be in any bonded warehouse at the date of the taking effect of this act, to be paid whenever the same shall be withdrawn from such warehouse, under the provisions of the sixty-second section of this act: Provided, That no tax shall be imposed for any still, stills, or other apparatus used by druggists and chemists for the recovery of alcohol for pharmaceutical and chemical or scientific purposes which has been used in those processes.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this clause by striking out "fifty," in line three, and inserting "one hundred;" by striking out "two," in line four, and inserting "four;" by striking out "fifty," in line six and line eight, respectively, and inserting "one hundred;" so as to read:

Distillers producing one hundred barrels or less of distilled spirits, counting forty gallons of proof-spirits to the barrel, within the year, shall each pay $400, and if producing more than one hundred barrels shall pay in addition four dollars for each such barrel produced in excess of one hundred barrels.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not like in a thin Senate of this kind to submit an amendment, but there is one that I think ought to be adopted, and if it be necessary I will ask that it lie over. The minimum tax here is $400 on distilleries producing one hundred barrels or less. My opinion is that it ought to be raised to two hundred and fifty barrels, and make the minimum tax $1,000 on a distillery producing two hundred and fifty barrels. I hope the Senate will agree to that, because the tax as it is in the section is too small.

Mr. DAVIS. Allow me to inform the honorable Senator that the smaller distilleries make the best liquor.

Mr. SHERMAN. It must be a very small distillery that will not make more than two hundred and fifty barrels a year.

Mr. DAVIS. The distilleries that make about three hundred barrels a year produce the best whisky.

Mr. SHERMAN. And that is the very kind

I desire to reach. I think if the minimum is two hundred and fifty barrels it will not distress any distillery. I propose to strike out "one" and insert "two," and I think on the statement of the Senator from Kentucky the Senate ought to agree to this proposition; and then I propose to double the special tax by striking out "four" and inserting "eight;" so as to make the clause read:

Distilleries producing two hundred barrels or less of distilled spirits, counting forty gallons of proof-spirits to the barrel, within the year, shall each pay $800, &c.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The amendment of the committee is much more severe on small establishments than the bill from the House. The amendment now proposed by the Senator from Ohio is to make it still more severe than the committee have proposed to make it. I can indorse what is stated by the Senator from Kentucky, that in the country, the rural districts, the small distilleries are those in which the very best article is produced, and they are ordinarily establishments where no frauds are committed; at least I think they are extremely rare there. It may be somewhat different in the cities; but in the cities, I dare say, our revenue officers, if they execute the law at all, will root out all small establishments. They cannot be maintained there for other reasons. Large establishments would be the rule in the cities, and comparatively small ones in the country has.

One objection which has been felt among the people to our former system on this subject was that these well known and reputable establishments were struck at by the law. The general objection and opinion among the people was that the law was in some way drafted so as to blot out of existence, in districts and in sections where no frauds were committed, the small establishments, which made a good article, which were honestly conducted, and which were not offensive to public opinion, and encouraged or at least permitted illicit, fraudulent distillation in cities. I think the House bill in this particular section is better than anything which has been proposed either by the committee or by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SHERMAN. Rather than divide the Senate now I will withdraw my amendment and reserve it to offer in my discretion in the Senate. Let it stand with the report of the committee.

The amendment of the Committee on Finance was agreed to.

The committee also proposed to amend the section by inserting the word "fit" after "wash" in line thirteen.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next clause of section fifty-eight was read, as follows:

Rectifiers of distilled spirits, rectifying, purifying, or refining two hundred barrels or less of distilled spirits, counting forty gallons of proof-spirits to the barrel, within the year, shall each pay $200, and fifty cents for each such barrel produced in excess of two hundred barrels. And monthly returns of the quantity and proof of all the spirits purchased and of the number of barrels of spirits as before described, rectified, purified, or refined by him, shall be made by each rectifier in the same manner as monthly returns of sales are made. Every person who rectifies, purifies, or refines distilled spirits or wines by any process, and every wholesale or retail liquor dealer or compounder of liquors who has in his possession any still or leach-tub, or who shall keep any other apparatus for the purpose of refining in any manner distilled spirits, shall be regarded as a rectifier.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this clause by inserting before the word "fifty," in line thirty-two, the words "shall pay," and by striking out the word "such" before "barrel," in line thirty-three, and after "barrel" inserting "of like capacity."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next clause, to which no amendment was proposed, was read, as follows:

Compounders of liquors shall each pay twenty-five dollars. Every person who, without rectifying, purifying, or refining distilled spirits, shall, by mixing such spirits, wine, or other liquor with any materials, manufacture any spurious, imitation, or compound liquors, for sale under the name of whisky, brandy, gin, rum, wine, spirits, cordials, or wine bitters, or any other name, shall be regarded as a compounder of liquors.

The Committee on Finance proposed to strike out the following clause, from lines fifty-three to seventy:

Retail liquor dealers whose annual sales do not exceed $2,500 shall each pay twenty-five dollars; if exceeding $2,500 and not exceeding $5,000, shall pay each fifty dollars; if exceeding $5,000 and not exceeding $10,000, shall each pay $100; if exceeding $10,000 and not exceeding $20,000, shall each pay $200; and if exceeding $20,000, shall each pay $1,000. Every person who sells or offers for sale distilled spirits, wines, or malt liquors in less quantities than one quart at a time, or in any quantity to be drunk at the place, or on the premises where they are sold shall be regarded as a retail liquor dealer. And any peddler who sells or offers for sale distilled spirits, fermented liquors, or wines shall pay in addition to his special tax as a peddler the special tax of a wholesale or retail liquor dealer, according to the amount of his sales.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Retail liquor dealers shall each pay twenty-five dollars. Every person who sells or offers for sale distilled spirits, wines, or malt liquors, in less quantities than one quart at one time, or in any quantity to be drunk at the place or on the premises where they are sold, and whose annual sales, including all sales of other merchandise, do not exceed $25,000, shall be regarded as a retail liquor dealer. Any peddler or auctioneer who sells or offers for sale distilled spirits, fermented liquors, or wines, shall pay, in addition to his special tax as a peddler or auctioneer, the special tax as a wholesale or retail liquor dealer, according to the amount of his sales.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state in regard to that amendment that we have simply left the law imposing a special tax on retail liquor dealers as it now stands. We think it would be very unjust, when these people have paid their special tax according to law, to come back on them and reassess a higher tax upon a different principle. It would be unjust and wrong.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Can you not provide for doing it after their time is out?

Mr. SHERMAN. The present law is enough. We can amend it next year if necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Committee on Finance proposed to strike out the following clause:

Wholesale liquor dealers shall each pay $100, and in addition, shall pay thirty dollars for every $1,000 of sales in excess of $2,000. Every person who sells, or offers for sale, distilled spirits, wines, or malt liquors in quantity of not less than one quart at one time, and not to be drunk at the place or on the premises where the sale is made, shall be regarded as a wholesale liquor dealer. But no distiller or brewer, who has paid his special tax as such, and who sells only distilled spirits or malt liquors of his own production in the original casks or packages in which they are placed for the purpose of affixing the tax stamps, shall be required to pay the special tax of a wholesale dealer.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Wholesale liquor dealers, whose annual sales do not exceed $50,000, shall pay $100, and if exceeding $50,000 shall each pay in addition one dollar for every $1,000 in excess of $50,000. Every person who sells or offers for sale distilled spirits, wines, or malt liquors in quantity of not less than one quart at a time, and not to be drunk at the place or on the premises where the sale is made, shall be regarded as a wholesale liquor dealer. But no distiller or brewer, who has paid his special tax as such, and who sells only distilled spirits or malt liquors of his own production, at the place of manufacture, in the original casks or packages in which they are placed for the purpose of affixing the tax stamps, shall be required to pay the special tax of a wholesale dealer.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "fifty" and inserting "twenty-five" in each place; so as to make the clause read:

Wholesale liquor dealers whose annual sales do not exceed $25,000 shall pay $100, and if exceeding $25,000 shall each pay in addition one dollar for every $1,000 in excess of $25,000, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The following clauses of the section, to which no amendment was proposed, were read:

But the payment of any special tax imposed by this act shall not be held or construed to exempt any person carrying on any trade, business, or profession from any penalty or punishment therefor provided by the laws of any State; nor to authorize the commencement or continuance of any such trade, business, or profession, contrary to the laws of any State, or in places prohibited by municipal law; nor shall the payment of any such tax be held or construed to prohibit or prevent any State from placing a duty or tax on the same trade, business, or profession for State or other purposes.

Manufacturers of stills shall each pay fifty dollars, and twenty dollars for each still or worm for distilling made by him. Any person who manufactures any still or worm to be used in distilling shall be deemed a manufacturer of stills.

Tobacco, snuff, and cigars:

Dealers in leaf tobacco, whose annual sales do not exceed $10,000, shall each pay twenty-five dollars; and if their annual sales exceed $10,000, shall pay in addition two dollars for every $1,000 in excess of $10,000. Every person shall be regarded as a dealer in leaf tobacco whose business it is for himself or on commission to sell or offer for sale leaf tobacco. And payment of a special tax as wholesale dealer, tobaccoist, manufacturer of cigars, or manufacturer of tobacco, shall not exempt any person dealing in leaf tobacco from the payment of the special tax therefor hereby required. But no farmer or planter shall be required to pay a special tax as a dealer in leaf tobacco for selling tobacco of his own production, or tobacco received by him as rent from tenants who have produced the same on his land.

Dealers in tobacco, whose annual sales exceed $100 and do not exceed $1,000, shall each pay five dollars, and when their annual sales exceed $1,000 shall pay in addition two dollars for each $1,000 in excess of $1,000. Every person whose business it is to sell or offer for sale manufactured tobacco, snuff, or cigars, shall be regarded as a dealer in tobacco. And any retail dealer or keeper of a hotel, inn, tavern, or eating-house, who sells tobacco, snuff, or cigars, shall pay, in addition to his special tax, the special tax as a dealer in tobacco.

In the last clause the Committee on Finance proposed to insert the word "drinking" before "or eating-house."

The amendment was agreed to.

The remaining clauses of the section, to which no amendment was proposed, were read, as follows:

Manufacturers of tobacco shall each pay ten dollars, and in addition thereto, where the amount of the penal sum of the bond of such manufacturer required by this act to be given shall exceed the sum of $5,000, two dollars for each $1,000 in excess of $5,000 of such penal sum. Every person whose business it is to manufacture tobacco or snuff for himself, or who shall employ others to manufacture tobacco or snuff, whether such manufacture shall be by cutting, pressing, grinding, crushing, or rubbing of any leaf or raw tobacco, or otherwise preparing raw or leaf tobacco, or manufactured or partially manufactured tobacco or snuff, or the putting up for use or consumption of scraps, waste, clippings, stems, or deposits of tobacco, resulting from any process of handling tobacco, shall be regarded as a manufacturer of tobacco. But no manufacturer of tobacco shall be required to pay the special tax as a dealer in tobacco for selling the products of his own manufacture.

Manufacturers of cigars, whose annual sales shall not exceed $5,000, shall each pay ten dollars, and when their annual sales exceed $5,000, shall pay in addition two dollars for each $1,000 in excess of $5,000. Every person whose business it is to make or manufacture cigars for himself, or who shall employ others to make or manufacture cigars, shall be regarded as a manufacturer of cigars. No special tax receipt shall be issued to any manufacturer of cigars until he shall have given the bond required by law. Every person whose business it is to make cigars for others, either for pay, upon commission, on shares, or otherwise, from material furnished by others, shall be regarded as a cigar-maker. Every cigar-maker shall cause his name and residence to be registered, without previous demand, with the assistant assessor of the division in which such cigar-maker shall be employed; and any manufacturer of cigars employing any cigar-maker who shall have neglected or refused to make such registry shall, on conviction, be fined five dollars for each day that such cigar-maker so offending by neglect or refusal to register shall be employed by him.

Section fifty-nine, to which no amendment was reported, was read as follows:

Sec. 59. And be it further enacted, That in every case where it becomes necessary to ascertain the amount of annual or monthly sales made by any person on whom a special tax is imposed by this act, or to ascertain the excess of such sales above a given amount, such amounts and excesses shall be ascertained and returned under such regulations and in such form as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and in any case where the amount of the tax has been increased by this act above the amount before paid by any person in that behalf, such person, except retail dealers, shall be again assessed and pay the amount of such increase from the taking effect of this act; and in any case where the amount of sales or receipts has been understated or underestimated by any person, such person shall be again assessed for such deficiency, and shall be required to pay the same with any penalty or penalties that may by law have accrued or be chargeable thereon.

Section sixty, to which no amendment was reported, was read, as follows:

Sec. 60. And be it further enacted, That upon tobacco and snuff which shall be manufactured and sold, or removed for consumption or use, there shall be assessed and collected the following taxes:

On snuff, manufactured of tobacco or any substitute for tobacco, ground, dry, damp, pickled, scented, or otherwise, of all descriptions, when prepared for use, a tax of thirty-two cents per pound. And snuff-flour, when sold or removed for use or consumption, shall be taxed as snuff, and shall be put up in packages and stamped in the same manner as snuff.

On all chewing tobacco, fine-cut, plug, or twist; on all tobacco twisted by hand, or reduced from leaf into a condition to be consumed, or otherwise prepared, without the use of any machine or instrument, and without being pressed or sweetened; and on all other kinds of manufactured tobacco, not herein otherwise provided for, a tax of thirty-two cents per pound.

On all smoking tobacco exclusively of stems, or of leaf, with all the stems in and so sold, the leaf not having been previously stripped, butted, or rolled, and from which no part of the stems have been separated by sifting, stripping, dressing, or in any other manner, either before, during, or after the process of manufacturing; on all fine-cut shorts, the refuse of fine-cut chewing tobacco, which has passed through a riddle of thirty-six meshes to the square inch by process of sifting; and on all refuse scraps and sweeping of tobacco, a tax of sixteen cents per pound.

Mr. McCREERY. I move to amend the sixtieth section by adding this proviso:

Provided, That snuff made of the stems of tobacco shall be taxed five cents a pound.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The amendment of the Senator from Kentucky will be more proper after the amendments of the Committee on Finance shall have been disposed of. The Senate is now acting upon the amendments reported by the Committee on Finance as they are reached in their order.

Mr. McCREERY. Very well; I shall offer it at the proper time.

Section sixty-one was read, as follows:

Sec. 61. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act all manufactured tobacco shall be put up and prepared by the manufacturer for sale, or removal for sale or consumption, in packages of the following description, and in no other manner:

All snuff in packages of one, two, four, eight, and sixteen ounces, except yellow snuff, which may, at the option of the manufacturer, be put up in bladders not exceeding ten pounds each.

All fine-cut chewing tobacco, and all other kinds of tobacco not otherwise provided for, in packages of one half, one, two, four, eight, and sixteen ounces, except that fine-cut chewing tobacco may, at the option of the manufacturer, be put up in wooden packages of ten, twenty, forty, and sixty pounds each.

All smoking tobacco, all fine-cut shorts which can be passed through a riddle of thirty-six meshes to the square inch, and all refuse scraps and sweepings of tobacco, in packages of two, four, eight, and sixteen ounces each.

All cavendish, plug, and twist tobacco in wooden packages not exceeding two hundred pounds net weight.

And every such wooden package shall have printed or marked thereon the manufacturer's name and place of manufacture, and the registered number of the manufactory, and the gross weight, the tare, and the net weight of the tobacco in each package: Provided, That these limitations and descriptions of packages shall not apply to tobacco and snuff transported in bond for exportation and actually exported.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this section by striking out the word "of" after the word "packages" in all instances, and inserting "containing."

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee also proposed, after the word "bladders," in line eight, to insert "containing," and after "each," in line nine, to insert "or in jars containing not exceeding twenty pounds."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the word "thereon," in line twenty-four, to strike out "the manufacturer's name and place of manufacture, and."

The amendment was agreed to.

Section sixty-two was read, as follows:

Sec. 62. And be it further enacted, That every person before commencing, or, if already commenced, before continuing the manufacture of tobacco or snuff, shall, in addition to a compliance with all other provisions of law, furnish, without previous demand therefor, to the assessor or assistant assessor of the district where the manufacture is to be carried on, a statement, in duplicate, subscribed under oath or affirmation, accurately setting forth the place, and if in a city the street and number of the street, where the manufacture is to be carried on; the number of cutting-machines, presses, snuff-mills, hand-mills, or other machines; the name, kind, and quality of the article manufactured or proposed to be manufactured; and, if the same shall be manufactured for, or to be sold and delivered to, any other person, as agent, or under a special contract, the name and residence and business or occupation of the person for whom the said article is to be manufactured, or to whom it is to be delivered; and shall give a bond in conformity with the provisions of this act, to be approved by the collector of the district, in the sum of $2,000, with an addition to said sum of $3,000 for each cutting-machine kept for use, of $1,000 for each screw-press kept for use in making plug or pressed tobacco, of $5,000 for each hydraulic press kept for use, of $1,000 for each snuff-mill kept for use, and of $1,000 for each hand-mill or other mill or machine kept for the grinding, cutting, or crushing of tobacco; that he will not engage in any attempt, by himself or by collusion with others, to defraud the Government of any tax on his manufactures; that he will render truly and correctly all the returns, statements, and inventories prescribed by law or regulations; that whenever he shall add to the number of cutting-machines, presses, snuff-mills, hand-mills, or other mills or machines, as aforesaid, he will immediately give notice thereof to the collector of the district; that he will stamp, in accordance with law, all tobacco and snuff manufactured by him before he offers the same or any part thereof for sale, and before he removes any part thereof from the place of manufacture; that he will not knowingly sell, purchase, expose or receive for sale any manufactured tobacco or snuff which has not been stamped as required by law; and that he will comply with all the requirements of law relating to the manufacture of tobacco or snuff. And the sum of the said bond may be increased from time to time, and additional sureties required by the collector, under the instructions of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. And every manufacturer shall obtain a certificate from the collector of the district, who is hereby authorized and directed to issue the same, setting forth the kind and number of machines, presses, snuff-mills, hand-mills, or other mills and machines, as aforesaid, for which the bond has been given, which certificate shall be posted in a conspicuous place within the manufactory. And any tobacco manufacturer who shall neglect or refuse to obtain such certificate, or to keep the same posted as hereinbefore provided, shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $100 nor more than $500. And any person manufacturing tobacco or snuff of any description without first giving bond as herein required, shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned for not less than one year nor more than five years. And the working or preparation of any leaf tobacco, or tobacco stems, scraps, clippings, or waste, by sifting, twisting, screening, tying, or any other process shall be deemed manufacturing.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this section by inserting "hydraulic or hand" before "screw-press," in line twenty-three; by striking out "press" after "hydraulic," in line twenty-four, and inserting "pump;" and by inserting before "presses," in line thirty-three, the word "pumps, hydraulic, or hand."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was before the word "removes," in line thirty-eight, to strike out "offers the same or any part thereof for sale, and before he."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line sixty-three, to strike out "tying" after "screening."

The amendment was agreed to.

Sections sixty-three, sixty four, and sixty-five, to which no amendment was reported, were read as follows:

SEC. 63. And be it further enacted, That within thirty days after the passage of this act every manufacturer of tobacco and snuff shall place and keep on the side or end of the building within which his business is carried on, so that it can be distinctly seen, a sign with letters thereon, not less than three inches in length, painted in oil colors or gilded, giving his full name and business. Any person neglecting to comply with the requirements of this section shall on conviction be fined not less than $100 nor more than $500.

SEC. 64. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of every assistant assessor to keep a record, in a book or books to be provided for the purpose, to be open to the inspection of any person, of the name and residence of every person engaged in the manufacture of tobacco or snuff in his division, the place where such manufacture is carried on, and the number of the manufactory; and the assistant assessor shall enter in said record, under the name of each manufacturer, a copy of every inventory required by this act to be made by such manufacturer, and an abstract of his monthly returns; and each assessor shall keep a similar record for the district, and shall cause the several manufactories of tobacco or snuff in his district to be numbered consecutively, which numbers shall not thereafter be changed.

SEC. 65. And be it further enacted, That every person, now or hereafter engaged in the manufacture of tobacco or snuff, shall make and deliver to the assistant assessor of the division a true inventory, in such form as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, of the quantity of each of the different kinds of tobacco, snuff-flour, snuff, stems, scraps, clippings, waste, tin-foil, licorice, sugar, gum, and other materials held or owned by him on the 1st day of January of each year, or at the time of commencing and at the time of concluding business, if before or after the 1st day of January, setting forth what portion of said goods and materials, and what kinds, were manufactured or produced by him, and what was purchased from others; which inventory shall be verified by his oath or affirmation; and the assistant assessor shall make personal examination of the stock sufficient to satisfy himself as to the correctness of the inventory, and shall verify the fact of such examination by oath or affirmation taken before the assessor, to be indorsed on or affixed to the inventory; and every such person shall keep a book or books, the forms of which shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and enter therein daily an accurate account of all the articles aforesaid purchased by him, the quantity of tobacco, snuff, and snuff-flour, stems, scraps, clippings, waste, tin-foil, licorice, sugar, gum, and other materials, of whatever description, whether manufactured, (and if plug tobacco the number of net pounds of lumps made in the lump-room, and the number of packages and pounds produced in the press-room each day,) sold, consumed, or removed for consumption or sale, or removed from the place of manufacture in bond, and to which district; and shall, on or before the tenth day of each and every month, furnish to the assistant assessor of the division a true and accurate abstract from such book of all such purchases, sales, and removals, made during the month next preceding, which abstract shall be verified by his oath or affirmation; and in case of refusal or willful neglect to deliver the inventory, or keep the account, or furnish the abstract aforesaid, he shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than six months nor more than three years. And it shall be the duty of any dealer in leaf tobacco, or in any material used in manufacturing tobacco or snuff, on demand of any officer of internal revenue to render a true and correct statement, verified by oath or affirmation, of the quantity and amount of such leaf tobacco or materials sold or delivered to any person named in such demand; and in case of refusal or neglect to render such statement, or if there is cause to believe such statement to be incorrect or fraudulent, the assessor shall make an examination of persons, books, and papers, in the same manner as provided in this act in relation to frauds and evasions.

Section sixty-six was read, as follows:

SEC. 66. And be it further enacted, That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall cause to be prepared suitable and special revenue stamps for payment of the tax on tobacco and snuff, which stamps shall indicate the weight and class of the article on which payment is to be made, and stamps when used on any wooden package shall be canceled by sinking a portion of the same into the wood with a steel die; also, such warehouse stamps as are required by this act, which stamps shall be furnished to the collectors of internal revenue requiring the same, who shall each keep at all times a supply equal in amount to three months' sales thereof, and shall sell the same only to the manufacturers of tobacco and snuff in their respective districts who have given bonds as required by law, to owners or consignees of tobacco or snuff, upon the requisition of the proper custom-house officer having the custody of such tobacco or snuff, and to persons required by law to affix the same to tobacco or snuff on hand on the 1st day of January, A. D. 1869; and every collector shall keep an account of the number, amount and denominations of stamps sold by him to each manufacturer, and to other persons above described.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend the section by inserting after the word "made," in line five, the words "and shall be affixed and canceled in the mode prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CORBETT. I desire to inquire whether that is to be a paper stamp that is to be affixed, or whether it is to be printed with a stencil, or cut in with some kind of a steel stamp. I suppose it is intended to be a paper stamp, is it not?

Mr. SHERMAN. A paper stamp. I had specimens here this afternoon.

Mr. CORBETT. But those were stamps for whisky.

Mr. SHERMAN. These are similar—something like the present tobacco stamp.

Section sixty-seven was read, as follows:

SEC. 67. And be it further enacted, That every manufacturer of tobacco or snuff shall, in addition to all other requirements of this act relating to tobacco, print on each package or securely affix, by pasting on each package containing tobacco or snuff manufactured by or for him, a label, on which shall be printed, together with the manufacturer's name and the number of his manufactory, and the district and State in which it is situated, these words:

"NOTICE.—The manufacturer of this tobacco has complied with all requirements of law. Every person is cautioned, under the penalties of law, not to use this package for tobacco again."

Any manufacturer of tobacco who shall neglect to affix such label to any package containing tobacco made by or for him, or sold or offered for sale by or for him, or any person who shall remove any such label so affixed from any such package, shall, on conviction, be fined fifty dollars for each package in respect to which such offense shall be committed.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend the section by inserting the words "print on or" before "affix," in line fourteen. The amendment was agreed to.

Sections sixty-eight, sixty-nine, seventy, and seventy-one, to which no amendment was reported, were read as follows:

SEC. 68. And be it further enacted, That any manufacturer of tobacco or snuff who shall remove otherwise than as provided by law, or sell any tobacco or snuff without the proper stamps denoting the tax thereon, or without having paid the special tax, or given bond as required by law, or who shall make false or fraudulent entries of manufactures or sales of tobacco or snuff, or who shall make false or fraudulent entries of the purchase or sales of leaf tobacco, tobacco stems, or other material, or who shall affix any false, forged, fraudulent, spurious, or counterfeit stamp, or imitation of any stamp required by this act, to any box or package containing any tobacco or snuff, shall, in addition to the penalties elsewhere provided in this act for such offenses, forfeit to the United States all the raw material and manufactured or partly manufactured tobacco and snuff, and all machinery, tools, implements, apparatus, fixtures, boxes and barrels, and all other materials which shall be found in the possession of such person, in the manufactory of such person, or elsewhere.

SEC. 69. And be it further enacted, That the absence of the proper stamp on any package of manufactured tobacco or snuff shall be notice to all persons that the tax has not been paid thereon, and shall be prima facie evidence of the non-payment thereof. And such tobacco or snuff shall be forfeited to the United States.

SEC. 70. And be it further enacted, That any person who shall remove from any manufactory, or from any place where tobacco or snuff is made, any manufactured tobacco or snuff without the same being put up in proper packages, or without the proper stamp for the amount thereon being affixed and canceled, as required by law; or, if intended for export, without the proper warehouse stamp being affixed; or shall use, sell, or offer for sale, or have in possession, except in the manufactory, or in a bonded warehouse, any manufactured tobacco or snuff, without proper stamps being affixed and canceled; or shall sell, or offer for sale, for consumption in the United States, or use, or have in possession, except in the manufactory or in a bonded warehouse, any manufactured tobacco or snuff on which only the warehouse stamp marking the same for export has been affixed, shall on conviction thereof for each such offense, respectively, be fined not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, and be imprisoned not less than six months nor more than two years. And any person who shall affix to any package containing tobacco or snuff any false, forged, fraudulent, spurious, or counterfeit stamp, or a stamp which has been before used, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction shall be fined not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than two years nor more than five years.

SEC. 71. And be it further enacted, That whenever any stamped box, bag, vessel, wrapper, or envelope of any kind, containing tobacco or snuff, shall be emptied, the stamped portion thereof shall be destroyed by the person in whose hands the same may be. And any person who shall willfully neglect or refuse so to do shall, for each such offense, on conviction, be fined fifty dollars, and imprisoned not less than ten days nor more than six months. And any person who shall sell or give away, or who shall buy or accept from another, any such empty stamped box, bag, vessel, wrapper, or envelope of any kind, or the stamped portion thereof, shall, for each such offense, on conviction, be fined $100, and imprisoned for not less than twenty days and not more than one year. And any manufacturer or other person who shall put tobacco or snuff into any such box, bag, vessel, wrapper, or envelope, the same having been either emptied or partially emptied, shall, for each such offense, on conviction, be fined not less than $100 nor more than $500, and imprisoned for not less than one nor more than three years.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend the bill by striking out section seventy-two, in the following words:

SEC. 72. And be it further enacted, That every manufacturer of plug tobacco shall provide at his own expense a warehouse suitable for the storage of plug tobacco of his own manufacture only; or he may provide a secure room in a suitable building, to be used as such warehouse; but no dwelling-house shall be used for such purpose, and no door, window, or other opening shall be made or permitted in the walls thereof leading into any other room or building used for any other purpose, or into the manufactory where such tobacco is manufactured; and after a bond has been given, as hereinafter provided, such warehouse or room, when approved by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, on report of the collector, is hereby declared to be a bonded warehouse of the United States, and shall be under the control of the collector of the district and in the custody of an internal revenue storekeeper designated for that purpose by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and shall be kept locked at all times except when such officer shall be present; and the stamps required by law on the plug tobacco stored in such warehouse shall be affixed, and such of said stamps as are for the payment of taxes shall be duly canceled before removal from such warehouse. And the owner of such warehouse shall execute a bond to the United States, with two or more sureties, to be approved by the collector and assessor, which bond shall be in such form and contain such conditions as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and the penal sum of such bond shall not be less than $5,000 nor less than double the amount of tax on the tobacco stored therein; and said bond may be increased or renewed from time to time in regard either to the amount thereof or the sureties as the collector, assessor, or the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may require; and such bonded warehouse shall be under such further regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

Section [seventy-three] seventy-two was read, as follows:

SEC. [73] 72. And be it further enacted, That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, upon the execution of such bonds as he may prescribe, may designate and establish, at any port of entry in the United States, bonded warehouses for the storage of manufactured tobacco and snuff, in bond, intended for exportation, selecting suitable buildings for such purpose, to be recommended by the collector in charge of exports at such port, to be known as export bonded warehouses, and used exclusively for the storage of manufactured tobacco and snuff in bond. Every such warehouse shall be under the control of the collector of internal revenue in charge of exports at the port where such warehouse is located, and shall be in charge of an internal revenue storekeeper assigned thereto by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. No manufactured tobacco or snuff shall be withdrawn or removed from any bonded warehouse without an order or permit from the collector in charge of exports at such port, which shall be issued only for the immediate transfer to a vessel by which such tobacco or snuff is to be exported to a foreign country, as hereinafter provided, or after the tax has been paid thereon. And such warehouse shall be under such further regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend the section by adding to it the following proviso:

Provided, That any manufactured tobacco and snuff may be withdrawn once, and no more, from an export bonded warehouse for transportation to any other port of entry in the United States where an export bonded warehouse for the storage of manufactured tobacco and snuff may have been established, and such manufactured tobacco and snuff so withdrawn shall, on its arrival at the second port of entry be immediately warehoused in an export bonded warehouse for the storage of manufactured tobacco and snuff, from which it shall be withdrawn only as provided by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Section [seventy-four] seventy-three was read as follows:

SEC. [74] 73. And be it further enacted, That manufactured tobacco and snuff may be removed in bond from the warehouse of the manufacturer without payment of the tax, to be transported directly to an export bonded warehouse for the storage of manufactured tobacco or snuff established at a port of entry as hereinbefore provided; and the deposit in and withdrawal from any bonded warehouse, the transportation and the exportation of manufactured tobacco and snuff, shall be made under such rules and regulations, and after making such entries and executing such bonds and giving such other additional security as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, which shall, in all respects, so far as applicable, conform to the provisions of law and regulations relating to distilled spirits to be deposited in or withdrawn from bonded warehouse or transported or exported. All tobacco and snuff intended for export, before being removed from the manufacturer's warehouse, shall have affixed to each package an engraved stamp indicative of such intention, to be provided and furnished to the several collectors, as in the case of other stamps, and to be charged to them and accounted for in the same manner; and for the expense attending the providing and affixing such stamps, twenty-five cents for each package so stamped shall be paid to the collector on making the entry for such transportation; but the provisions of this section shall not limit the time for tobacco or snuff to remain in bond.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend the section by striking out before "the manufacturer," in line three, the words "the warehouse of."

The amendment was agreed to.

Section [seventy-five] seventy-four was read, as follows:

SEC. [75] 74. And be it further enacted, That in all cases where tobacco or snuff of any description is manufactured, in whole or in part, upon commission or shares, or where the material from which any such articles are made, or are to be made, is furnished by one person and made or manufactured by another, or where the material is furnished or sold by one person with an understanding or agreement with another that the manufactured article is to be received in payment therefor or for any part thereof, the stamps required by law shall be fixed by the actual maker or manufacturer before the article passes from the place of making or manufacturing. And in case of fraud on the part of either of said persons in respect to said manufacture, or of any collusion on their part with intent to defraud the revenue, such material and manufactured articles shall be forfeited to the United States; and each person to such fraud or collusion shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, be fined not less than $100 nor more than $5,000 and imprisoned for not less than six months nor more than three years.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend the section by striking out "person," in the sixteenth line, and inserting "party."

The amendment was agreed to.

The following sections, to which no amendment was proposed, were read:

SEC. [76] 75. And be it further enacted, That every dealer in leaf tobacco shall enter daily in a book kept for that purpose, under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, the number of hogheads, cases, and pounds of leaf tobacco purchased by him, and of whom purchased, and the number of hogheads, cases, or pounds sold by him, with the name and residence, in each instance, of the person to whom sold, and if shipped, to whom shipped, and to what district. Such book shall be kept at his place of business, and shall be open at all hours to the inspection of any assessor, collector, or other revenue officer; and any dealer in leaf tobacco who shall neglect or refuse to keep such book shall be liable to a penalty of not less than $500, and on conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than six months nor more than two years.

SEC. [77] 76. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act, and until the 1st day of October, 1868, all manufactured tobacco and snuff (not including cigars) imported from foreign countries, shall be placed by the owner, importer, or consignee thereof in a bonded warehouse of the United States at the place of importation, in the same manner and under rules as provided for warehousing goods imported into the United States, and shall not be withdrawn from such warehouse, nor be entered for consumption or transportation in the United States prior to the said 1st day of October, 1868. All manufactured tobacco and snuff (not including cigars) imported from foreign countries, after the passage of this act, shall, in addition to the import duties imposed on the same, pay the tax prescribed in this act for like kinds of tobacco and snuff manufactured in the United States, and have the same stamps respectively affixed. Such stamps shall be affixed and canceled on all such articles so imported by the owner or importer thereof while such articles are in the custody of the proper custom-house officers, and such articles shall not pass out of the custody of such officers until the stamps have been affixed and canceled. Such tobacco and snuff shall be put up in packages, as prescribed in this act for like articles manufactured in the United States before such stamps are affixed; and the owner or importer of such tobacco and snuff shall be liable to all the penal provisions of this act, prescribed for manufacturers of tobacco and snuff manufactured in the United States. Where it shall be necessary to take any of such articles, so imported, to any place for the purpose of repacking, affixing, and canceling such stamps, other than the public stores of the United States, the collector of customs of the port where such articles shall be entered shall designate a bonded warehouse to which such articles shall be taken, under the control of such customs officer as such collector may direct. And any officer of customs who shall permit any such articles to pass out of his custody or control without compliance by the owner or importer thereof with the provisions of this section relating thereto, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $1,000, nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than six months nor more than three years.

Section [seventy-eight] seventy-seven was read, as follows:

SEC. [78] 77. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act it shall be the duty of every dealer in manufactured tobacco, having on hand more than twenty pounds, and every dealer in snuff having on hand more than ten pounds, to immediately make a true and correct inventory of the amount of such tobacco and snuff, respectively, under oath or affirmation, and to deposit such inventory with the assistant assessor of the proper division, who shall immediately return the same to the assessor of the district, who shall immediately thereafter make an abstract of the several inventories filed in his office, and transmit such abstract to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and a like inventory and return shall be made on the first day of every month thereafter, and a like abstract of inventories shall be transmitted while any such dealer has tobacco or snuff remaining on hand manufactured in the United States, or imported prior to the passage of this act, and not stamped. After the 1st day of January, 1869, all smoking, fine-cut chewing tobacco, or snuff, and after the 1st day of July, 1869, all other manufactured tobacco of every description shall be taken and deemed as having been manufactured after the passage of this act, and shall not be sold or offered for sale unless put up in packages and stamped as prescribed by this act; and any person who shall sell, or offer for sale, after the 1st day of January, 1869, any smoking, fine-cut chewing tobacco, or snuff, and after the 1st day of July, 1869, any other manufactured tobacco not so put up in packages and stamped, shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than six months nor more than two years.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend the section by inserting after the word "act," in line twenty-five, the words "except at retail by retail dealers from wooden packages stamped as provided for in this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The following sections, to which no amendment was reported, were read:

SEC. [79] 78. And be it further enacted, That any person who shall, after the passage of this act, sell, or offer for sale, any manufactured tobacco or snuff, representing the same to have been manufactured and the tax paid thereon prior to the passage of this act, when the same was not so manufactured, and the tax not so paid, shall be liable to a penalty of $500 for each offense, and shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, shall be fined not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, and shall be imprisoned not less than six months nor more than two years.

SEC. [80] 79. And be it further enacted, That all manufactured tobacco and snuff, manufactured prior to the passage of this act, and held in bond at the time of its passage, may be sold for consumption in the original packages, with the proper stamps for the amount of the tax thereon affixed and canceled as required by law; and any person who shall, after the passage of this act, offer for sale any tobacco or snuff, in packages of a different size from those limited and prescribed by this act, representing the same to have been held in bond at the time of the passage of this act, when the same was not so held in bond, shall, on conviction, be fined fifty dollars for each package in respect to which such offense shall be committed; Provided, That after the 1st day of January, A. D. 1869, no such tobacco or snuff shall be sold or removed for sale or consumption from any bonded warehouse unless put up in packages and stamped as provided by this act.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Secretary must be very tired; we have got along very well; and I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, July 6, 1868.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON.

The Journal of Friday last was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. This being Monday the first business in order is the call of the States and Territories for bills and joint resolutions for reference to the appropriate committees, not to be brought back into the House by a motion to reconsider, commencing with the State of Maine; during which call resolutions and memorials of State and territorial Legislatures are in order.

PRINCE EDWARD'S ISLAND.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 322) relative to Prince Edward's Island; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

DISTRICT COURT FOR DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. MILLER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1356) in relation to the service of the filing of a bill in equity in the district court of the United States for the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENTS IN WASHINGTON CITY.

Mr. UPSON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1357) making an appropriation to reimburse the city of Washington for expenses incurred in improving the property of the General Government in said city; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

BACK PAY AND BOUNTY OF FORMER SLAVES.

Mr. HINDS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1358) providing for the payment of like back pay and bounty to persons marked "slave" upon the rolls as to other soldiers; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LANDS IN DUBUQUE, IOWA.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1359) approving the sale of certain lands in the city of Dubuque by said city; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

IOWA SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1360) granting lands to the Iowa Southern Railway Company; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

MAIL ROUTES IN NEBRASKA.

Mr. TAFFE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1361) to establish certain mail routes in the State of Nebraska; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

CHARITIES IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1362) to establish a commission of charities for the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. HOPKINS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 502) to incorporate the congregation of the First Presbyterian Church of Washington;

An act (H. R. No. 503) for the relief of William B. Todd;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 321) in relation to the erection of a bridge in Boston harbor; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 96) for the relief of John Sedgwick, collector of internal revenue, third district, California.

EMILY B. BIDWELL

Mr. VAN HORN, of New York, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1363) granting a pension to Emily B. Bidwell, widow of Brigadier General Daniel D. Bidwell; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The next business in order during the morning hour is the call of States for resolutions, commencing with the State of Wisconsin, where the call was arrested at the expiration of the morning hour on last Monday.

PURCHASES AT PHILADELPHIA NAVY-YARD.

Mr. PAINE. On behalf of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] I submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be directed to inquire into the regularity and legality of the purchase of planing and riveting machines, Cameron pumps, and tools and machinery generally, by Theodore Zeller, engineer at the navy-yard at Philadelphia.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. KELLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHEROKEE NEUTRAL LANDS IN KANSAS.

Mr. PAINE. I desire to offer another resolution—a joint resolution for the protection of settlers on the Cherokee neutral lands in Kansas.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman, having introduced one resolution, cannot introduce another without unanimous consent. The joint resolution will be read for information, after which there will be an opportunity for objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas in the treaty between the United States and the Cherokee nation of Indians, made July 19, 1864, proclaimed August 11, 1866, there is a provision purporting to authorize a sale by the Secretary of the Interior of the Cherokee neutral lands in Kansas, but which reserves from sale lands having improvements of the value of fifty dollars, not being mineral and occupied by any person for agricultural purposes, and which gives to occupants the right to purchase one hundred and sixty acres each of said lands, under and by virtue of which about eight hundred families are provided for; and whereas between August 11, 1866, and June 6, 1868, about twenty-seven hundred additional families have settled on said Cherokee neutral lands, each family occupying one hundred and sixty acres, on which improvements have been made at an average cost of about five hundred and ten dollars, beside expenditures for living of $150 for each family, said settlement and improvements being made without objection from any source and on the faith that the settlers would be protected in their right to acquire title to said lands as other settlers on the public lands; and whereas on the 30th day of August, 1866, a contract was made by and between James Harlan, Secretary of the Interior, and the American Emigrant Company for the sale of certain portions of said lands, which contract has been assigned by said company to James F. Joy, said contract and assignment being on file in the Department of the Interior; and whereas a supplemental treaty between the United States and said Cherokee nation was made April 27, 1868, ratified June 6, and proclaimed June 10, 1868, all without any knowledge thereof by any of the persons occupying said lands, and which ratifies said contract with the American Emigrant Company and the assignment thereof to said Joy with certain modifications provided in said supplemental treaty, but which makes no provision for the protection of the persons or families who have settled upon and improved said lands, but purports to ratify a sale of said lands including the improvements thereon: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That in all cases where any person, prior to June 10, 1868, shall have settled on any tract of land of one hundred and sixty acres or less, in the body of lands known as the Cherokee neutral lands, and shall have made improvements thereon of the value of fifty dollars, and occupied such tract for agricultural purposes, such person, his heirs or assigns, so occupying any such tract of land shall, after due proof made in such manner as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, be entitled to enter and receive a patent for the lands so occupied on paying $1 25 an acre within one year, in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe. And the money so to be paid for said lands shall be paid over to said Cherokee Indians.

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Speaker, before objecting I ask what is proposed to be done with that resolution?

Mr. PAINE. The State of Wisconsin being called, I offered that resolution at the suggestion of several gentlemen.

Mr. VAN HORN, of Missouri. I object to the gentleman's offering the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The resolution cannot be received, objection being made, the gentleman having already offered one resolution.

SURVEYS OF RIVERS AND HARBORS.

Mr. SAWYER, at the request of Mr. ELIOT, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 323) in relation to the surveys and examinations of rivers and harbors; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution provides that the Secretary of War shall cause to be prepared and submitted to Congress, in connection with the reports of the examinations and surveys of rivers and harbors hereafter made by order of Congress, full statements of the existing facts tending to show to what extent the general commerce of the country will be promoted by the several works of improvement contemplated by such examinations and surveys, to the end that public moneys shall not be applied except where such improvements shall tend to subserve the general commercial and navigating interests of the United States.

Mr. SAWYER demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LOCK-UP SAFETY VALVES.

Mr. SAWYER also submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be directed to inquire into the expediency of repealing the provisions of law requiring the use of lock-up safety valves in vessels propelled by steam; and they are authorized to report by bill or joint resolution at any time.

WEST WISCONSIN RAILROAD.

Mr. HOPKINS introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 324) to extend the time for the completion of the West Wisconsin railroad; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution provides that the time fixed and limited by an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of certain railroads in the State of Wisconsin," approved May 5, 1864, for the completion of the railroad from Tomah, in the county of Monroe, to Saint Croix river or lake, between townships twenty-five and thirty-one, be further extended for a period of three years to the West Wisconsin Railroad Company, a corporation established by the laws of Wisconsin, and which, by the laws of that State, is entitled to the land grant made in the second section of that act; provided that if said railway company shall not have completed said railroad from Tomah to Black River Falls on or before the expiration of one year from the passage of this resolution this act shall be null and void.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Is it proposed to put this resolution upon its passage, or is it for reference?

The SPEAKER. It is proposed to put it on its passage.

Mr. HOPKINS. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOPKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ANTHRACITE COAL FOR THE NAVY.

Mr. HOPKINS, at the request of Mr. PRICE, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and is hereby, instructed to inform this House of the price paid and to be paid under contracts recently made by the Government for anthracite coal for the use of the Navy at New York and at Philadelphia, and whether anthracite coal has been furnished or is to be furnished to the ports of Norfolk, Washington, or other southern ports from New York, and if so, why.

EQUALIZATION OF TAXES, ETC.

Mr. DONNELLY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1368) to equalize the taxes and reduce the interest on the public debt; which was read a first and second time.

The bill provides that upon all gains, profits, and incomes arising from the bonds and other interest-bearing securities of the United States, payable to any person, State; municipality, body politic or corporate, company or society, whether corporate or not corporate, out of the Treasury of the United States, there shall be charged yearly as a tax for every $100 thereof ten dollars, and for a lesser sum in the same proportion. Said tax shall be assessed and collected by the Treasurer or other disbursing officers of the United States charged with paying any of the interest upon the debt of the United States, in the same currency in which said interest is paid; and said tax shall be instead of all other taxes assessed or levied as taxes upon income from any of the interest-bearing securities of the United States.

Mr. DONNELLY. I demand the previous question.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I ask the gentleman to yield for an amendment.

Mr. DONNELLY. I will allow it to be read for information.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert what I send to the Chair.

Mr. SPALDING. I object.

The question being put on seconding the previous question on the engrossment of the bill there were—ayes twenty-one.

Mr. DONNELLY. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Messrs. DONNELLY and GARFIELD.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes twenty-one.

Mr. DONNELLY. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. GARFIELD. I rise to debate the bill. The SPEAKER. Debate arising, the bill goes over.

CHIEF CLERK OF SERGEANT-AT-ARMS.

Mr. WINDOM offered a joint resolution (H. R. No. 325) relative to the pay of the chief clerk in the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House; which was read a first and second time.

The resolution directs the Clerk to pay from the contingent fund of the House to the chief clerk in the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms the difference between his present pay and the amount voted him by a resolution of the House passed June 25, 1866, thereby fixing the salary of the said chief clerk at $2,500 per annum.

Mr. WINDOM. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WINDOM moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

LEWIS P. BUCKLEY.

Mr. WINDOM. At the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk of this House be instructed to pay from the contingent fund to the widow or legal representative of Colonel Lewis P. Buckley, late assistant doorkeeper of this House, one month's extra pay to aid in payment of expense of his funeral.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Let that go to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. SPALDING. He died in poverty, and this is to pay his funeral expenses.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. That can be done by letting it go to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. SPALDING. I withdraw the resolution if the gentleman insists upon sending it to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Let it be passed, then.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SPALDING moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. BLAINE.

JOSEPH POWELL.

Mr. HIGBY. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution for reference to the Committee of Elections:

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to Joseph Powell, contesting the seat of Hon. R. R. BUTLER, a Representative from the first congressional district of Tennessee, in full for expenses in taking testimony under the direction of the Committee of Elections, the sum of $2,000.

The resolution was referred to the Committee of Elections.

BRIDGES OVER THE OHIO RIVER.

Mr. HIGBY. I ask the consent of the House to offer the following joint resolution for action at this time:

Joint resolution relative to bridges across the Ohio river.

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the passage of this resolution it shall not be lawful to construct nor to complete any bridge across the Ohio river without providing for the full and free navigation of said river by one main span across the channel of at least five hundred feet of clear water way between the piers. The center of said span shall be at least fifty feet above high-water mark at the place where said bridge is located.

Mr. GARFIELD. I object to the introduction of the resolution for action without discussion.

Mr. HIGBY. I supposed that I was entitled to introduce it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has offered one resolution, and he cannot offer a second except by unanimous consent. The rule is specific that a member can offer only one resolution.

PAY OF MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.

Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia. I offer the following resolution, upon which I demand the previous question:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be directed to report back for present action the joint resolution fixing the compensation of members of Congress, referred to that committee on the 20th of January last.

The question was put on seconding the previous question; and only fourteen voted in the affirmative.

Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia, called for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

The House refused to second the demand for the previous question.

Mr. SPALDING. We will report the resolution back at any time. I did not know we had it.

Mr. PILE. I rise to debate the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Debate arising, the resolution goes over under the rules.

Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia. Let it go. We will have another chance next Monday. Get ready.

REMOVALS AND APPOINTMENTS.

The call of the States and Territories for resolutions having been completed, the next business in order was the consideration of resolutions lying over under the rule, the first of which was the following resolution, introduced by Mr. MULLINS on the 1st of June last:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, required to furnish to this House information as to how many removals of clerks and other employes of said Department have been made since the 1st day of January, 1868, and for what cause; also, how many persons have been appointed to office or employed in the Treasury Department since the 1st day of January, 1868, and by whom the removals and appointments were made, and the names of those removed and those appointed or employed; also, the reasons for the same, and by whom said reasons have been furnished, if any.

Mr. PILE. We have all that information now. I move to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move that the resolution be referred to the joint select Committee on Retrenchment.

Mr. MULLINS. I agree to that motion.

Mr. PILE. I withdraw the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. MAYNARD's motion was then agreed to.

MILITARY TRIALS, ETC.

The next business in order was the consideration of the following preamble and resolution, introduced on the 25th of May last by Mr. SINGREAVES:

Whereas by an act of Congress approved March 2, 1867, it was enacted "That all acts, proclamations, and orders of the President of the United States, or acts done by his authority or approval, after the 4th of March, A. D. 1861, and before the 1st day of July, A. D. 1866, respecting martial law, military trials by courts-martial or military commissions, or the arrest, imprisonment, and trial of persons charged with participation in the late rebellion against the United States, as aids or abettors thereof, was guilty of any disloyal practices in aid thereof, or of any violation of the laws or usages of war, or of affording aid and comfort to rebels against the authority of the United States, and all proceedings and acts done or had by courts-martial or military commissions, or arrest or imprisonment made in the premises by any person by the authority of the orders and proclamations of the President, made as aforesaid, or in aid thereof, are hereby approved in all respects, legalized and made valid, to the same extent and with the same effect as if said orders and proclamations had been issued and made, and said arrests, imprisonments, proceedings, and acts had been done under the previous express authority and direction of the Congress of the United States, and in pursuance of a law thereof previously enacted, and expressly authorizing and directing the same to be done. And no civil court of the United States, or of any State, or of the District of Columbia, or of any district or Territory of the United States, shall have or take jurisdiction of, or in any manner reverse any of the proceedings had or acts done as aforesaid; nor shall any person be held to answer in any of said courts for any act done or omitted to be done in pursuance or in aid of any said proclamations or orders, or by authority or with the approval of the President, within the period aforesaid, and respecting any of the matters aforesaid; and all officers and other persons in the service of the United States, or who acted in aid thereof, acting in the premises, shall be held prima facie to have been authorized by the President, and all acts and parts of acts heretofore passed inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed;" and whereas it is alleged that citizens of the United States were arrested and imprisoned between the 4th day of March, A. D. 1861, and the 1st day of July, A. D. 1866, under the alleged authority of the aforesaid acts and proclamations and orders, and afterward discharged without trial either in the civil or military courts; and whereas it is alleged that many citizens so arrested and imprisoned then were, and ever have been, loyal to the Constitution and the Union, and were unjustly arrested and imprisoned, but by reason of said discharge without trial and the aforesaid recited act they cannot establish their innocence, and their characters are tainted with the suspicion of treason; and whereas it is reasonable and just that for every wrong there should be a remedy provided by law: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reporting a joint resolution authorizing the appointment of commissioners or courts of inquiry duly authorized to inquire into and report the causes of said arrest and imprisonment of a citizen in every case where such citizen shall demand such inquiry by petition, verified by the oath or affirmation of the petitioner.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. The motion was agreed to.

W. D. CHIPLEY AND OTHERS.

The next business in order was the following preamble and resolution, introduced by Mr. BECK on the 1st of June, and laid over under the rule:

Whereas it is asserted by William D. Chipley and others, citizens and residents of Columbus, Georgia, that they have been arrested and imprisoned without cause by order of General George G. Meade, commanding the third military district, and that the cause of their arrest and imprisonment has been withheld and refused, as shown by the following letter:

OFFICE OF BLOUNT & CHIPLEY,
COTTON FACTORS, GROCERIES, AND COMMISSION MERCHANTS,
COLUMBUS, GEORGIA, May 18, 1868.

DEAR SIR: I may be presuming in troubling you with the facts which I will herein relate, and if so, can only offer our utter want of representation as my apology. And yet it may be that you will think that such outrages concern every citizen of the country, whether he lives North or South. As long as such acts can be committed with impunity no man can feel safe. It will not do for one to expect his character to protect him from such attacks, for virtue is the favorite target of such marksmen. On the 9th day of March ten white citizens of this place and three colored were arrested by order of one Captain Mills, commanding this post, and placed in confinement at the court-house, where they were detained under guard until dusk on the evening of the 13th ultimo. At the expiration of that time we were released under bond, the amount and conditions of which are fully stated in the printed slips which I inclose. From these clippings you will find that I was numbered among the prisoners. Were I writing to a stranger it might be prudent and proper to offer some testimonial of character; but you have known me from my earliest youth, and on that fact I rest my case. My companions in this arrest, as far as my personal knowledge goes, are as far above the suspicion of any implication in crime as any citizen in this or any other community. What I want is to arrive at the cause of my arrest. During the arrest, nor upon our release under bond, could we obtain any information concerning the evidence which led to our incarceration. It was entirely ex parte, and no clue to its character or the names of our accusers has been given us. If you consider it proper, I would like for you to offer a resolution calling for the facts in the case.

Regretting the circumstances which force me to trouble you in this matter, I remain, sir, yours, very truly,

W. D. CHIPLEY.

Hon. JAMES BECK, Washington.

In stating that we were arrested by order of Captain Mills, commanding post, I should have added his statement, that he was acting under orders from his superiors.

W. D. C.

Therefore,
Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, instructed to report forthwith to the House upon what charge or charges, and by what authority, General George G. Meade, commander of the third military district, embracing the States of Georgia, Alabama, and Florida, arrested and imprisoned William R. Bedell, Christopher C. Bedell, James W. Barber, Alva C. Roper, William L. Cash, William D. Chipley, Robert A. Ennis, Elisha J. Kirksey, Thomas W. Grimes, Wash H. Stephens, John Wells, (colored,) John Stephen, (colored,) and James McHenry, (colored,) citizens and residents of Columbus, Georgia, on or about the 9th day of April, 1868, and why he required said persons to execute to him the following bond: namely:

Georgia, Muscogee County:

Know all men by these presents, that we, whose names are hereunder signed, are held and bound unto General George G. Meade, or his successor in office, in the penal sum of $50,000, for the payment whereof well and truly to be made to the said General George G. Meade, or his successor in office, we hereby bind ourselves, our heirs, executors, and administrators, firmly by these presents.

Witness our hands and seals this 10th day of April, 1868.
The condition of the above obligation is such that, whereas, General George G. Meade has arrested and confined William R. Bedell, Christopher C. Bedell, James W. Barber, Alva C. Roper, William L. Cash, William D. Chipley, Robert A. Ennis, Elisha J.

Kirksey, Thomas W. Grimes, Wade H. Stephens, John Wells, (colored,) John Stapler, (colored,) and James McHenry, (colored,) who have been released by order of General George G. Meade, on condition that they would each give security in the sum of $2,500 that they would each report and appear before the military authorities of the United States, at such time and place as the commanding officer of the third military district may direct. Now, then, if any of the said parties, so released, shall fail to appear and report to the military authorities of the United States, at such time and place as the commanding officer of the third military district may direct, and the parties to this bond shall pay the sum of $2,500 for each and every one of said persons so released who may fail to appear and report as aforesaid, then this bond to be null and void; else, to remain in full force and virtue.

Witnessed by

R. J. MOSES,
Notary Public.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. As this resolution relates to the same subject as the one just referred, I move that it also be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

RIGHTS OF AMERICAN CITIZENS ABROAD.

The next business in order was the following preamble and resolution, submitted by Mr. VAN WYCK on the 17th of June, and laid on the table for future debate:

Whereas foreign nations should not be allowed to raise the question whether American citizenship was acquired by birth or adoption, the rights of citizenship being the same to all citizens; and whereas this Republic has pledged its faith to persons of all nations that residence, renunciation of former allegiance, and compliance with our laws make them citizens here, and the honor of the nation is pledged that such promise be redeemed, no matter whence came the citizen or how powerful the nation that denies it; and whereas Great Britain has, in defiance of the law of nations, a portion of her own history, and the results of the war of 1812, lately established in her courts the dogma once a subject always a subject, and has in repeated instances refused to recognize the rights of American citizens by denying them the privilege of mixed juries, treating as subjects of her realm many of our citizens who had periled life in defense of this Government during the war of the rebellion, in some cases arresting and imprisoning for words spoken in this country: Therefore,

Resolved, That the President of the United States immediately demand from any foreign country who may have imprisoned American citizens for words spoken in this country acknowledgment as complete and ample as was made by this Government in apology for the arrest of Mason and Slidell; and if such apology is denied he report the fact to Congress for its action; also, that he demand reparation in all cases where American citizens have been treated as subjects of a foreign Power. And that to all such persons now imprisoned the rights herein claimed shall be granted; and that he report to this House what he has done, if anything to secure such rights and redress the wrongs above set forth.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN WYCK] is not now present. I move that the resolution be laid on the table for the present.

The motion was agreed to.

BRIDGES OVER THE OHIO.

The next business in order was the consideration of a joint resolution (H. R. No 305) in respect to the construction of bridges over the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, introduced by Mr. RAUM, on the 22d of June.

The question was upon ordering the joint resolution to be engrossed and read a third time.

The joint resolution, which was read, provides that hereafter all bridges to be constructed and in process of construction over the Ohio and Mississippi rivers shall be made with unbroken and continuous spans; and that the span of any such bridge covering the main channel of the river shall be five hundred feet in length in the clear.

Mr. RAUM. I move to amend the joint resolution by striking out all after the resolving clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

That from and after the passage of this resolution all bridges to be constructed, and now in process of construction over the Ohio river, shall be made with unbroken and continuous span, and shall not be of less elevation than fifty feet above extreme high water as understood at the point of location, measuring for such elevation to the lowest part of such bridge at the center of the span; nor shall the span of any such bridges covering the main channel of said river be less than five hundred feet in length in the clear, and the piers of said bridges shall be parallel with the current of the river: Provided, That nothing contained in the foregoing resolution shall be construed to apply to the bridge in process of construction over the Ohio river at the falls of said river.

I suppose this subject has been examined by nearly all the members of the House. The great importance of securing the navigation of the Ohio river, and, in fact, of all our western rivers, is a question to which we should all direct our attention. While I would be glad to offer some observations in reference to the importance of passing this resolution now, still as there are but a few minutes of the morning hour left, I will move the previous question.

Mr. SCHENCK. Will the gentleman allow me to move to amend this resolution by inserting the words "Mississippi and Missouri?" so that it may apply to all those three rivers.

Mr. RAUM. I would prefer to have the Ohio river stand upon its own merits.

Mr. SCHENCK. On its own bottom, I suppose.

Mr. RAUM. Yes; I want to see the question tested on the Ohio river alone.

Mr. DELANO. Why did the gentleman make his resolution originally apply to the Mississippi and Ohio rivers?

Mr. RAUM. I drafted this resolution originally for the Ohio river alone. At the solicitation of some of my friends I inserted the word "Mississippi." Finding, however, that that would raise considerable opposition, I have offered this substitute.

Mr. SCHENCK. I did not suggest my amendment out of any opposition to the joint resolution.

Mr. RAUM. I call the previous question on the substitute.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that this joint resolution having been reached during the morning hour on Monday, if the previous question is ordered it will be disposed of to-day. If the previous question is not seconded, it will go over until Monday next at the expiration of this morning hour.

Mr. SCHENCK. If the previous question shall be voted down, I suppose the joint resolution will be amendable?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. MOORHEAD. This resolution conforms to a report which I understand has been agreed upon by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. PILE. Will the gentleman yield to me for two minutes?

Mr. RAUM. I will yield to the gentleman for two minutes.

Mr. PILE. I desire to say that it is not necessary, and it would be a great injury to the commerce of the Missouri river to apply this restriction to it. I hope it will not be done for the reason the fleets of barges cannot be towed up the Missouri river. The current of the river is so strong that it is difficult for a heavily laden boat to stem the current. Unless a slack-water navigation should be established on the Missouri river (which is not contemplated, and never will be done) there is no necessity for a provision requiring bridges across that river to be five hundred feet span, for the simple reason that no fleets of barges requiring such a span can ever navigate that river. Nor is there any necessity for such a provision with regard to the Mississippi river above the city of Keokuk. The fleets of barges navigating the river above that point can readily pass through a span of three hundred or three hundred and fifty feet. I think, however, there is an urgent necessity for a provision of this kind with reference to the Ohio river, and also with reference to the Mississippi river at and below the city of Keokuk. I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAUM] will yield for an amendment making the provisions of the resolution applicable to the Mississippi river at and below the city of Keokuk.

Mr. RAUM. I prefer not to yield for that amendment. I wish the Ohio river to stand on its own merits. I demand the previous question on the substitute.

On seconding the previous question there were—ayes 35, noes 20; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER, under the rule, ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. RAUM and Mr. GARFIELD.

Mr. PILE. I desire to ask a parliamentary question. If the previous question be sustained, cannot the resolution be afterward amended by unanimous consent so as to apply to the Mississippi river at and below the city of Keokuk?

The SPEAKER. If the previous question should be sustained, it will exhaust itself upon the substitute. The question will then be upon ordering the joint resolution to be engrossed and read the third time; and it will then be open for amendment, unless the House should order the previous question.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes sixty-four, noes not counted.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was ordered, which was upon agreeing to the substitute.

The substitute was agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK. I have a proposition which I do not know to be pertinent, but I ask that it may be read for information.

Mr. RAUM. I do not yield for that. I call for the previous question.

On seconding the previous question, there were—ayes 46, noes 31; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER, under the rule, ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. PRICE and Mr. STONE.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 71, noes 33.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the joint resolution, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. GARFIELD. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the joint resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 80, nays 23, not voting 92; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Arnell, Bailey, Banks, Beatty, Benjamin, Blair, Boles, Bromwell, Calk, Cobb, Coburn, Culom, Dawes, Driggs, Eliot, Farnsworth, Ferry, Halsey, Hamilton, Hawkins, Higby, Hinds, Hopkins, Chester D. Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Julian, Kelley, Kelsey, Kitchen, Koontz, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Logan, Loughridge, Lynch, Mallory, Marvin, Maynard, McCarthy, McClurg, Mercer, Miller, Moore, Moorhead, Mullins, Nunn, O'Neill, Paine, Perham, Peters, Pike, Pile, Plants, Poland, Price, Raum, Roots, Schenck, Shanks, Smith, Spalding, Aaron F. Stevens, Stokes, Taylor, Thomas, Trowbridge, Twichell, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, Thomas Williams, William Williams, and Woodbridge—80.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Boutwell, Benjamin F. Butler, Sidney Clarke, Delano, Donnelly, Garfield, Hooper, Hubbard, Jenckes, Judd, Orth, Pomeroy, Sawyer, Stewart, Stone, William B. Washburn, James F. Wilson, and Windom—23.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Delos R. Ashley, Axtell, Barnes, Barnum, Beaman, Beck, Benton, Bingham, Blaine, Boyer, Brooks, Broomall, Buckland, Burr, Roderick R. Butler, Cary, Chanter, Churchill, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Cornell, Covode, Dixon, Dodge, Eckley, Eggleston, Eldridge, Ferriss, Fields, Finney, Fox, Geitz, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Gravelly, Griswold, Grover, Haight, Harding, Hill, Holman, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Humphrey, Johnson, Jones, Kerr, Ketcham, Knott, Lufin, Lincoln, Marshall, McCormick, McCullough, McKee, Morrell, Morrissey, Mungen, Myers, Newcomb, Niblack, Nicholson, Phelps, Polley, Pruyn, Raudall, Robertson, Robinson, Ross, Scofield, Selye, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Starkweather, Thaddeus Stevens, Taber, Taffe, John Trimble, Lawrence S. Trimble, Van Aernam, Van Aiken, Van Trump, Van Wyck, Ward, Welker, John T. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Wood, and Woodward—92.

So the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. RAUM moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The title was amended so as to read as follows: "A joint resolution in reference to the construction of bridges over the Ohio river."

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, one of its clerks, requesting the return of House bill No. 554, making a grant of land to the State of Minnesota to aid in the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi river, which passed the Senate July 3, with an amendment.

It also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 445) for the relief of Timothy Lyden, of Parkersburg, West Virginia; A bill (H. R. No. 1069) for the relief of Charles B. Tanner, late first lieutenant sixty-ninth Pennsylvania volunteers; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1325) for the relief of Benjamin B. French, late Commissioner of Public Buildings.

It also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the House of the following titles, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 1068) to provide for certain claims against the Department of Agriculture; and

A bill (H. R. No. 869) prescribing an oath of office to be taken by persons from whom legal disabilities shall have been removed.

It also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 102) providing for the formation of corporations, and regulating the same in the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. No. 355) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri river, upon the military reservation at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas;

A bill (S. No. 550) for the relief of Robert Ford;

A bill (S. No. 491) to provide for the appointment of a recorder of deeds in the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. No. 535) to reward the services of Matthew Low, of Nassau, New Providence;

A bill (S. No. 555) authorizing the allowance of the claim of the State of Minnesota to lands for the support of a State university; and

A bill (S. No. 236) in addition to the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington, Alexandria, and Georgetown Steam-Packet Company.

It also announced that a message had been received from the President of the United States, that he had, on the 25th of June, 1868, approved and signed the following bills:

An act (S. No. 426) for the relief of Thomas Crossley;

An act (S. No. 184) granting a pension to Mrs. Ann Corcoran;

An act (S. No. 450) relative to filing reports of railroad companies;

An act (S. No. 425) granting a pension to George Bennett;

An act (S. No. 280) granting a pension to Michael Hennessy, of Platte county, Missouri;

An act (S. No. 164) to provide for appeals from the Court of Claims, and for other purposes;

An act (S. No. 377) to change the times of holding the district and circuit courts of the United States in the several districts in the State of Tennessee;

An act (S. No. 216) to amend an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific railroad in California, to Portland, in Oregon; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 134) authorizing a change of mail service between Fort Abercrombie and Helena.

The message also announced that the bill (S. No. 534) relating to contested elections in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, having been presented to the President of the United States on the 16th of June, 1868, and not having been approved by him or returned to the Senate, in which it originated, within ten days, (Sundays excepted,) had become a law under the Constitution of the United States.

AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Governor of North Carolina, inclosing the ratification by the State Legislature of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Reconstruction, and ordered to be printed.

UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a memorial of the board of regents of the University of Wisconsin, in relation to the official position of the military officer detailed for military instruction at said university; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CREDENTIALS OF NORTH CAROLINA MEMBERS.

Mr. PAINE. I rise to a question of privilege. I have here the credentials of five of the members-elect from the State of North Carolina, to wit: John R. French, of the first district; Oliver H. Dockey, of the third; John T. Dewesse, of the fourth; Nathaniel Boyden, of the sixth; and Alexander H. Jones, of the seventh. I send them to the Clerk's desk, and move that they be referred to the Committee of Elections.

The credentials were accordingly referred to the Committee of Elections.

GRANT OF LAND TO MINNESOTA.

The SPEAKER. The Senate have asked for the return of the Senate amendments to House bill No. 554, making a grant of land to the State of Minnesota to aid in the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi river.

No objection being made, the amendments were returned to the Senate.

REMOVAL OF LEGAL DISABILITIES.

Mr. DAWES. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table a bill which has just come from the Senate (H. R. No. 869) to prescribe an oath of office to be taken by persons from whom legal disabilities shall have been removed, for the purpose of moving to concur in the amendments of the Senate with an amendment.

No objection being made, the amendments of the Senate were taken up for consideration and were reported as follows:

In line three strike out "has" and insert "have." In line seven, after the word "thereon," insert the words "instead of the oath prescribed by the act of July 2, 1862."

Mr. DAWES. I move that the House concur in the amendments with an amendment striking out the words "and no other," because there are general officers to whom a prescribed oath is necessary after all.

The amendments of the Senate, as amended, were concurred in.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TREATY WITH THE CHOCTAWS.

Mr. WINDOM, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 1195) to carry into effect certain treaty stipulations with the Choctaw nation or tribe of Indians; which was ordered to be printed with the accompanying report, and recommitted to the committee.

RESUMPTION OF SPECIE PAYMENTS.

Mr. LYNCH, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1364) to provide for a gradual resumption of specie payments; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. LYNCH. I move that the bill be printed, postponed, and made the special order for the second Tuesday in December next.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, objected, but subsequently withdrew his objection; and the bill was ordered to be printed, postponed, and made the special order for the second Tuesday in December next.

Mr. LYNCH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was postponed and made the special order; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ANTHONY BUCHER.

Mr. MAYNARD. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has now commenced, and the Committee of Claims, according to the order of the House, is entitled to this morning hour.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1326) for the relief of Anthony Bucher, reported from the Committee of Claims by Mr. HARDING, and pending at the expiration of the last morning hour.

The bill was read. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to investigate, and if, in his opinion, it shall appear proper, issue to Anthony Bucher a Treasury note for fifty dollars, to supply such a note as shall appear to have been destroyed by fire, and belonging to him, in the summer of 1867.

The question being put on the passage of the bill, there were—ayes 36, noes 16; no quorum voting.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, there are not more than one or two gentlemen, I apprehend, who will vote against this bill if they understand it. In this case the fact that the remains of the bills were identified is not disputed. But in transporting them to Washington the remains of the fifty-dollar bill became so much broken up that when they got to the Department the officers there could identify the three five dollar bills, so that they issued three to take the places of those destroyed, but could only identify parts of the fifty-dollar bill, and not enough to authorize them to issue a new bill in place of it. The committee examined all the evidence in the case. The bill belonged to the wife of a poor soldier, and had been sent home by him while in the service. The evidence shows that the bill was identified by witnesses after the fire, but in transportation it got so broken up that the Department did not see fit to issue a new bill. Under the circumstances we report that fifty dollars be allowed in this case. In no case has the committee reported favorably on such a claim where they had not evidence that the bill destroyed had been identified. Under these circumstances no person can object to allowing relief.

The bill was passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

H. D. M'KINNEY.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, from the Committee of Claims, reported back, with the recommendation that it do not pass, the bill (S. No. 476) for the relief of H. D. McKinney; and the same was laid on the table.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, from the same committee, reported adversely on the petition of Mary E. Low; and the same was laid on the table.

Mr. MERCUR, from the same committee, reported adversely on the petitions of R. E. Fennell, of Frankfort, Kentucky, and T. W. Campbell; and the same were laid on the table.

MARK HOWARD.

Mr. MERCUR, from the same committee, reported back with an amendment in the nature of a substitute the bill (H. R. No. 89) authorizing the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to settle and adjust the accounts of Mark Howard, as collector of internal revenue, first district of Connecticut.

The substitute was read, as follows:

That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to adjust and settle the accounts of Mark Howard as collector of the first revenue district of Connecticut, in conformity with the revenue laws in force at the time he was collector of said district.

The substitute was agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MERCUR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PAY OF VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. COBB, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 299) for the relief of certain honorably discharged soldiers of the volunteer forces of the Union Army.

The joint resolution was read. It provides that the third section of an act of Congress entitled "An act to increase the pay of the privates in the regular Army and in the volunteer service of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 6, 1861, shall be construed to mean that every private of volunteers entitled under and by virtue of the proclamations of the President and the General Orders of the War Department, Nos. 15 and 25, dated respectively May 4 and May 25, 1861, issued in accordance therewith, prior to July 22, 1861, the date of the passage of the act entitled "An act to authorize the employment of volunteers to aid in enforcing the laws and protecting public property," shall be entitled to, and be paid, the allowance of $100 provided by said general orders in all cases where said privates were honorably discharged or mustered out of service by competent authority.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I did not expect that my colleague on the committee would report that bill to-day. It is not a private bill. I hope he will withdraw it until the committee is called for public bills.

Mr. COBB. I understood that this morning hour was given to the Committee of Claims without reservation or restriction.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour of Friday, to which the Committee of Claims was entitled for reports of a private nature, was postponed until to-day. The Committee of Claims were entitled to two morning hours for private business, one of them being the morning hour of Friday last, and it was postponed until to-day.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope that bill will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. COBB. I ask unanimous consent to have the bill considered at this time.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must waive his objection to the present consideration of this bill, in order that it may be before the House to be referred.

Mr. GARFIELD. I object to the present consideration of this bill.

Mr. COBB. Then I give notice that on all proper occasions I will press this bill upon the consideration of the House. I think the Committee on Military Affairs might see that this is a simple act of justice, carrying out the proclamations of the President of the United States, and the orders of the War Department made in strict pursuance of those proclamations. But the objection being made, that act of justice must be foregone for the present.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not know what the bill is; but it seems to me that it should go to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. COBB. In reply to that I will say that I offered this as an amendment to the bounty bill which was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] suggested that if I would have it and the papers accompanying it printed in the Globe the Committee on Military Affairs would have an opportunity to examine it, and would be ready to pronounce upon it.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. HAMLIN, one of its Clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a bill, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, of the following title:

A bill (S. No. 417) to amend an act entitled "An act proposing to the State of Texas the establishment of her northern and western boundaries, the relinquishment by the said State of all territory claimed by her exterior to said boundaries, and of all her claims upon the United States, and to establish a territorial government for New Mexico."

CAPTAIN THOMAS W. MILLER.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1865) for the relief of Captain Thomas W. Miller; which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill, which was read at length, directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Captain Thomas W. Miller, late captain and acting aid to Brigadier General L. Cutler, late of the Army of the Potomac, the sum of $529 88, in full for military services from the 13th of May to the 7th of August, 1863, inclusive, and for private horse killed in action at the battle of Gettysburg.

Mr. COBB. I call the previous question.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Let the report be read.

The report was read.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I have no objection to this bill, except the portion of it that provides for the payment of the horse. I believe the Government has not yet entered upon the policy of paying for all the horses killed or lost during the war, and which belonged to private parties. I think we should hesitate before making this an isolated case.

Mr. COBB. I cannot yield for discussion now. I insist upon the call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COBB moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

N. A. SHUTTLEWORTH.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee of Claims, also reported back, with a recommendation that the same do pass, House bill No. 284, for the relief of N. A. Shuttleworth, of Harrison county, West Virginia.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill, which was read at length, directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to N. A. Shuttleworth, of Harrison county, West Virginia, late captain of third regiment of Virginia volunteers, the sum of $550 65, to reimburse him for the same amount paid by him for the transportation of recruits in 1861.

Mr. COBB. I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COBB moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HEIRS OF JAMES S. PORTER.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee of Claims, also reported back, with a recommendation that the same do pass, House bill No. 255, for the relief of the heirs of James S. Porter, late of Hancock county, West Virginia.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill, which was read at length, directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the heirs of James S. Porter, late of Hancock county, West Virginia, the sum of $895 70, to reimburse them for a like amount of money paid by James S. Porter, in equipping company I, of the first regiment Virginia volunteers, three months' service.

Mr. BLAIR. Is there a report in this case?

Mr. COBB. There is a report.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask that the report be read.

The report was read.

Mr. PRICE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COBB] a single question. I presume the State of West Virginia has never paid this account; but has it not paid parties who have made advances of money of a similar character?

Mr. COBB. I am not well enough informed on that point to answer the gentleman. I presume the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HUBBARD] can answer the inquiry.

Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia. To the best of my knowledge the State of West Virginia has not paid accounts of this kind; that is, claims for this particular three months' service.

Mr. COBB. This is precisely the same kind of disbursements for which a number of the loyal States (my own State and that of the gentleman from Iowa among the number) were reimbursed by the Federal Government.

Mr. PRICE. Yes, but with this difference: my own State, and I presume that of the gentleman from Wisconsin, had settled with the parties who advanced money, and then came to the General Government for reimbursement of those payments. That was the reason I asked why the State of West Virginia had not settled with parties having claims of this character?

Mr. COBB. The only answer to that question is to be found in the anomalous condition of things in West Virginia at the time these claims accrued.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COBB moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

J. M. WRIGHT AND OTHERS.

Mr. STOKES, from the Committee of Claims, reported adversely upon the petition of J. M. Wright and others, praying reimbursement to the representatives of Brigadier General George Wright, United States Army, for $6,500 in Government bonds, alleged to have been lost by shipwreck; which was laid on the table.

KENTUCKY UNIVERSITY.

Mr. STOKES also, from the Committee of Claims, reported adversely upon the claim of the Kentucky University at Lexington, Kentucky, for reimbursement for the destruction by fire of the medical college attached to the university, while used by the United States as a hospital; which was laid on the table.

MRS. SARAH HUTCHINS

Mr. STOKES also, from the Committee of Claims, reported adversely upon the claim of Mrs. Sarah Hutchins, for reimbursement for property destroyed by the United States Army.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. HOPKINS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (S. No. 505) to amend section five of an act entitled "An act concerning the registering and recording of ships or vessels," approved December 31, 1792; when the Speaker signed the same.

CAPTAIN A. G. OLIVER.

Mr. STOKES, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1866) for the relief of Captain A. G. Oliver; which was read a first and second time.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Captain A. G. Oliver, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,010, the amount of Government funds stolen from him the 13th of May, 1864.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I make the point of order that this bill, being an appropriation bill, must be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. STOKES. I ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENJAMIN] to withdraw that point for a moment and let the report be read. A number of cases of a similar character to this have been acted upon favorably by this House during the present Congress.

Mr. BENJAMIN. We have no proper opportunity to examine, amend, or debate these bills in the House; and I think they should go to the Committee of the Whole in accordance with the rule.

THE SPEAKER. The point of order necessarily refers the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. It will, with the report, be ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL TIBBETTS.

Mr. STOKES, from the same committee, reported back House bill No. 396, for the relief of Samuel Tibbetts, with the recommendation that it do not pass.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $200, being for money paid by Mr. Tibbetts for the entry of land on which he had before entered a land warrant, and which land warrant before the patent issued had been lost by the officers of the land office.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I should like to have some explanation of that bill.

Mr. STOKES. I will explain it in a few moments. Mr. Tibbetts first entered a land warrant upon a certain portion of land, one hundred and sixty acres, but he was afterward informed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office that the land warrant was defective. He then purchased two land warrants for eighty acres each and entered one hundred and sixty acres with them. The duplicate certificate he furnished, and it is in possession of the House. The original certificate was never returned to the Commissioner of the General Land Office. Consequently, when he was called upon to issue a patent for the land he could not do it because the original certificate had not been returned. Tibbetts sold the land to Smith; but Smith, on applying for the grant, was informed that the grant could not be made until $200 were paid. Smith paid $200. Tibbetts refunded $200, and he was recommended to come to Congress for relief. It is a plain case, and the committee have therefore reported a bill for his relief.

Mr. BENJAMIN. It is a plain case, I think, that the bill ought not to pass. He has the right to the land warrants under the law, and he has his remedy in recovering them.

Mr. STOKES. I will reply to the gentleman from Missouri, that if Mr. Tibbetts had lost the land warrants he could then have gone and obtained new ones. But, sir, he never lost the land warrants. He entered them at the land office. The agent at the land office himself proves that Tibbetts did enter the land with two land warrants, but that by some mishap the certificate was never returned to the General Land Office. The Commissioner, therefore, declared that under the law he cannot do otherwise than take the $200. If Tibbetts had lost the land warrants then there is no doubt he would have his remedy.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Does the gentleman say that these land warrants have been lost?

Mr. STOKES. No, sir; they were entered upon the land at the time, two land warrants for eighty acres each, but the certificate was never returned to the Commissioner of the General Land Office. For that reason he cannot obtain relief at any other place than Congress.

Mr. BENJAMIN. The general law provides a remedy for all these things.

Mr. STOKES. I had the law and examined it carefully; and, sir, the Commissioner of the General Land Office agrees he cannot get relief except from Congress.

Mr. DELANO. I hope this bill will not pass without further explanation.

Mr. STOKES. I think it is a perfectly clear case. In the first place Mr. Tibbetts entered one hundred and sixty acres of land with a land warrant, but the Commissioner of the General Land Office informed him there was some defect about the land warrant. He then purchased two land warrants of eighty acres each, and entered them at the Des Moines land office. He received his certificate, but the original certificate was never returned to the General Land Office. Tibbetts sold to Smith, but when Smith came to apply for a patent the Commissioner told him it could not be given until the return of the original certificate.

Mr. DELANO. Are the land warrants still in existence, or have they been canceled?

Mr. STOKES. They were entered at the Land Office.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Is there any controversy between the parties?

Mr. STOKES. No, sir.

Mr. DELANO. If the land warrants are not canceled are they still in existence?

Mr. STOKES. The duplicate certificates of entry will prevent their ever being entered upon any other land. This man is entitled to relief; and I demand the previous question.

HENRY B. ST. MARIE.

Mr. STOKES, from the same committee, reported a joint resolution (H. R. No. 326) for the relief of Henry B. St. Marie; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution directs the Secretary of State to pay out of the civil service fund of his Department the sum of $10,000 to Henry B. St. Marie, for services and information on the arrest of John H. Surratt in the kingdom of Italy, charged with the crime of conspiracy and murder.

Mr. STOKES. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STOKES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GEORGE KAISER.

Mr. STOKES, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1367) for the relief of George Kaiser; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the applicant $181.50 for labor and material furnished in building a hospital at Parkersburg, West Virginia, in 1861.

Mr. STOKES. I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STOKES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHARLES C. O'NEILL.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, from the Committee of Claims, reported adversely on the bill (H. R. No. 477) for the relief of Charles C. O'Neill; which was laid on the table.

JAMES HOOPER.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, from the same committee, moved to take up from the Private Calendar the bill (S. No. 436) for the relief of James Hooper.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to James Hooper the sum of $16,000, being the value of his vessel, the bark General Berry, which was captured and destroyed at sea on the 9th day of July, 1864, while in the military service of the United States, by the rebel steamer Florida.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I wish to say that this claim was before the Committee of Claims of the last Congress, received a very thorough examination by the chairman, [Mr. DELANO,] was reported by the committee, and passed the House almost unanimously, but for want of time it did not pass the Senate. The bill which comes before the House now has passed the Senate, has been before the Committee of Claims, and has been passed upon by them.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I would like to have enunciated the principle upon which these claims are to be paid.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. The law provides that when a vessel in the Government employ has been destroyed by the enemy the Government shall pay for it. In this case the vessel went from New York to Fortress Monroe and was attacked by the Florida and destroyed. It was not supposed at the time that there was any danger. Provision was made in the contract by which the vessel was chartered that war risks only from Fortress Monroe up the James river should be taken by the Government. When the parties saw that, they demurred, and said they understood the Government was to take the war risk all the way. The quartermaster said there was no war risk to Fortress Monroe, and never was; but if there was any difficulty he supposed the Government would settle it. The party accordingly accepted the contract, and it was entered upon the charter in that way. But being entered in that way the settlement of the claim was refused. This is the only instance of the kind. In regard to all other vessels that passed from New York to Fortress Monroe a settlement was made on the ground that there were war risks given.

Mr. DELANO. I desire to ask the gentleman whether the officers who rejected the account did not say that they did it on technical grounds, admitting that the claim was a meritorious one and recommending legislation on the subject?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. Yes, sir, they recommended the passage of a bill to meet the case. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CAPTURE OF JEFFERSON DAVIS.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, from the Committee of Claims, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 1277) to provide for the distribution of the reward offered by the President of the United States for the capture of Jefferson Davis.

Mr. UPSON. That bill makes an appropriation, and I think it should be referred to a Committee of the Whole House.

THE SPEAKER. If the gentleman makes that point, the Clerk will read the bill in full, and the Chair will see if it contains an appropriation.

Mr. UPSON. I do. I desire to have the matter debated somewhat.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the reward of $100,000 offered for the capture of Jefferson Davis by the President of the United States in his proclamation of May 2, 1865, shall be paid as follows: to James H. Wilson, of the State of Illinois, late major general of volunteers, $3,000; to Benjamin D. Pritchard, of the State of Michigan, late lieutenant colonel of the fourth Michigan cavalry, $3,000; to Henry Harnden, of the State of Wisconsin, late lieutenant colonel of the first Wisconsin cavalry, $3,000; to Joseph A. O. Yeoman, of the State of Iowa, late captain of the first Ohio cavalry, $3,000; and to the following officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates, in proportion to the monthly pay proper to which they were respectively entitled by law in the grades which they held at the time of said capture—

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I suggest that it is not necessary to read all the names. There are some two or three hundred of them.

The SPEAKER. The bill contains an appropriation. The third section provides "that the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated to carry this act into effect." It must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. Well, if the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Urson] wishes to make that motion and take the responsibility of defeating the bill, the Committee of Claims have no feeling about it. I simply wish to state that the committee acted upon this bill at the last Congress and were unanimous in their report, and the committee of this Congress are also unanimous in their report. It is a question that we have had a good deal of trouble about, and we should like to have the House dispose of it. But if the House sees fit to reject the bill, or if the gentleman from Michigan—who is as much interested as any member of the House—wishes to move to lay it on the table or to send it to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar or to destroy it in any manner, I am perfectly willing he should do so.

Mr. UPSON. My object is to have the matter fairly understood by the House and debated.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state that the bill is not before the House. The point of order made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Urson] has referred the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of considering the bill in the House. I think it ought to pass.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I am willing to allow the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Urson] time to discuss the bill.

Mr. UPSON. Well, but the gentleman's time is limited, and my colleagues desire to be heard on this question as well as myself.

The question was put on the motion to suspend the rules, and there were—ayes 50, noes 19; no quorum voting.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I hope gentlemen will allow the bill to come before the House, and if they are not satisfied with it let it be voted down.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I call for tellers on the motion to suspend the rules.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, and URSON were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 71, noes 28.

Before the result was announced,

Mr. BLAIR called for the yeas and nays on suspending the rules.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was again taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 81, nays 20, not voting 94; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Delos R. Ashley, Bailey, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Beatty, Benton, Boies, Boutwell, Bromwell, Calk, Churchill, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cullison, Dawes, Delano, Donnelly, Eliot, Farnsworth, Griswold, Hamilton, Hawkins, Higby, Hinds, Hooper, Hopkins, Chester D. Hubbard, Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jencks, Judd, Julian, Kelley, Kelsey, Kitcher, Kootz, George V. Lawrence, Logan, Loughridge, Lynch, Marvin, McCarthy, Mercer, Miller, Moorhead, Myers, Nunn, O'Neill, Paine, Perham, Peters, Pile, Plants, Poland, Pomeroy, Price, Rann, Roots, Sawyer, Schenck, Shanks, Smith, Stewart, Stokes, Taffé, Taylor, Thomas, Twichell, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Cadwalader, C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, William Williams, James F. Wilson, and Windsor—81.

NAYS—Messrs. Anderson, Benjamin, Blair, Benjamin F. Butler, Briggs, Ela, Ferry, Grover, William Lawrence, Loan, Mallory, Maynard, McClurg, Moore, Mullins, Orth, Spalding, Stone, Trowbridge, and Upson—20.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arnell, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Barnes, Barnum, Beaman, Beck, Bingham, Blaine, Boyer, Brooks, Broomall, Buckland, Burr, Roderick R. Butler, Cary, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Coburn, Cook, Cornell, Covode, Dixon, Dodge, Eckley, Eggleston, Eldridge, Ferriss, Fields, Finney, Fox, Garfield, Getz, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Gravelly, Haight, Halsey, Harding, Hill, Holman, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. D. Hubbard, Humphrey, Johnson, Jones, Kerr, Ketcham, Knott, Ladin, Lincoln, Marshall, McCormick, McCullough, McKee, Morrell, Morrissey, Mung, Newcomb, Niblack, Nicholson, Phelps, Pike, Polsley, Pruyn, Randall, Robertson, Robinson, Ross, Seofield, Selye, Shellabarger, Sitereaves, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Thaddeus Stevens, Taber, John Trimble, Lawrence S. Trimble, Van Aernam, Van Auken, Van Trump, Van Wyck, Ward, Welker, Thomas Williams, John T. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Wood, Woodbridge, and Woodward—94.

So (two thirds voting in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the bill was before the House.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired, and the bill goes over until the next morning hour for private bills.

IRON-CLADS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in compliance with House resolution of the 2d instant, the report of Captain James B. Eads on the iron-clads of Europe and this country; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PILE submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing, under the law:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the House three thousand copies of the report and drawings of Captain James B. Eads on the iron-clads of Europe and this country, and five hundred copies for the use of the Navy Department.

MRS. NANCY WEEKS.

The SPEAKER. There is a single pension bill on the Speaker's table, for the relief of the widow of a revolutionary soldier. The Chair would ask unanimous consent to have the Senate amendments to that bill disposed of at this time.

The amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 453, increasing the pension of Nancy Weeks, widow of Francis Weeks, were then taken from the Speaker's table.

Mr. LOGAN. I move that the amendments of the Senate be concurred in.

Mr. MAYNARD. I do not like to suspend the case of the old lady, but I think—

The SPEAKER. The Chair will withdraw the request he made to have this bill considered now, not desiring to take up the time of the House. The Chair supposed there would be no objection to it, the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions being in favor of it.

Mr. MAYNARD. I withdraw the point I was going to make.

The amendments of the Senate were then concurred in.

Mr. LOAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The next business in order is the consideration of the report of the Committee of the Whole upon the Senate amendments to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and upon the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. On account of the special request of some gentlemen who are absent, I would rather not take up the deficiency appropriation bill now.

The SPEAKER. The deficiency bill will not come up until after the Senate amendments to the legislative and executive appropriation bill have been disposed of.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Let the deficiency bill go over till next Thursday or Friday.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I take it the House will concur in the action of the Committee of the Whole upon the Senate amendments to the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole upon the tariff bill.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I believe I have the floor. I insist upon the regular order.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the consideration of the report of the Committee of the Whole upon the amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 605, making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1869. The Committee of the Whole recommend concurrence in some of the Senate amendments, non-concurrence in others, and concurrence in some with amendments.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I move that the action of the Committee of the Whole be concurred in; and upon that motion I call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question was upon concurring in the action of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Upon that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and there were twelve in the affirmative.

So (one fifth not voting in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The report of the Committee of the Whole was then concurred in.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I move to reconsider the vote just taken; and I also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I move that a committee of conference be asked upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

REPRESENTATIVES FROM NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. DAWES. The Committee of Elections, to whom were referred the credentials of Hon. John R. French, claiming to be elected a representative from the first congressional district of North Carolina; Hon. John T. Deweese, claiming to be elected a representative from the fourth district of North Carolina, and Hon. Alexander H. Jones, claiming to be elected a representative from the seventh district of North Carolina, have instructed me to report that they find the credentials in due form of law; that nothing has appeared before the committee touching the qualifications of these gentlemen to hold the offices which they claim; and the committee report a recommendation that they be sworn in.

The report of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Messrs. JOHN R. FRENCH, JOHN T. DEWEESE and ALEXANDER H. JONES presented themselves at the Speaker's desk, and were duly qualified by taking the oath prescribed by law.

RESTRICTIONS ON AMERICAN COMMERCE.

Mr. KELLEY, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to :

Resolved, that the President be requested to instruct the minister of the United States to the Sublime Porte to urge on the Government of the Sultan the abolition of all restrictions and charges upon the passage of vessels of war and commerce through the Straits of the Dardanelles and Bosphorus to the Black Sea, and to endeavor to procure the perfect freedom of navigation through those straits to all classes of vessels.

SOLDIERS' BOUNTIES.

Mr. SHANKS, by unanimous consent, submitted the following preamble and resolution; which were read, considered, and, on motion of Mr. GARFIELD, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

Whereas a large number of soldiers entered the service for the term of three years and were mustered out with their regiments by general orders on account of expiration of their term of service, the muster-out taking place a few days short of the three full years, and the pay department rules that under existing laws such persons are not entitled to the $100 additional bounty; and whereas there are stoppages of the payment of additional bounty in many cases for the reason that at some time during their service entries of desertion appear on the rolls against the applicant though there has been no trial or conviction and the soldier has faithfully served out his time and received an honorable discharge; and whereas the act of Congress of February 21, 1868, does not allow the heirs of discharged soldiers the additional bounty if the soldier died prior to the act of July 28, 1868; and whereas soldiers enlisting in 1861 and subsequently, who were discharged before serving two years on account of disabilities contracted in the service, received no original bounty and are not now entitled to additional bounty; and whereas soldiers who enlisted in 1861, 1862, and 1863 for three years, and served over two years, and were discharged to accept promotion, having received the original bounty are now not entitled to any additional bounty; Therefore

Be it resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be hereby instructed to investigate these several above-named subjects of alleged inequalities of the law touching bounties, and if corrections are necessary to the full and equal disposition of justice to all concerned, to report to this House for its action by bill or otherwise.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent to offer a joint resolution.

Mr. VAN HORN, of Missouri. I object.

VACANCIES IN EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. BOUTWELL, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with an amendment in the form of a substitute, a bill (S. No. 352) to authorize the temporary supplying of vacancies in the Executive Department.

The substitute was read. It provides in the first section that in case of the death, resignation, absence or sickness of the head of any Executive Department of the Government, the first or sole assistant thereof shall, unless otherwise directed by the President of the United States as subsequently provided, perform the duties of such head until a successor be appointed or such absence or sickness shall cease.

The second section provides that in case of the death, resignation, absence, or sickness of the chief of any bureau, or of any officer thereof whose appointment is not in the head of an executive Department, the deputy of such chief or of such officer, or if there be no deputy, then the chief clerk of such bureau, shall, unless otherwise directed by the President of the United States as subsequently provided, perform the duties of such chief or of such officer until a successor be appointed or such absence or sickness shall cease.

The third section provides that in case of the cases before mentioned it shall be lawful for the President of the United States, in his discretion, to authorize and direct the head of any other executive Department, or other officer in either of those Departments, whose appointment is, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, vested in the President, to perform the duties of the vacant office until the appointment of a successor, or until the sickness or absence of the incumbent shall cease. But nothing in this act is to authorize such supplying of a vacancy for a longer period than ten days when such vacancy shall have been occasioned by death or resignation; and the officer so performing the duties of the office temporarily vacant is not to be entitled to extra compensation therefor.

The fourth section provides for the repeal of all laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act and of all acts heretofore passed on the subject of temporarily supplying vacancies in the Executive Departments, or which empower the President to authorize any person or persons to perform the duties of the head of any executive Department or of any officer in either of the Departments in case of vacancy therein or inability of such head of a Department or officer to discharge the duties of his office.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. Speaker, this bill was reported by order of the Judiciary Committee. It relates to appointments by the President ad interim, and limits those appointments to ten days, but provides, whenever there is a vacancy in the secretaryship of any of the Departments or in the headship of any of the bureaus by operation of law, that then the person next in office shall take charge and perform the duties; in case of the Secretary, the Assistant Secretary, or in case of the head of a bureau, the chief clerk. The power of the President to appoint a person ad interim is limited to ten days. If he desires to fill the vacancy he can send in the name to the Senate. The bill we propose as a substitute for the Senate bill applies to the bureaus in the various Departments the principle which in the Senate bill is applied to the Departments. This is a fair statement of the purport of the bill; and I now demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the substitute was adopted.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BOUTWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back the amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 818, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1869, and for other purposes, with a report; which were referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, made the special order for to-morrow after the morning hour, and the report ordered to be printed.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I am not well, and before leaving the House I desire to make some arrangement in reference to the deficiency appropriation bill. I move that its further consideration be postponed until Friday next. There are two amendments which I wish to offer. One is the appropriation for payments to the city of Washington, which was stricken out because of an obnoxious provision. I propose to offer that appropriation again and another amendment, and then let the bill be postponed until Friday next.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I do not think we ought to postpone the deficiency appropriation bill. It can be taken up and acted on at an earlier day, and we ought to get these appropriation bills before committees of conference as soon as possible. If we do it this week we will be ready to adjourn at the end of next week.

One word further. We may as well settle another matter here. There were points of order made on two provisos. One was made by my colleague [Mr. INGERSOLL] in regard to the appropriation to pay for improvements in the city of Washington. I understand he is willing to withdraw his objection so that the proviso shall stand.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I do so in view of the fact that those to whom the money is due are very much in need of it.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection it will be considered as pending with the proviso which was ruled out in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MAYNARD. I object.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Then I ask that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] may take up the bill in order that I may move to suspend the rules for the purpose of adding that proviso to the bill.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I cannot yield for that.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I hope the gentleman will not object. I have consulted the city authorities, and they agree to what I have now stated.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I will give notice, then, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORHEAD] declines to yield, that I shall, as soon as an opportunity offers, move to suspend the rules in order to have that proviso added.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I hope it will be agreed to after my colleague has made his motion.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I move that the rules be suspended and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, with a view of laying aside everything that has precedence of the tariff bill.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. How many bills are there preceding the tariff bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not counted them. Gentlemen can see for themselves by reference to the Calendar.

The question being put on the motion of Mr. MOORHEAD, there were—ayes 56, noes 33; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Messrs. MOORHEAD, and WILSON of Iowa.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 65, noes 36.

So the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DAWES in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of business on the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole.

MEETING OF CONGRESS.

The CHAIRMAN. The first business on the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole is the bill (H. R. No. 81) in regard to the meeting of Congress.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I move to lay aside that bill for the purpose of reaching the tariff bill.

The question being put on the motion of Mr. MOORHEAD, there were—ayes 52, noes 27; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Messrs. MOORHEAD, and WASHBURNE of Illinois.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 65, noes 22; no quorum voting.

Under the rule the roll was then called, and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arnell, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Baldwin, Barnes, Barnum, Bauman, Beck, Bingham, Blaine, Boyer, Brouwell, Brooks, Broomall, Buckland, Burr, Roderick R. Butler, Cary, Chandler, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Cornell, Covode, Dixon, Dodge, Eckley, Eggleston, Eldridge, Ferriss, Fields, Finney, Fox, Getz, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Gravely, Haight, Halsey, Harding, Hawkins, Hill, Holman, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Humphrey, Jones, Kerr, Ketcham, Knott, Laffin, Lincoln, Marshall, McCormick, McCullough, McKee, Morrell, Morrissey, Mungen, Myers, Newcomb, Niblack, Nicholson, Nunn, Phelps, Polesey, Pruyn, Randall, Robertson, Robinson, Ross, Scofield, Seelye, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Starkweather, Stokes, Taber, Thomas, John Trimble, Lawrence S. Trimble, Van Aernam, Van Aiken, Van Trump, Van Wyck, Ward, Welker, John T. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Wood, and Woodward.

The committee then rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. POMEROY reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union having had under consideration House bill No. 81, in regard to the meeting of Congress, and finding itself without a quorum, had directed the roll to be called and the names of the absentees to be reported to the House.

The SPEAKER. One hundred and one members having answered to their names, being one more than a quorum, the committee will resume its session without further question.

The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union accordingly resumed its session, (Mr. DAWES in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN stated that the pending question was on the motion to lay aside the bill (H. R. No. 81) in regard to the meeting of Congress.

The tellers, Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, and Mr. MOORHEAD, resumed their places.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 35; no quorum voting.

Mr. MOORHEAD. As there appears to be a difficulty in getting a quorum, and as the day is very hot, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAWES reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the bill (H. R. No. 81) in regard to the meeting of Congress, and had come to no resolution thereon.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I now move to suspend the rules so as to make it in order for me to offer two amendments to the deficiency bill. The first amendment is in regard to payment for the improvement of streets in Washington, with a proviso repealing the law on that subject; and the second amendment is a proviso which was objected to on Friday by the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. POLAND.] The proviso, which has been modified so as to be satisfactory to the gentleman from Vermont, is for the purpose of putting an end to this practice of Government officers entering into contracts for public buildings without authority of law.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I object. We have not been able to get a quorum to-day to do other business, and I object to going on with this business.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Let these amendments come in so as to be pending and then we will adjourn.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I want to have the tariff bill pending.

The SPEAKER. That could not be pending in the House.

Mr. MOORHEAD. Well, I withdraw the objection.

The question was taken on Mr. WASHBURNE'S motion, and there were ayes 67, noes 11; no quorum voting.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken and there were—ayes 36, noes 51.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question was then taken on Mr. WASHBURNE'S motion; and there were yeas 97, nays 9, not voting 92; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Bailey, Baker, Beatty, Benjamin, Benton, Blair, Boies, Boutwell, Benjamin F. Butler, Calkins, Churchill, Sidney Clarke, Coburn, Cullom, Dawes, Delano, Deweese, Donnelly, Driggs, Ella Eliot, Farnsworth, Ferry, French, Garfield, Griswold, Halsey, Hamilton, Hawkins, Higby, Hinds, Hooper, Hopkins, Hubbard, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Alexander H. Jones, Judd, Julian, Kelley, Kelsey, Kitchen, Koonce, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Loughridge, Lynch, McCarthy, McClurg, Mercer, Miller, Moore, Moorhead, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Peters, Pike, Pile, Plants, Poland, Pomerooy, Price, Raum, Roots, Sawyer, Schenck, Shanks, Smith, Spalding, Aaron F. Stevens, Thaddeus Stevens, Stewart, Stokes, Taffa, Taylor, Thomas, Trowbridge, Twichell, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Cadywalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, William Williams, James F. Wilson, and Woodbridge—97.

NAYS—Messrs. Cobb, Grover, Chester D. Hubbard, Mallory, Marvin, Maynard, Mullins, Stone, and Windom—9.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arnell, Atwell, Baldwin, Banks, Barnes, Barnum, Beaman, Beck, Bingham, Blaine, Boyer, Brownell, Brooks, Broomall, Buckland, Burr, Roderick R. Butler, Cary, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Cornell, Covady, Dixon, Dodge, Eckley, Eggleston, Eldridge, Ferriss, Fields, Finney, Fox, Getz, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Gravely, Haight, Harding, Hill, Holman, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Humphrey, Johnson, Thomas L. Jones, Kerr, Ketcham, Knott, Ladin, Lincoln, Logan, Marshall, McCormick, McCullough, McKee, Morrell, Morrissey, Munger, Myers, Newcomb, Niblack, Nicholson, Nunn, Phelps, Polsey, Pruyn, R. M. Hall, Robertson, Robinson, Ross, Scotland, Selvy, Shellabarger, Sigreaves, Starkweather, Taber, John Trimble, Lawrence S. Trinkle, Van Aernam, Van Auken, Van Trump, Van Wyck, Ward, Welker, Thomas Williams, John T. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Wood, and Woodward—92.

So (two thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the amendments were received as pending before the House.

Mr. O'NEILL stated, during the roll-call, that Mr. MYERS was detained at home by indisposition.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I now move to postpone the further consideration of the bill and amendments until Thursday next after the Alaska bill shall be disposed of.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I ask that the two amendments which have just been entertained under a suspension of the rules may be considered adopted.

Mr. COBB. Oh, no; they have not even been read.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I have no objection to those two amendments being considered as adopted.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, they will be so considered.

Mr. MULLINS. I object.

The SPEAKER. The amendments are pending.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I insist on my motion to postpone.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. FERRY. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that motion, to allow me to submit a preamble and resolution, which will give rise to no debate.

Mr. SCHENCK. I will withdraw the motion to adjourn.

OTTOWAS AND CHIPPEWAS OF MICHIGAN.

Mr. FERRY submitted the following preamble and resolution; which were read, considered, and adopted:

Whereas under a treaty made between the United States and the Ottawa and Chippewa Indians of Michigan, concluded July 31, 1855, certain public lands therein described were withdrawn from sale for the benefit of said Indians, and five years granted in which to make selections by the persons entitled thereto; with the further term of five years within which all such lands unappropriated or unselected were then subject to entry, by Indians only, in the usual manner and rate per acre as other adjacent public lands, and that at the expiration of said ten years all lands thus remaining unappropriated or unselected became disposable in the same manner as other public lands of the United States; and whereas, in consequence of the non-payment of stipulated annuities by the Government to said Indians, they were deprived of means to avail themselves of rights now unavailable by limitation; and whereas other citizens, accepting the termination of the period within which such lands were reserved, and by the express terms of said treaty believing that they were then to be subject to entry as other public lands purchased, and under preemption and homestead, entered more or less of said lands; and whereas the reservation of such a tract of valuable and accessible land for over twelve years having greatly retarded settlement, obstructed communication, and materially arrested the industrial growth of that region of the State; Therefore, to finally adjust and equitably distribute rights and interests involved and fully restore to market the remainder of such reservations as lie within the fourth congressional district of said State.

Be it resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands are hereby instructed to examine into the expediency of submitting a plan for such final adjustment upon the following basis, to wit: that the Commissioner of the General Land Office be authorized to issue patents for all lands appropriated for or selected by Indians under said treaty and for other purchases by regular entry, and to confirm to settlers all such lands to which bona fide preemption or homestead rights have attached up to this date, and the then residue of such reservations to be offered at public sale, of which due notice be given, and thereafter at private entry, but in no case sold at a less minimum than $2 50 per acre, the proceeds thereof to be disposed of as follows: one half to be equitably distributed to the Indian claimants under said treaty, within said district, and the other half to be appropriated toward the construction of a lake-shore railroad traversing and extending along the shore of said congressional district in the lower peninsula, and that the committee report by bill or otherwise.

NIGHT SESSION FOR PENSION BILLS.

Mr. MILLER. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the following resolution at this time:

Resolved, That there be a session of this House on Wednesday evening next, to consider reports from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will inform the gentleman that the Committee of Elections have notified the House that they intend to call up two contested-election cases from Missouri on Wednesday next.

Mr. MILLER. I will change the time to Thursday evening next.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Let the resolution provide that the business of that session shall be limited to the consideration of pension bills.

Mr. MILLER. Very well; I modify my resolution so as to provide for a session on Thursday evening next, to be confined to the consideration of reports from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The resolution, as modified, was then agreed to by unanimous consent.

CIVIL SERVICE BILL.

Mr. JENCKES. I ask unanimous consent that it be ordered that the civil service bill shall be taken up for consideration immediately after the House shall have disposed of the appropriation bills which have just been postponed.

Mr. COBB and Mr. KELSEY objected.

Mr. JENCKES. I move that the rules be suspended, and that it be ordered that the civil service bill be taken up for consideration as soon as the pending appropriations bills shall have been disposed of.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman will include in his motion all the appropriation bills. I am in favor of the civil service bill, but I do not want it to antagonize with the appropriation bills.

Mr. JENCKES. I do not intend that it shall. I will modify my motion in accordance with the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURNE.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair begs leave to state that it will be difficult to tell when the bill will be reached.

Mr. COBB. There are some of us who are opposed at any and at all times to taking up bills out of their regular order.

Mr. SCHENCK. I would ask the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. JENCKES] to except the tax bill, also, should it come back from the Senate before the appropriation bills are all disposed of.

Mr. JENCKES. I will agree to that. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the civil service bill be assigned for consideration in the House as soon as the appropriation bills shall have been disposed of, and also the tax bill, should it come back from the Senate before the appropriation bills have been disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot tell when the bill will be reached. However, the House has heard the motion of the gentleman, and it is for members to decide.

The question was then taken upon the motion to suspend the rules; and upon a division there were—ayes 51, noes 38; no quorum voting.

Mr. JENCKES. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to suspend the rules.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move that the House now adjourn.

The question was taken upon the motion to adjourn; and upon a division there were—ayes 51, noes 36.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas: A memorial of W. R. Laughlin, for himself and on behalf of settlers on the Cherokee neutral lands in Kansas, praying that they may be protected in the right to acquire a title to the lands they occupy under the preëmption laws of the United States.

By Mr. GROVER: The petition of Patrick Cody, of Louisville, Kentucky, for pension.

By Mr. LAWRENCE, of Pennsylvania: The petition of citizens of French descent, for the adoption of the postal system for the transmission of money from the United States to France.

By Mr. LOGAN: Petitions for pensions from John Hines, private company H, twenty-sixth Illinois volunteers; Joseph Fiedler, sergeant major Thielman's battalion Illinois cavalry; Andrew J. Cornelison, private company G, fifty-sixth Illinois volunteers; Edmund H. Winters, private company A, thirty-first Illinois volunteers.

Also, additional papers in the case of Thomas Mason, petitioner for pension.

Also, petition for passage of a bill granting invalid pensions withheld from March 3, 1865, to June 6, 1866.

Also, the petitions of J. C. Bradley, of Alabama, and George Alcorn, of Mississippi, asking for removal of political disabilities.

By Mr. SAWYER: A resolution of the Board of Regents of the State University of Wisconsin, relating to officers of the United States Army detailed for military instruction in the universities and colleges of the different States.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, July 7, 1868.

Prayer by Rev. E. H. GRAY, D. D.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 396) for the relief of Samuel Tibbetts was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 326) for the relief of Henry B. St. Marie was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MORGAN presented a memorial of citizens of New York, protesting against the ratification or confirmation by Congress of any conveyance of any part of the Yosemite valley by the State of California to individuals; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. HOWE. I present the petition of the board of regents of the University of Wisconsin, asking for a change of the law so that officers in the Army detailed for the purpose of military instruction in the colleges and universities in different parts of the country may be allowed, when on that service, the same pay as when on military duty. I move the reference of this petition to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia; and I take occasion to say that I wish that committee would attend to the subject, for I think the prayer of the petition is eminently just.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER presented a petition of persons, former slaves of William D. V. Downing, of Louisiana, praying for aid to relieve him from the deprivations of extreme poverty; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 444) granting lands to the State of Nevada to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific railroad to the Colorado river, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HOWE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. L. T. Potter, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 596) for the relief of Mrs. L. T. Potter.

The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. VAN WINKLE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Rebecca C. Meeker, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 597) granting a pension to Rebecca C. Meeker. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Mary Scott, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 598) for the relief of Mary Scott. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1813) granting an increase of pension to Sarah Hackleman, widow of Brigadier General Pleasant A. Hackleman, moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 527) for the relief of the widow of Colonel T. B. Ransom, and mother of the late brevet Major General T. E. G. Ransom, moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following petitions, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to:

The petition of John H. Finlay;

The petition of Brevet Lieutenant A. Liebschutz;

The petition of Washington J. F. Martin; and The petition of Mrs. Rehuma Brown.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the petition of Lewis John and the petition of Barney Carney, asked to be discharged from their further consideration, and that they be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the petition of Elizabeth S. Lathrop and the petition of Louisa J. Simpson, reported adversely, and moved their indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1119) for the registration or enrollment of certain foreign vessels, reported it without amendment.

BILL RECOMMITTED.

On motion of Mr. DRAKE, the bill (H. R. No. 941) to amend certain acts in relation to the Navy and Marine corps was recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. ROSS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 599) granting a pension to Mary Pearce; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CONKLING asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. No. 155) regulating representation in the Electoral College; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. FESSENDEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 1341) making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 1046) making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

SETTLEMENT OF ENGINEERS' ACCOUNTS.

Mr. WILSON. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up House joint resolution No. 154, and put it on its passage. It is a small matter, but a very important one.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the joint resolution will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A joint resolution (H. R. No. 154) in relation to the settlement of the accounts of certain officers and agents who have disbursed public moneys under the direction of the chief of engineers."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object until I can hear it read, as I asked for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read through.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury in the settlement of the accounts of Captain George W. Cullum, Captain James B. McPherson, Captain Charles E. Blunt, and Lieutenant John C. Palfrey, of the corps of engineers, to allow to the credit of Captain Cullum the amount receipted for to him by Charles H. Bigelow; to the credit of Captain James B. McPherson and Captain C. E. Blunt the amounts receipted for to them respectively by Abiel W. Tinkham; and to the credit of Lieutenant John C. Palfrey the amount receipted for to him by John J. Lee; and to the credit of John J. Lee the amount receipted for to him by L. H. Eaton; but Charles H. Bigelow, Abiel W. Tinkham, John J. Lee, and L. H. Eaton are each to be held to the same accountability to the United States for the amounts transferred to them, respectively, at the time of transfer, and for advances made to them from the Treasury, as was at the time of transfer required by law and regulations from officers of the corps of engineers. This authority is to have no further application than to such accounts as have been already examined and approved by the chief of engineers, and are found to contain a full and satisfactory accounting for all the public money which came into their hands, namely: C. H. Bigelow, $38,351 74; J. J. Lee, $8,508 95; A. W. Tinkham, $12,910 13; L. H. Eaton, $90 85, all of which money has been expended upon the fortifications of the States of Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Maine.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT JUDGES IN CIRCUIT COURTS.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 449.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 449) to revive and continue in force the act of the 29th of July, 1850, and the act amendatory thereof of the 2d of April, 1852, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on the Judiciary reported the bill, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause, in the following words:

That the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for holding of the courts of the United States in case of sickness or other disability of the judges of the district court," passed July 29, 1850, and an act amendatory of the same, passed April 2, 1852, be, and the same are hereby revived, and to continue in full force and effect from and after this.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for holding the courts of the United States in case of the sickness or other disability of the judges of the district courts," passed July 29, 1850, except the fifth section thereof, and an act amendatory of the same, passed April 2, 1852, be, and the same are hereby declared to be in full force and effect.

Mr. TRUMBULL. As the bill refers to former acts without setting them out I will state what it is. It is a bill that authorizes the justices of the Supreme Court under certain circumstances to call in judges of district courts from other districts. There is a question in the minds of some whether the passage of a law a year ago regulating the salaries of judges of the United States courts and repealing so much of the former acts recited in this bill as authorized pay to the district judges who were called in out of their districts did not repeal the rest of the law and take away the power of the justices of the Supreme Court to call in judges from the other districts. The object of this bill is simply to declare that that power exists, but to repeal specifically that clause which authorized extra compensation. That is all there is of it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will inquire if there was a law providing extra compensation for a district judge when he performed circuit court duties which this bill proposes to repeal?

Mr. TRUMBULL. There was such a law formerly, but that law was repealed a year ago when we increased the salaries of the district judges. We then repealed expressly the law that authorized any extra compensation to be made to a district judge who performed services out of his district.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will inquire of my friend whether there was any law authorizing extra compensation? Was it anything more than the actual expenses?

Mr. TRUMBULL. That is extra compensation. That was the form of the law, compensation in the way of expenses.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If they were called into another district they were paid the actual expenses incurred in the performance of that duty.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Their expenses were allowed them, about ten dollars a day or something like that, ordinarily; but a year ago we added to the salaries of the district judges, increasing most of them from $2,000 to $3,500, and when that increase of salary was made, the law authorizing the payment of expenses, if you please to put it in that form, to judges called out of their districts, was repealed expressly; and now when a judge performs duty outside of his district his expenses are not paid by the United States. But some of the justices of the Supreme Court had doubts whether the authority to call a judge out of his district was not also repealed by implication when we repealed that portion of the law allowing him his expenses. In order to make that certain, about which I do not think there is now any uncertainty, but others think differently, this bill is introduced by which so much of the law as authorizes a judge of a district court to be called out of his district under certain circumstances is declared to be in full force. That is all there is of this bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. The bill is rendered necessary by a doubt entertained by the judge for the circuit embracing the State of New York, Mr. Justice Nelson. He is of the opinion, and he has been acting upon the correctness of that opinion, that he cannot now call any judge out of the particular district in which he may be holding a circuit court, to discharge the duties of a judge within the district of New York. The original authority was given in terms, and it provided that the judge who was so called was to be paid his expenses, I think not to exceed ten dollars a day. That being repealed, Mr. Justice Nelson supposed that the authority to call upon a judge to perform such duty was also repealed. Whether he is right or wrong in that opinion—I concur with the chairman of our committee that he is in error—is immaterial. He honestly thinks such is the effect of the law which we have passed, and the result is, the business of New York is suffering very much. That will be corrected by the bill proposed by the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think this bill ought to be amended so as to provide that when district judges are requested to go out of their districts to hold a circuit court, and they go in compliance with that request, they shall have their necessary expenses paid, notwithstanding the alleged increase of salaries. The district judge of the State of Oregon, for two successive years, has been to San Francisco, and held the circuit court there, in the absence of Judge Field, spending some two or three months at a time in holding that circuit court, at very great expense to him. He is only paid, I believe, $3,500 in greenbacks for his services, in consequence of which he is unable to defray the necessary expenses of this journey and of this service in San Francisco and his other expenses. I have made an ineffectual effort here to have his salary increased as it ought to be. It will be remembered that the expenses of traveling and other expenses on the Pacific coast are much larger than they are here, because there a dollar in greenbacks only counts as seventy cents, and if a man pays his expenses at a hotel in greenbacks, the money that he receives from the Government, he is compelled to discount every dollar thirty cents on the dollar. In this way it is impossible for that district judge to meet his necessary expenses, particularly when he performs these circuit court duties.

It has been necessary, I suppose, Judge Field being absent here in Washington attending the Supreme Court, and unable to attend the circuit court in San Francisco, for the convenience of suitors and for all the public interests involved, that the district judge of Oregon should attend to that court, and he has performed a large amount of business in that capacity at that court. He is compelled to pay his traveling expenses, going a distance of some seven or eight hundred miles. He is compelled, while he is in San Francisco for three or four months, to pay hotel and other expenses, which are very heavy. To require him to perform these duties and at the same time deny that he shall have his expenses paid, it seems to me is doing an act of injustice. If additional duties are imposed upon a district judge, if he is required to hold a circuit court, and perform the duties of a circuit judge, I do not see any reason why he should not at least have his expenses paid. I move to amend the amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary by adding:

Provided, The district judge of Oregon shall be allowed his traveling and other reasonable expenses in attending the circuit court of the United States in California.

Mr. COLE. I have been acquainted with the case to which the Senator from Oregon has made allusion, and concur with him in the opinion that it is but right and just that the district judge who comes from Oregon down to San Francisco to hold the circuit court should be paid his reasonable expenses. His salary is but very small at best, payable in greenbacks. I believe it is but $3,000 a year; and it certainly is putting upon him a very great and unreasonable burden to require him to go that great distance, nearly a thousand miles, to hold a court without any extra compensation. Several of the most reputable lawyers of San Francisco have communicated with me by letter on this subject, realizing the great hardship that it is upon this Oregon judge, Judge Deady, to come to San Francisco and hold this court. I hope, therefore, that the amendment which the Senator from Oregon proposes will be readily adopted by the Senate. It is only an act of justice in this case.

Mr. CORBETT. I had the honor to present a bill for the increase of the salary of Judge Deady in the fore part of the session, which bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. The Committee on the Judiciary did not feel disposed to report the bill back, as they feared that they might be obliged to raise the salaries of other judges, although it only proposed to give him the same salary that was given to the judges of California. The judge from Oregon, Judge Deady, informed me it was impossible for him to live upon his salary, it being paid in greenbacks, while his expenses were all payable in gold. Three thousand dollars in greenbacks, if that be his salary, would amount, with greenbacks at seventy cents, to about two thousand one hundred dollars in gold. That will not support his family. He has quite a large family. He is a very able man, and of course he must live in accordance with his station and his position in society. He is not an extravagant man. I assure Senators that it will be nothing more than justice to him, a very worthy and very able lawyer and judge, to adopt this amendment.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I wish it to be understood by the Senate that this bill that is introduced here has nothing to do with salaries at all. It is not a bill either increasing or diminishing salaries. It is a bill requiring the judges of district courts to perform this service when called upon by the justices of the Supreme Court. I think that is the law now; but there is some question about it in the minds of some of the justices of the Supreme Court. This bill is only to make that specific; and I am sorry that there is this attempt to embarrass it by increasing compensation, either by way of paying expenses or otherwise, to any of these judges.

Let me say to the Senators from Oregon that the salaries of the district judges were put up only a year ago, most of them $1,500, a much larger sum than their expenses would be, and the bill provided at that time that that was to be all their compensation. If you are to listen to every letter that is written here by a lawyer or a clerk of a court recommending the increase of the salary of a judge, you will have to increase the salaries of all the judges. They are not satisfied with them. You cannot put on this provision in regard to Oregon without having the same in reference to Rhode Island and Vermont and New Hampshire and Connecticut, and every other State whose district judge is sometimes called out into a neighboring district, perhaps at an expense of fifty or one hundred, or possibly five hundred dollars; and yet within a year we have given nearly every one of them $1,500 increase of salary, which was intended at the time to be a full compensation. Let me say to the Senators from Oregon that, in my judgment, that bill increasing these salaries $1,500, and some of them $2,000, never could have passed unless it had been understood that that was to be all the compensation that the district judges were to have. I hope no attempt will be made in this bill to increase salaries.

Mr. CONNESS. The honorable Senator from Illinois is always clear and exact when he knows the facts connected with the subject upon which he speaks. That he does not in this case, he will permit me to say, is evidenced by what he has said while up. In place of discussing the exact facts, as stated by the Senators from Oregon, he goes into a general denunciation of the proposition, and involves it in connection with all the district judges of the United States and laws passed for the increase of their salaries. I will say to the Senator that all he may say on this subject does not meet the facts stated nor controvert them. The facts stated are exactly correct. There is but one district judge in California, Judge Hoffman, sitting at San Francisco. The second district has been abolished; and there is now a bill to create a second district before the committee of which the honorable Senator is chairman. It is simply impossible for Judge Hoffman to hold Judge Field's circuit court, because his own docket is behind hundreds of cases, and this condition of things cannot be changed until there is an increase of judicial labor given and provided for. Judge Deady cannot come down from Oregon upon his salary and hold court there; and yet he has done it, not feeling it to be his duty to refuse, and thus prevent the administration of justice in California. He has done it at an immense expense to himself. No $100, I will tell the Senator, nor $500, pays Judge Deady's expenses for coming down from Oregon and returning there, and living three months at the city of San Francisco. If you could by any means transfer the honorable Senator to one of these judgeships, he would understand the matter at once, and he would find out how far $100 in greenbacks go toward paying the expenses of a United States district judge on that coast.

But, Mr. President, we may talk until we get hoarse here and state facts. They are not always listened to unless we succeed by personal appeals to Senators. The case stated yesterday from that country was voted down as inconsiderately as if it were not all surrounded by facts; but the honorable Senator's mode of discussing this subject does not appear to me to meet the facts of the case at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to correct an impression conveyed by the Senator from Illinois, who stated that these salaries have been raised $1,500. It was impossible to have the salaries of the district judges of Oregon and Nevada raised more than $500. Their salary is now $3,500 each.

Mr. TRUMBULL. What was the former salary?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Three thousand dollars originally; $500 was added, making it $3,500, which is paid in greenbacks.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Will not $500 pay his expense from Oregon to California and back?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think not; it will a little over pay the passage-money from Portland to San Francisco; not very much more than that, the passage-money being paid in gold. I wished simply to correct the statement.

Mr. CORBETT. It should be recollected that the distance between San Francisco and Portland is about as far as from New York to Charleston. It is quite a distance for a judge to go out of his district to attend court.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois stated that he did not believe the increase of salary could have been passed but for the assurance that it would be in lieu of this extra compensation. I think he made a very mild statement in saying that, and I venture to bear a little testimony on that subject, having been a member of the conference committee by which the present statute was adjusted, and having had a good deal to do actively with the adoption of the provision by the House of Representatives. The truth is, Mr. President, not only that the provision would not have met with acquiescence in the House without this assurance, but that it was adopted upon that ground, I may say, solely. The argument for the increase of salaries at that time, when the decadence of prices had commenced, began and ended with the allegation that all of these recipients of increased salary were to take the salary in lieu of per diem and expenses for services rendered outside their districts. In the case of the judge in Oregon, the increase was, I believe, $500; in the case of some of the eastern judges it was $1,000, and in two or three cases $1,500; and, as I say, it proceeded not only largely, but, according to my recollection, entirely upon this idea.

There has been, Mr. President, several times in committee and in both Houses allusion made to the condition of the courts in California, and especially the condition, as we have heard this morning, of the district court in California, of which Judge Hoffman is the judge. Feeling, I presume, as I think he had a right to do, aggrieved by a good many of the statements which had been made, he wrote me a letter, a portion of which on this subject I beg to read to the Senate, in order that they may see what Judge Hoffman does, and what are the exactions and burdens which he bears. He says:

"The district court of this district is not overburdened with business: the labors of the judges are far lighter than those of either of the State district judges in this city. The calendar is at this moment nearly cleared."

Mr. HOWARD. What is the date of the letter?

Mr. CONKLING. The date of the letter is March 9, 1868:

"The calendar is at this moment nearly cleared. The district attorney informs me that the United States cases will all be disposed of this week. I am not informed what civil cases are ready for trial: certainly not more than two or three. I think it quite probable that in the course of next month the court will adjourn for want of business."

I presume nobody will doubt that Judge Hoffman is an intelligent witness on this subject, and we have, therefore, the fact that the district judge in California is not burdened at all, but the reverse; is far more at liberty than the district judge of the district in which I reside to hold the circuit court, for he is, as he says, greatly overburdened. So are others of the district judges; but here seems to be a marked example to the contrary.

Now, this gentleman in Oregon has received an increase of salary of $500 since the time when the cost of living was grievous, since the time when we commenced the descending scale of prices, and with the district judge of California, as able a man as Judge Hoffman is, and as pure a man, and situated as he is, I cannot conceive an exigency in California for the holding of the circuit court beyond the time which Judge Hoffman can give to it, for which $500 will not be a suitable compensation, looking to traveling expenses and hotel bills during the session of the court; and I hope, considering how recently this matter was readjusted, and considering the liberality with which the present tariff of salaries was fixed, as we then supposed, the honorable Senator from Oregon will allow it to stand as it is, and let us at some future time, and more deliberately recast all these salaries, if, in truth, any alteration is necessary.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether Judge Hoffman indicates his willingness or ability to hold the circuit court in the city of San Francisco? Has the letter any reference whatever to that subject?

Mr. CONKLING. The letter was not written especially to that point; but I submit to the honorable Senator that when a judge himself says that his calendar is clear, that his court is about to adjourn for want of business, it is not necessary when speaking to lawyers for him to add that he is then in condition, if need be, to hold a court going by another name in the same place. It is his duty to hold this court, as far as he has time to do it; and when he says himself that his occupation is light, that indeed he is at leisure at this time—for that is what this letter amounts to—surely it is not necessary for him to go further and say that he is now in condition to have the law act upon him which says he is to hold this court when he can.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I, of course, do not know the circumstances under which that letter was written, or the objects for which it was written, but I am very confident that Judge Field would not request the district judge of Oregon to attend the circuit court in California unless he conceived that there was a necessity for it, and that necessity arose out of the fact that Judge Hoffman was otherwise engaged. Now, it seems reasonable, whatever the representations in that letter may be—and certainly they are contrary to what I have always heard from other sources in reference to that matter—that in the State of California, where there is so much litigation about Mexican land titles and other matters of that description, there should be an accumulation of business in the district court when there is but one court of that description for the entire State. It may be that at that particular time to which Judge Hoffman referred, that particular season of the year, business had declined; but the circuit court continues there for some two or three months, and the district judge for the State of Oregon for two successive years, on account of the absence of Mr. Justice Field in Washington attending the Supreme Court, has held the circuit court for the State of California.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator will allow me, I can answer his question now more intelligently. It was some little time since I had been looking at this letter; and while the Senator has been speaking I have read it again, and I beg now to read an additional passage to the Senate, following in order after what I before read:

"I do not, however, wish to be understood as saying that the district judge can readily dispatch all the business of the circuit court in addition to that of his own court. Some assistance in the former court is necessary. This has heretofore been furnished by Judge Deady, of Oregon, a gentleman of high character and capacity. He is now holding a circuit court here. In November last the term of that court was held by me, and all causes ready for trial were disposed of. Judge Deady will no doubt in the course of six weeks or two months dispatch all the business which has since accumulated. If a term of from two to three months be held annually by him, the business of both courts can with the utmost ease be disposed of, and with far less than the law's usual delay.

"These are the facts, notorious here to every member of the bar. I state them to you because I do not choose," &c.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am much obliged to the Senator for the information which that letter conveys, for it shows that in the judgment of Judge Hoffman it is necessary that the district judge of the State of Oregon should attend in San Francisco for two or three months each year to hold the circuit court, and that they proceed upon the expectation that he will regularly each year attend to the circuit court in the city of San Francisco, traveling a distance of seven or eight hundred miles at a large expense, remaining there two or three months, holding that court, and then return to the State of Oregon; and it is claimed that under these circumstances when he is required, not occasionally but regularly, to perform the duties of a circuit judge for the circuit upon the Pacific coast, he shall not be allowed his traveling and other necessary expenses in addition to his moderate salary of $3,500.

Mr. CONKLING. Will not $500 pay his hotel bills and traveling expenses?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know exactly how much the expenses of traveling from Portland to San Francisco, remaining there, and returning may be; but the passage money alone from Portland to San Francisco has been in the neighborhood of $100 in gold. Then there are his individual expenses, to say nothing about the expenses of his family. He has a considerable family, whose expenses he must defray all the time. His hotel expenses in San Francisco must be at least four or five dollars a day in gold. The Senate, then, can very readily see how far $500 goes toward paying his expenses. I think that it is no more than fair under all the circumstances that this amendment should be adopted.

Mr. CONNESS. Mr. President, I feel that it is due to myself, on account of what has been said and the production of this letter by the Senator from New York, to say a few words in regard to it. I do not know, as the Senator from Oregon said he did not, for what purposes this letter was written. If it was to affect a bill which is pending in this body for the creation of a second district in the State of California, which is most likely the case from the tenor of that portion of the letter which I have heard read, then it is very strange, indeed, that the judge should not address either one of the Senators from his own State, and that the information should come to the Senate through this particular channel. I think, sir, that I would be the last person in the country to advocate the unnecessary creation of a judicial district there. My information on the subject of the amount of business existing in the district court is diametrically contrary to the statement of the district judge contained in that letter. I stepped into the office of the Secretary of the Senate with a view of getting a statement from that gentleman, who was recently clerk of that court, to ascertain what the state of the docket was at the time he left the office; but he happened to be temporarily at the other House. Judge Field, before he left here last year—and whatever persons may think of his political opinions it can hardly be questioned that he would make a correct statement as to facts of that kind—said to me that Judge Hoffman's docket had from two to three hundred cases upon it, and I regarded that as good authority. I still believe, notwithstanding that letter and the precise and specific statements it contains, that it is not a true reflex of the condition of things in his court, and I feel sufficient interest to follow it up and ascertain exactly the condition of business at the time stated in the letter that has been read here.

The southern part of the State of California is crying out by constant petitions sent to us here for the creation of a new judicial district that they may have a term of court at Los Angeles. Many cases there arise under the internal revenue laws, and the people are compelled to go more than five hundred miles to attend to the most trivial cases. Suits are brought against them, instituted very often for malicious purposes, and they must travel that extreme distance or submit to be beaten in the case. I am surprised, to say the least, at the statements contained in the letter of Judge Hoffman.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CONNESS. Certainly.

Mr. HENDRICKS. There was an impression in the Committee on the Judiciary that there was but very little business from the region of Los Angeles and of southern California that came into the United States court; that the business which occupied the attention of that court was mainly from the neighborhood of San Francisco, where the commerce of the State concentrates. Is the Senator prepared to change our information on that subject?

Mr. CONNESS. I will answer the question by stating that undoubtedly the great mass of the United States district and circuit court business occurs at and near San Francisco, which is the center of population of the State. All the admiralty business originates there, and that is a very heavy business. A very large portion of the land business of the State originates at or about San Francisco. The cases under the Mexican land-grant system are in the main disposed of; it would be perhaps safe to say that there are not more than twenty pending in the State; but there are constant causes arising in the district court involving contests for property in and about San Francisco, where many small grants were made. Those cases are constantly arising and are pending. In the main, the statement the Senator from Indiana makes is correct; but under the internal revenue laws there are many suits, and that is a great pressure and a great hardship upon the interests of the people in the southern part of the State.

But, Mr. President, the statements I now make are so thoroughly met by the precise statements of that letter that I cannot press them any further until further investigation, and I promise to make that. But in regard to the statement made by the Senator from Oregon, it is clearly a correct one. If it be necessary for Judge Deady, as Judge Hoffman states, to come down to San Francisco to hold the circuit court there, there ought to be liberal and fair provision made for his payment. Prior to Judge Deady's coming the district judge from the State of Nevada was invited there to hold the circuit court by Judge Field; but Judge Deady has been chosen by Judge Field in preference to the Nevada judge, as I understand, because there were many mining suits pending in which the judge of the Nevada district had more or less interest, and Judge Deady, separated from all interest connected with those cases was preferred by the bar, and he was invited to come. That was one of the main reasons of his selection, and if it be necessary for him to come there, certainly provision ought to be made for his payment.

Mr. CONKLING. I should have listened with some surprise to the line of remark, consisting of a thinly-covered imputation upon Judge Hoffman from the Senator from California had he been a member of the bar and able to speak with so much personal knowledge as his membership would have given him; but inasmuch as I understand his business pursuits have not led him into contact with the courts of California, I must be permitted to say that I think the insinuations which he has made against Judge Hoffman and his veracity are the more extraordinary. Having introduced this letter and read it, I feel bound to say this much: that those who know, as I know, Judge Hoffman, and who knew his father and his mother before him, will understand, without remark from me, that he needs no vindication in respect of his veracity, his manhood, or his character, from any member of this body. I shall be greatly amazed, no matter under what impulse he saw fit to drop a letter to me, his acquaintance and his friend, if in that letter he has made a statement of facts under his personal view, which statement is even inaccurate, much less open to the sort of criticism which has been bestowed upon it. I have no doubt of its correctness, and I feel that he needs no vindication or support from me; and there I leave it.

Mr. CONNESS. I do not know, Mr. President, just exactly the words that the reporter has got down as coming from myself when last up, but I do know that there was nothing which should justify this very nearly malicious imputation made by the honorable Senator from New York in that connection. I made no insinuations, Mr. President, but stated plainly and boldly that from the information that I had had, stating the source of that information, and the further effort I made to obtain information, it was exceedingly strange, as I now repeat, if the statements contained in that letter were exactly correct. I went further then, and said that in the face of these precise statements I could say nothing more, but would further investigate as I wished to do as to the facts of the case.

Now, Mr. President, the honorable Senator from New York may boast here his acquaintance with Judge Hoffman; he may also boast his connection with what is regarded as a learned profession. I will say nothing of either, not feeling that either could depress or elevate me in the estimation of anybody; nor will I undertake to make any remark as to the peculiar knowledge that the Senator has attained touching the present life and character of the eminent judge of whom he has spoken, by reason of his knowledge of his father and mother. If his investigations had been carried further and gone to the preceding generation perhaps they would have strengthened his case; but not in my opinion.

With these remarks I leave the subject, as well as the judge of the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired the unfinished business of yesterday is regularly before the Senate.

Mr. CORBETT. I trust we may have a vote on this question.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I presume the Senator from Ohio will allow the vote to be taken on this bill. I imagine no one will say anything more about it.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the vote can be taken without debate I shall not object.

Mr. ANTHONY. Is the amendment withdrawn?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No, sir.

Mr. ANTHONY. I wish to amend that amendment.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If it is to be discussed, let the bill go over.

Mr. ANTHONY. I only wish to make it general. I do not know why the judge of Oregon should have this additional compensation if the other judges are not to be included. I am in favor of the proposition, but I think the other judges should have the same.

Mr. SHERMAN. If we are to go into an increase of the salaries of all the judges I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. ANTHONY. Senators say that this amendment will be voted down. If that be so I will withdraw my amendment. I do not want to impede the bill; but if this amendment prevails, I shall then move to add the other judges also.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope we shall now have a vote. The Senator from Rhode Island withdraws his motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. WILLIAMS] to the amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected—ayes seven, noes not counted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment of the committee striking out the original bill and inserting a substitute.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 352) to authorize the temporary supplying of vacancies in the Executive Departments, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 284) for the relief of N. A. Shuttleworth, of Harrison county, West Virginia;

A bill (H. R. No. 255) for the relief of the heirs of James S. Porter, late of Hancock county, West Virginia;

A bill (H. R. No. 1365) for the relief of Captain Thomas W. Miller; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1367) for the relief of George Kaiser.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 436) for the relief of James Hooper;

A bill (H. R. No. 445) for the relief of Timothy Lyden, of Parkersburg, West Virginia;

A bill (H. R. No. 453) increasing the pension of Nancy Weeks, widow of Francis Weeks, an ensign in the revolutionary war;

A bill (H. R. No. 1069) for the relief of Charles B. Tanner, late first lieutenant sixtyninth Pennsylvania volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 1325) for the relief of Benjamin B. French, late Commissioner of Public Buildings;

A bill (H. R. No. 366) to incorporate the National Hotel Company of Washington city;

A bill (H. R. No. 869) prescribing an oath of office to be taken by persons from whom legal disabilities shall have been removed;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 154) in relation to the settlement of the accounts of certain officers and agents who have disbursed public money under the direction of the chief of engineers; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 324) to extend the time for the completion of the West Wisconsin railroad.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL OF BILLS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. W. G. MOORE, his Secretary, announced that the President had approved and signed, on the 3d instant, the following acts and joint resolutions:

An act (S. No. 251) for the relief of Captain Charles N. Goulding, late quartermaster of volunteers;

An act (S. No. 367) for the relief of Albert Grant;

An act (S. No. 452) for the relief of Parker Quince;

An act (S. No. 474) for the relief of Captain Dan. Ellis;

An act (S. No. 522) to authorize the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to settle the accounts of Andrew S. Care;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 123) donating certain captured ordnance for the completion of a monument to the memory of the late Major General John Sedgwick; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 143) for the relief of George W. Doty, a commander in the United States Navy on the retired list.

And that on the 4th instant he approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. No. 166) for the relief of the owners of the land within the United States survey No. 3217, in the State of Missouri;

An act (S. No. 347) to confirm the title of Ethan Ray Clarke and Samuel Ward Clarke to certain lands in the State of Florida, claimed under a grant from the Spanish Government;

An act (S. No. 463) confirming the title to a tract of land in Burlington, Iowa.

And also that on the 7th instant he approved and signed the act (S. No. 505) to amend section five of an act entitled "An act concerning the registering and recording of ships or vessels," approved December 31, 1792.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills received from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia:

A bill (H. R. No. 284) for the relief of N. A. Shuttleworth, of Harrison county, West Virginia;

A bill (H. R. No. 255) for the relief of the heirs of James S. Porter, late of Hancock county, West Virginia; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1365) for the relief of Captain W. Muller.

The bill (H. R. No. 1367) for the relief of George Kaiser was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

DEPARTMENTAL VACANCIES.

The amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 352) to authorize the temporary supplying of vacancies in the Executive Departments was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. POMEROY. Some vacancies have occurred in the standing committees that ought to be filled. There is a vacancy in the Committee on Public Lands, and there are, I believe, vacancies on other committees. There are some new Senators who have not been assigned to committees. I move that the Chair be authorized to fill any vacancies that exist in the standing committees of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion may be entertained by unanimous consent.

The motion was agreed to.

INTERNAL TAXES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1284) to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to amend the tax on banks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Clerk will now resume the reading of the bill at the point where he left off last evening.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

Cigars:

SEC. [81] 80. And be it further enacted, That upon cigars which shall be manufactured and sold, or removed for consumption or use, there shall be assessed and collected the following taxes, to be paid by the manufacturer thereof:

On cigarettes, cigars, and cheroots of all descriptions, made of tobacco or any substitute therefor, five dollars per thousand. And the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe such regulations for the inspection of cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes, and the collection of the tax thereon, as shall, in his judgment, be most effective for the prevention of frauds in the payment of such tax.

The Committee on Finance proposed two amendments to this section. The first was in line six, to strike out the word "cigarettes" before "cigars."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line eight, after the word "thousand," to insert "on cigarettes weighing not exceeding three pounds per thousand, $1 50 per thousand."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read the following sections, to which no amendment was proposed:

SEC. [82] 81. And be it further enacted, That every person before commencing, or, if already commenced, before continuing the manufacture of cigars shall furnish, without previous demand therefor, to the assistant assessor of the division a statement in duplicate, subscribed under oath or affirmation, accurately setting forth the place, and, if in a city, the street and number of the street, where the manufacture is to be carried on; and if the same shall be manufactured for, or to be sold and delivered to, any other person, the name and residence and business or occupation of the person for whom the cigars are to be manufactured or to whom to be delivered; and shall give a bond in conformity with the provisions of this act, in such penal sum as the assessor of the district may require, not less than $500, with an addition of $100 for each person proposed to be employed by him in making cigars, conditioned that he will not employ any person to manufacture cigars who has not been duly registered as a cigar-maker; that he will not engage in any attempt, by himself or by collusion with others, to defraud the Government of any tax on his manufactures; that he will render truly and correctly all the returns, statements, and inventories prescribed; that whenever he shall add to the number of cigar-makers employed by him, he will immediately give notice thereof to the collector of the district; that he will stamp, in accordance with law, all cigars manufactured by him before he offers the same or any part thereof for sale, and before he removes any part thereof from the place of manufacture; that he will not knowingly sell, purchase, expose, or receive for sale any cigars which have not been stamped as required by law; and that he will comply with all the requirements of law relating to the manufacture of cigars. The sum of said bond may be increased from time to time, and additional sureties required at the discretion of the assessor, or under the instructions of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Every cigar manufacturer shall obtain from the collector of the district, who is hereby required to issue to him, a certificate setting forth the number of cigar-makers for which the bond has been given, which certificate shall be posted in a conspicuous place within the manufactory; and any cigar manufacturer who shall neglect or refuse to obtain such certificate, or to keep the same posted as hereinbefore provided, shall, on conviction, be fined $100. Any person manufacturing cigars of any description without first giving bond as herein required, shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $100 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than three months nor more than five years. Cigarettes and cheroots shall be held to be cigars under the meaning of this act.

SEC. [83] 82. And be it further enacted, That within thirty days after the passage of this act every cigar manufacturer shall place and keep on the side or end of the building within which his business is carried on, so that it can be distinctly seen, a sign with letters thereon not less than three inches in length, painted in oil colors or gilded, giving his full name and business. Any person neglecting to comply with the requirements of this section shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $100, nor more than $500.

SEC. [84] 83. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of every assistant assessor to keep a record, in a book to be provided for the purpose, to be open to the inspection of any person, of the name and residence of every person engaged in the manufacture of cigars in his division, the place where such manufacture is carried on, and the number of the manufactory, together with the names and residences of every cigar-maker employed in his division; and the assistant assessor shall enter in said record, under the name of each manufacturer, an abstract of his inventories and monthly returns; and each assessor shall keep a similar record for the district, and shall cause the several manufactories of cigars in the district to be numbered consecutively, which number shall not thereafter be changed.

Section [eighty five] eighty-four was read as follows:

SEC. [85] 84. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act all cigars shall be packed in boxes, not before used for that purpose, containing respectively, twenty-five, fifty, one hundred, two hundred and fifty, or five hundred cigars each; and any person who shall sell or offer for sale, or deliver or offer to deliver, any cigars in any other form than in new boxes as above described, or who shall pack in any box any cigars in excess of the number provided by law to be put in each box, respectively, or who shall falsely brand any box, or who shall affix a stamp on any box denoting a less amount of tax than that required by law, shall, upon conviction, for any of the above described offenses, be fined for each such offense, respectively, not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, and be imprisoned not less than six months nor more than two years.

The Committee on Finance reported two amendments to this section. The first was in line thirteen, after the word "offense," to strike out the word "respectively."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert at the end of the section the following proviso:

Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed as preventing the sale of cigars at retail by retail dealers who have paid the special tax as such from boxes packed, stamped, and branded in the manner prescribed by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The following sections, to which no amendments were proposed, were read:

SEC. [86] 85. And be it further enacted, That every person now or hereafter engaged in the manufacture of cigars, shall make and deliver to the assistant assessor of the division a true inventory, in form prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, of the quantity of leaf tobacco, cigars, stems, scraps, clippings, and waste, and the number of cigar-boxes and the capacity of each box, held or owned by him on the 1st day of January of each year, or at the time of commencing and at the time of concluding business, if before or after the 1st of January, setting forth what portion of said goods, and what kinds, were manufactured or produced by him, and what were purchased from others, which inventory shall be verified by his oath or affirmation indorsed on said inventory; and the assistant assessor shall make personal examination of the stock sufficient to satisfy himself as to the correctness of the inventory, and shall verify the fact of such examination by oath or affirmation taken before the assessor, also to be indorsed on the inventory; and every such person shall enter daily in a book, the form of which shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, an accurate account of all the articles aforesaid purchased by him, the quantity of leaf tobacco, cigars, stems, or cigar-boxes, of whatever description, manufactured, sold, consumed, or removed for consumption or sale, or removed from the place of manufacture; and shall, on or before the 10th day of each and every month, furnish to the assistant assessor of the division a true and accurate abstract from such book of all such purchases, sales, and removals made during the month next preceding, which abstract shall be verified by his oath or affirmation; and in case of refusal or willful neglect to deliver the inventory, or keep the account, or furnish the abstract aforesaid, he shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than six months nor more than three years. It shall be the duty of any dealer in leaf tobacco or material used in manufacturing cigars, on demand of any officer of internal revenue authorized by law, to render to such officer a true and correct statement, verified by oath or affirmation, of the quantity and amount of such leaf tobacco or materials sold or delivered to any person or persons named in such demand; and in case of refusal or neglect to render such statement, or if there is cause to believe such statement to be incorrect or fraudulent, the assessor shall make an examination of persons, books, and papers in the same manner as provided in this act in relation to frauds and evasions.

SEC. [87] 86. And be it further enacted, That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall cause to be prepared, for payment of the tax upon cigars, suitable stamps denoting the tax thereon; and all cigars shall be packed in quantities of twenty-five, fifty, one hundred, two hundred and fifty, and five hundred, and all such stamps shall be furnished to collectors requiring the same, who shall, if there be any cigar manufacturers within their respective districts, keep on hand at all times a supply equal in amount to two months' sales thereof, and shall sell the same only to the cigar manufacturers who have given bonds and paid the special tax, as required by law, in their districts respectively, and to importers of cigars who are required to affix the same to imported cigars in the custody of customs officers and to persons required by law to affix the same to cigars on hand on the 1st day of January, A. D. 1865; and every collector shall keep an account of the number, amount, and denominations of the stamps sold by him to each cigar manufacturer, and to other persons above described: Provided, That from and after the passage of this act the duty on all cigars imported into the United States from foreign countries shall be $2 50 per pound, and twenty-five per cent. ad valorem.

SEC. [88] 87. And be it further enacted, That every manufacturer of cigars shall securely affix, by pasting on each box containing cigars manufactured by or for him, a label on which shall be printed, together with the manufacturer's name, the number of his manufactory, and the district and State in which it is situated, these words:

"NOTICE.—The manufacturer of the cigars herein contained has complied with all the requirements of law. Every person is cautioned, and from penalties of law, not to use this box for cigars again."

Any manufacturer of cigars who shall neglect to affix such label to any box containing cigars made by or for him, or sold or offered for sale by or for him, or any person who shall remove any such label, so affixed, from any such box, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined fifty dollars for each box in respect to which such offense shall be committed.

Section [eighty-nine] eighty-eight was next read, as follows:

SEC. [89] 88. And be it further enacted, That all cigars which shall be removed from any manufactory or place where cigars are made without the same being packed in boxes as required by this act, or without the proper stamp thereon denoting the tax, or without burning into each box with a branding-iron the number of the cigars contained therein, and the name of the manufacturer, and the number of the district and the State, or without the stamp denoting the tax thereon being properly affixed and canceled, or which shall be sold or offered for sale not properly boxed and stamped, shall be forfeited to the United States. And any person who shall commit any of the above-described offenses shall, on conviction, be fined for each such offense, respectively, not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, and imprisoned not less than six months nor more than two years. And any person who shall pack cigars in any box bearing a false or fraudulent or counterfeit stamp, or who shall remove or cause to be removed any stamp denoting the tax on cigars from any box, with intent to use the same, or who shall use or permit any other person to use any stamp so removed, or who shall receive, buy, sell, give away, or have in his possession any stamps removed, or who shall make any other fraudulent use of any stamp or stamped box, intended for cigars, or who shall remove from the place of manufacture any cigars not properly taxed and stamped as required by law, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction, shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, and imprisoned not less than six months nor more than three years.

The Committee on Finance reported amendments to this section. The first was in line thirteen, after the word "offense" to strike out the word "respectively."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line twenty-five, to strike out "taxed" and to insert "boxed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The following sections, to which no amendments were proposed, were read:

SEC. [97] 89. And be it further enacted, That the absence of the proper revenue stamp on any box of cigars sold, or offered for sale, or kept for sale, shall be notice to all persons that the tax has not been paid thereon, and shall be conclusive evidence of the non-payment thereof; and such cigars shall be forfeited to the United States.

SEC. [91] 90. And be it further enacted, That in all cases where cigars of any description are manufactured, in whole or in part, upon commission or shares, or where the material is furnished by one party and manufactured by another, or where the material is furnished or sold by one party with an understanding or agreement with another that the cigars are to be received in payment therefor, or for any part thereof, the stamps required by law shall be affixed by the actual maker before the cigars are removed from the place of manufacturing. And in case of fraud on the part of either of said parties in respect to said manufacture, or of any collusion on their part with intent to defraud the revenue, such material and cigars shall be forfeited to the United States, and every person engaged in such fraud or collusion shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $100 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than six months nor more than three years.

SEC. [92] 91. And be it further enacted, That any manufacturer of cigars who shall remove or sell any cigars without payment of the special tax as a cigar manufacturer, or without having given bond as such, or without the proper stamps denoting the tax thereon, or who shall make false or fraudulent entries of manufactures or sales of any cigars, or who shall make false or fraudulent entries of the purchase or sale of leaf tobacco, tobacco stems, or other material used in the manufacture of cigars, or who shall affix any false, forged, spurious, fraudulent, or counterfeit stamp, or imitation of any stamp, required by law to any box containing any cigars, shall, in addition to the penalties elsewhere provided in this act for such offenses, forfeit to the United States all raw material and manufactured or partly manufactured tobacco and cigars, and all machinery, tools, implements, apparatus, fixtures, boxes, barrels, and all other materials, which shall be found in the possession of such person, or in his manufactory, and used in his business as such manufacturer, together with his estate or interest in the building or factory and the lot or tract of ground on which such building or factory is located, and all appurtenances thereunto belonging.

SEC. [93] 92. And be it further enacted, That all cigars imported from foreign countries after the passage of this act shall, in addition to the import duties imposed on the same, pay the tax prescribed in this act for cigars manufactured in the United States, and have the same stamps affixed. Such stamps shall be affixed and canceled by the owner or importer of cigars while they are in the custody of the proper custom-house officers; and such cigars shall not pass out of the custody of such officers until the stamps have been so affixed and canceled; but shall be put up in boxes containing quantities as prescribed in this act for cigars manufactured in the United States before such stamps are affixed. And the owner or importer of such cigars shall be liable to all the penal provisions of this act prescribed for manufacturers of cigars manufactured in the United States. Where it shall be necessary to take any of such cigars, so imported, to any place, for the purpose of affixing and canceling such stamps, other than the public stores of the United States, the collector of customs of the port where such cigars shall be entered shall designate a bonded warehouse to which they shall be taken, under the control of such customs officer as such collector may direct. And any officer of customs who shall permit any such cigars to pass out of his custody or control without compliance by the owner or importer thereof with the provisions of this section relating thereto shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction thereof, be fined not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than six months nor more than three years.

Section [ninety-four] ninety-three was next read, as follows:

SEC. [94] 93. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act it shall be the duty of every dealer in cigars, either of foreign or domestic manufacture, having on hand more than five thousand thereof, imported or manufactured, or purporting or claimed to have been imported or manufactured, prior to the passage of this act, to immediately make a true and correct inventory of the quantity of such cigars in his possession, under oath or affirmation, and to deposit such inventory with the assistant assessor of the proper division, who shall immediately return the same to the assessor of the district, who shall immediately thereafter make an abstract of the several such inventories filed in his office, and transmit the same to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and a like inventory and return shall be made on the first day of every month thereafter, and a like abstract of inventories shall be transmitted, while any such dealer has any such cigars remaining on hand, until the 1st day of January, 1899. After the 1st day of January, 1899, all cigars of every description shall be taken to have been either manufactured or imported after the passage of this act, and shall be stamped accordingly; and any person who shall sell, or offer for sale, after the 1st day of January, 1899, any imported cigars, or cigars purporting or claimed to have been imported, not so put up in packages and stamped by this act, shall, on conviction thereof, be fined not less than $300 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than six months nor more than two years.

The committee reported two amendments to this section. The first was to strike out "January," wherever it occurs, and insert "April."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line twenty-six, after the word "stamped" to insert "as provided."

The amendment was agreed to.

The following sections, to which no amendments were proposed, were read:

SEC. [95] 94. And be it further enacted, That any person who shall, after the passage of this act, sell, or offer for sale, any cigars, representing the same to have been manufactured and the tax paid thereon prior to the passage of this act, when the same were not so manufactured and the tax not so paid, shall be liable to a penalty of $500 for each offense, and shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, shall be fined not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than six months nor more than three years.

SEC. [96] 95. And be it further enacted, That if any distiller, rectifier, wholesale liquor dealer, compounder of liquors, or manufacturer of tobacco or cigars, shall knowingly and willfully omit, neglect, or refuse to do or cause to be done any of the things required by law in the carrying on or conducting of his business, or shall do anything by this act prohibited, if there be no specific penalty or punishment imposed by any other section of this act for the neglecting, omitting, or refusing to do, or for the doing or causing to be done the thing required or prohibited, he shall pay a penalty of $1,000; and if the person so offending be a distiller, rectifier, wholesale liquor dealer, or compounder of liquors, all distilled spirits or liquors owned by him, or in which he has any interest as owner, and if he be a manufacturer of tobacco or cigars, all tobacco or cigars found in his manufactory shall be forfeited to the United States.

SEC. [97] 96. And be it further enacted, That any internal revenue officer who shall be or become interested, directly or indirectly, in the manufacture of tobacco, snuff, or cigars, or in the production, rectification, or redistillation of distilled spirits, shall be dismissed from office; and any such officer who shall become so interested in any such manufacture or production, rectification, or redistillation, shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $500 nor more than $5,000.

Section [ninety-eight] ninety-seven was next read, as follows:

SEC. [98] 97. And be it further enacted, That if any officer or agent appointed or acting under the authority of any revenue law of the United States shall be guilty of any extortion or willful oppression, under color of law, or shall knowingly demand or receive greater sums than shall be authorized by law; or shall receive for fee, compensation, or reward for the performance of any duty except as by law prescribed; or shall willfully neglect to perform any of the duties enjoined on him by law, or shall conspire to collude with any other person to defraud the United States; or shall make opportunity for any person to defraud the United States; or shall do, or omit to do, any act with intent to enable any other person to defraud the United States; or shall negligently or designedly permit any violation of the law by any other person; or shall make or sign any false entry in any book, or make or sign any false certificate or return in any case where he is by law or regulation required to make an entry, certificate, or return; or having knowledge or information of the violation of any revenue law by any person, or of fraud committed by any person against the United States under any revenue law of the United States, shall fail to report in writing such knowledge or information to his next superior officer, and to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; or shall demand or accept, or attempt to collect, directly or indirectly, as payment or gift or otherwise, any sum of money or other thing of value for the compromise, adjustment, or settlement of any charge or complaint for any violation or alleged violation of law, except as expressly authorized by law so to do, he shall be dismissed from office, and shall be held to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than six months nor more than three years. And one half of the fine so imposed shall be for the use of the United States and the other half for the use of the informer, who shall be ascertained by the judgment of the court; and the said court shall also render judgment against the said assessor or assistant assessor for the amount of damages sustained in favor of the party injured, to be collected by execution.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this section in lines thirty-six and thirty-seven by striking out the words "assessor or assistant assessor" and inserting "officer or agent."

The amendment was agreed to.

The following sections, to which no amendments were proposed, were read:

SEC. [99] 98. And be it further enacted, That any person who shall simulate or falsely or fraudulently execute or sign any bond, permit, entry, or other document required by the provisions of this act, or by any regulation made in pursuance thereof, or who shall procure the same to be falsely or fraudulently executed; or who shall advise, aid in, or connive at the execution thereof, shall, on conviction, be imprisoned for a term not less than one year nor more than five years; and the property to which such false or fraudulent instrument relates shall be forfeited.

SEC. [100] 99. And be it further enacted, That every collector having charge of any warehouse in which distilled spirits, tobacco, or other articles, are stored in bond, shall render a monthly account of all such articles to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, which account shall be examined and adjusted monthly by him, so as to exhibit a true statement of the liability and responsibility of every such collector on such account. In adjusting such account the collector shall be charged with all the articles which may have been deposited or received under the provisions of law in any warehouse in his district and under his control, and shall be credited with all such articles shown to have been removed therefrom according to law, including transfers to other collectors and to his successor in office, and also whatever allowances may have been made in accordance with law to any owner of such goods or articles for leakage or other losses.

The committee proposed to insert as section one hundred, the following:

SEC. 100. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury and Commissioner of Internal Revenue are authorized and empowered to alter, renew, or change the form, style, and device of any stamp, mark, or label used under any provision of the laws relating to distilled spirits, tobacco, when, in their judgment, necessary for the collection of revenue tax, or the prevention or detection of frauds thereon, and to make and publish such regulations for the use of such mark, stamp, or label as they may find requisite.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to amend that section by inserting after "tobacco," in the sixth line, the words "snuff and cigars."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was adopted.

Section one hundred and one was next read, as follows:

SEC. 101. And be it further enacted, That in all cases arising under the internal revenue laws where, instead of commencing or proceeding with a suit in court, it may appear to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to be for the interest of the United States to compromise the same, he is empowered and authorized to make such compromise with the advice and consent of the solicitor of internal revenue, whose opinion in the case, with the reasons therefor, shall be given in writing and delivered to the Commissioner; and in every case where a compromise is made there shall be placed on file in the office of the Commissioner the opinion of the solicitor, together with a statement of the amount of tax assessed, the amount of additional tax or penalty imposed by law in consequence of the neglect or delinquency of the person against whom the tax is assessed, and the amount actually paid in accordance with the terms of the compromise; but no such compromise shall be made of any case after a suit or proceeding in court has been commenced, without the recommendation also of the district attorney for the judicial district in which the suit or proceeding is pending, or of such other counsel as may be employed to conduct or prosecute the same on the part of the United States: Provided, That it shall be lawful for the court at any stage of such suit or criminal proceedings to continue the same for good cause shown on motion of the district attorney.

The committee reported various amendments to this section, the first of which was in line seven, to strike out the words "solicitor of internal revenue" and insert "Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is one of the objectionable features of the internal revenue system that the officers have been permitted to compromise suits; and it has been charged—I do not say whether truly or not—that officers and persons who are vested with this discretionary power have abused it very often in the settlement of cases. I believe that we passed some law on the subject, that suits should not be compromised without the consent, perhaps, of the judge of the court. I see the House of Representatives provided in this section that no compromise should take place without the advice and consent of the solicitor of internal revenue. I was not aware that we had such an office as that, unless this bill creates it.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is such an office provided for by law, but the President and the Senate have never been able to agree upon a proper person to hold it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There has never been a nomination for it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Probably there has never been a nomination, as the Senator from Maine reminds me. The duties of that office are now performed by a clerk really. The bill, as it came from the House, proposed to vest the solicitor of internal revenue with the power of controlling the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and we thought that wrong. We have required by a clause of the bill the opinion of the solicitor of internal revenue to be filed; but the approval of settlement must be by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If there is such an officer, what is the objection to having the safeguard of his opinion and the reasons for it before the settlement is made?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator will see that that is provided for.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I see you have stricken out the words "whose opinion in the case, with the reasons therefor, shall be given in writing and delivered to the Commissioner."

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator will find that it goes on below. We do not limit the power of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to make a settlement, by the opinion of the solicitor of internal revenue, but of the Secretary of the Treasury; but we require that in every case where a compromise is made there shall be placed on file in the office of the Commissioner, the opinion of the solicitor of internal revenue, together with a statement of the amount of tax assessed, the amount of additional tax or penalty imposed by law, &c.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It seems to me that this is a very strange proceeding. You authorize the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to make a compromise, with the assent of the Secretary of the Treasury—just such a compromise as he pleases—and then you require the solicitor of the Commissioner or of the internal revenue department to put on file his opinion in writing. His opinion may be directly the reverse of that of the Commissioner. For what object do you require this solicitor to file an opinion after the case is decided and when it is to have no influence in the decision at all?

Mr. SHERMAN. The question is whether we shall make the opinion of the solicitor of internal revenue a final bar to a settlement. In the first place there is no such officer now.

Mr. TRUMBULL. But you have provided for the filing of the opinion of such an officer.

Mr. SHERMAN. If one is provided by law, as there ought to be one appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, then the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is bound to take the opinion of the solicitor of internal revenue, and that must be filed before a compromise can be made; but the opinion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the opinion of the solicitor of internal revenue must be submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, who alone, under the checks contained in this provision, has the power to make a compromise. The Senator, if he will look at the present law, will find that this is a great restriction on the powers conferred by it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I know that there has been great complaint of the exercise of this power under the present law.

Mr. SHERMAN. This section is a very great, and, as they think in the office, almost an oppressive restriction upon their power to control the matter of internal revenue. The last clause of the section I think ought to be changed somewhat, and I have a substitute for it, in regard to the compromise of suits now pending in court. But at present the section as it now stands is a very great restraint upon any compromise whatever. No compromise can be made without the opinion of the solicitor of internal revenue, which must be filed in the case, and then the case thus made up, with the opinion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, is submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, who must give his approval and must make the final settlement. That is the proper way.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I inquire of the Senator from Ohio if he has before him the last act that we passed on this subject, I think during the present Congress, restraining the power of officers to make these compromises?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think any law has been passed during this session. It was proposed by the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. Morton,] but it was not passed. I will read the present law as it now stands:

"That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to compromise, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, any case arising under the internal revenue laws, whether pending in court or otherwise."

This is the broad power conferred upon the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and, as the Senator says, great complaints have been made. This section limits to a very great degree, perhaps to a dangerous degree, the power of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to make compromises, and certainly it goes as far as we ought to go. There must be some power in some one to compromise cases pending in court, and cases as they arise.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I know we once had this subject up, and I thought we passed an act; but probably it failed between the two Houses. It seems to me that this section is somewhat incongruous the way the committee have amended it. The section as it stands authorizes the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the assent of the Secretary of the Treasury, to make a compromise; and then it provides:

And in every case where a compromise is made there shall be placed on file in the office of the Commissioner the opinion of the solicitor.

I do not see the object of that. The opinion of the solicitor is to have no effect whatever upon the decision. It is a requirement that seems to me to be useless, unless you require it to be given in advance. It seems to me that the word "where," in the tenth line, should be stricken out and the word "before" inserted; so as to read:

And in every case before a compromise is made there shall be placed on file in the office of the Commissioner the opinion of the solicitor.

Certainly there is no object in placing the opinion on file after the compromise is made.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is a mere point of phraseology. The present words mean that. If the Senator would prefer the word "before," I have no objection to it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It does not mean that as it now stands. He may file the opinion after the thing is all over, and I think there can be no object in filing it unless it is to have some influence.

Mr. SHERMAN. As that is merely a question about words, I will not waste time upon it. It now reads:

And in every case where a compromise is made there shall be placed on file, in the office of the Commissioner, the opinion of the solicitor, together with a statement of the amount of tax assessed, &c.

The purpose of this is, that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall never make a compromise until after a full and fair investigation.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Perhaps you had better substitute the word "before."

Mr. SHERMAN. I say I will not stand upon a point of words. That is the object, to see that the Commissioner has all the facts before him, prepared by an officer who is supposed to be a lawyer. The facts of the case are to be submitted to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and then the Secretary upon the particular case is to make the compromise. Under the present law, the Secretary of the Treasury has nothing to do but prescribe regulations to control and govern the conduct of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, without any check.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator will allow me to say that if they are the same as they were made under my direction when I was in the Department, they prescribe that no settlements shall be made without the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to see a check from some other source upon these compromises than the internal revenue officers. They make up a case; they report it to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the Secretary of the Treasury, and it all goes through one channel, and the Secretary will generally approve what the officers recommend. Now, it would be very desirable, if it is practicable, to have a check from another source not connected with these internal revenue officers. For instance, if a suit is pending, let it be compromised only with the assent of the judge or on the recommendation of the district attorney.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is provided for. The Senator is talking about the section before reading it through. It goes on and provides that where a case is pending in court, the compromise shall have the assent of the district attorney, and in certain cases of the judge.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If it is not pending in court I would still have it by the assent of the district attorney or somebody else, for as it stands it virtually amounts to a compromise by the collector and the assessor, and the Secretary of the Treasury will know nothing about it from any other source. If you require the case to be laid before the district attorney and get his opinion, you have the opinion of a local officer who might know something in regard to the transaction that would not come through these officers. It is charged all over the country, whether truly or not I do not undertake to say, that many of these revenue officers are corrupt.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will ask my friend whether it is any greater injury as a general rule to adopt the opinion of the assessor and collector than of the district attorney?

Mr. TRUMBULL. No, I do not say that it is. The Senator from Maine will not understand me to say that it is, but this will give the advantage of an additional check. It is more difficult to corrupt the assessor and collector and district attorney than to corrupt either one.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, some little stability and adherence to one line of policy or another has generally been supposed to be a good thing in legislation. No longer ago than the 31st of March we supposed, all of us, at least that is the legal presumption, that we had found a panacea for this evil of unregulated compromises. We passed a bill to exempt certain manufactures from internal tax, which also provided for regulating whisky, and so on, and in that bill we passed a section of this character:

"That no compromise or discontinuance, or nolle prosequi of any prosecution under this act, shall be allowed without the permission, in writing, of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney General."

I was quite sure when the matter was broached that we had at some stage of this session solemnly declared that the true check, upon the theory that the Senator from Illinois has named of having some extraneous person who was not in the line of promotion, so to speak—

Mr. SHERMAN. That provision is in the cases of suits pending; and the latter part of this section provides a mode of proceeding in such cases.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator is altogether mistaken. It does not provide for suits pending. It covers suits pending. It is true; but let me inform my friend, as he does not need to be informed if he will think a moment, that a prosecution is not necessarily a suit pending in court. Any seizure of property under process of law (as every seizure must be, of course, if it is legal) is a prosecution against that property.

Mr. SHERMAN. That means a judicial proceeding.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My friend says in his seat, "that means a judicial proceeding." I should like to know if the scope of this bill is to seize men's property and dispose of it without a judicial proceeding? My friend, if he will look into the decisions under the customs laws—and we have had just such laws for seizures ever since the Government was organized—will find that the seizure by the collector is the first step in a judicial proceeding; it is the first step in a prosecution; just as between private persons the first step of notice of suit or filing of a claim is a judicial procedure. Therefore, the term "prosecution" covers all that. The provision I have read was not put upon any such narrow grounds as the Senator from Ohio says. The line of argument when that bill was passed was that all proceedings, that is to say, every prosecution against a particular piece of property that was seized under the internal revenue laws covered by that act, should not be compromised unless the chief law officer of the Government should concur with the chief seizing officer, as the Secretary of the Treasury is at the head of that, in the compromise.

That I believe to be perfectly right, if you are to have any compromise at all. The theory is, and it is a correct theory, that the Attorney General is at the head of the law business of the Government. He ought to be the responsible head. He ought to be appealed to when any of these large settlements are made upon the recommendation of the district attorney, or of anybody else, to be a check upon the settlement of the prosecution against property, whether you say "prosecution" means after it has got into court or while in process of getting into court; and that is why I am opposed to having any solicitor of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, for one. You are dividing up the legal responsibility of defending and prosecuting the laws among a great number of subordinate officers without any single controlling and responsible head over them. If the Internal Revenue Bureau needs the advice of a law officer, as undoubtedly it does, as every other Department and branch of the service of the Government does, let it get that advice from the proper source; that is to say, from the office of the Attorney General.

It has been in that view that we have passed in this body with great unanimity, and it has passed the other House, I believe, without a division—no matter for that; it is not proper to refer to that—and I believe it has become a law in the late method of becoming laws; that is, by not being signed and returned, providing that all matters which had heretofore been pending in the Court of Claims in charge of several solicitors and bureaus should be consolidated under the control of the Attorney General; and it was upon the wholesome and proper theory that the public service is better administered by making some one chief law officer responsible for all the law affairs that the Government has.

Therefore I hope that what has been said by the Senator from Illinois will be attended to, and that this matter will be so adjusted as that, if these compromises are to be made, they shall be made upon the assent of the Attorney General as the law part of the assenting power, or of some officer of his department, and that we shall not ever have a distinct, independent, irresponsible (and by "irresponsible" I mean, of course, uncontrollable) officer to be called the solicitor of any bureau. I think that is an abuse.

Mr. MORTON. The Senator from Vermont says that stability ought to be a part of our policy. That is true, sir, when you are sure that your policy is right; but I think that the experience of this country for the last three or four years shows that this policy of compromising has been the bane of our revenue system.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I agree to that.

Mr. MORTON. And hence I do not want stability in that direction. I say it has been the bane of it; it has been the destruction of it, so to speak; and yet we find most ample provision again made in this bill for compromising frauds in the collection of the revenue upon whisky and tobacco. Why, sir, it is not a matter of astorishment that our revenue on whisky has fallen from $30,000,000 to $13,000,000, when it ought to have been fifty or sixty or perhaps a hundred million dollars in the first place.

But the most remarkable thing about the whole history of the whisky tax is the almost total failure to enforce the criminal law. Think of it: there have been thousands of frauds; there have been hundreds, and perhaps thousands of compromises; the offenses against the law have been open and almost undisguised; and yet to-day there are not twelve authenticated cases of conviction to imprisonment for these many thousand frauds. While, perhaps, more than one hundred and fifty million dollars of revenue has been stolen, or the Government has been defrauded out of it, less than twelve persons have been convicted to imprisonment throughout the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And less than twenty brought to trial, probably.

Mr. MORTON. And the Senator from Vermont suggests, less than twenty have been brought to trial. Why, Mr. President, it is incredible. The great failure is the failure to enforce the laws. The great failure comes right home to the courts, and perhaps to the district attorneys more than to all other officers. While this great fact is staring the country in the face we propose, substantially, to continue the same system. Will we learn nothing? Are we incapable of instruction by experience? That is what is substantially said again by this section. One hundred and fifty millions of revenue has been stolen, or the Government defrauded out of it, and there have been thousands of offenses committed, and yet less than twelve persons have been convicted throughout the whole United States. Sir, we need not wonder that the whisky tax has failed. There need be no surprise on that subject. The law has not been enforced. How does it occur? Indictments have been found by the hundred, I might say by the thousand, in the different States. What has become of them? Sir, they are frittered away one way and another; not pros. upon the advice of the district attorney, perhaps with the consent of the court, taking it for granted that the district attorney knows about the character of the cases; compromises have been made by the hundreds and the thousands; and the general result is that detection in a fraud upon the revenue carries with it no other penalty than that of a compromise. It carries with it no penalty of punishment. It only carries with it the penalty of a compromise, in which the offender escapes by paying much less than the honest tax would be. Need we wonder, then, that the whisky tax has failed? We are now doing that which is humiliating and mortifying to me—acknowledging the incapacity of the law, and surrendering to the whisky thieves by bringing down the tax from two dollars to fifty cents—a confession that because of the corruption of the judiciary and the revenue systems of this country we are incapable of collecting the tax.

Why, sir, when a man is detected in a fraud upon the revenue the first thing he does is to start for Washington city with his friends. If he is a man of wealth or has any kind of respectability he can get men to go with him, and members of Congress sometimes, to the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, or to the Secretary of the Treasury, and, if we refer this matter to him, to the solicitor of internal revenue, and represent that this man is an honest, intelligent man, who did not intend to do any wrong; and the thing is fixed up in some way. It has been done to such an enormous extent that the revenue upon whisky is a failure. Shall we repeat the same thing and provide for these compromises? I dare say that every dollar that this Government has obtained in the way of compromise of these whisky cases has cost the Government $200. We have lost $200 where we have made one dollar by a compromise. I would a great deal rather not provide for any compromise at all.

Mr. President, sometimes the greatest fact will fail to make any impression upon the public mind. Here is the great fact, and I must repeat it, that there have been thousands of offenses and many millions have been stolen, and these offenses have become so public and notorious that they are scarcely disguised, and yet less than twelve convictions have taken place to imprisonment in the United States.

Now, sir, what is the effect of this section? It provides:

He [the Commissioner of Internal Revenue] is empowered and authorized to make such compromise with the advice and consent of the solicitor of internal revenue.

That is the bill as it comes from the House. The Committee on Finance propose to strike out the words "solicitor of internal revenue" and to insert "Secretary of the Treasury." Then the bill as it comes from the House reads:

Whose opinion in the case, with the reasons therefor, shall be given in writing and delivered to the Commissioner.

These words are put in brackets, to be stricken out by the Committee on Finance of the Senate. Then it goes on to say:

And in every case where a compromise is made there shall be placed on file in the office of the Commissioner the opinion of the solicitor of internal revenue.

You have stricken out the solicitor above. He is not to be consulted; but the Secretary of the Treasury is consulted; but you provide below for filing his opinion after the decision has been made. The awkwardness comes from having put the solicitor of internal revenue in the bill, in the first place, as one to be consulted, and then striking out his name and putting in the Secretary of the Treasury, but leaving it below still for the opinion of the solicitor of internal revenue to be put on file.

Now, Mr. President, this solicitor of internal revenue will be very much of the same character with the district attorneys throughout the United States. He will, perhaps, be just as impressive as it turns out by terrible experience that they have been, and when he comes to give an opinion he will take the opinion that is sent up to him by the district attorney. He cannot examine all these cases originally and go back to the original sources of testimony. He will not have the time to do so. He could not possibly do that; but he will just take the opinion sent to him and excuse himself by falling back upon the advice given to him by the district attorney below. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue will do the same thing. I ask you, will he be more wise hereafter in compromising than he has been heretofore? Certainly not. I am not imputing anything against his integrity, nor that of the Secretary of the Treasury; but, I ask, will they be wiser hereafter than they have been heretofore? Their power is just the same as before. You leave the matter with the district attorney just as you have done before, not only for civil suits, but for criminal suits. When a man compromises a civil suit the criminal case always goes along with it. He never will compromise civilly if you will not compromise with him criminally. The indictment must be nolle prosequi or set aside, or he will never compromise with you civilly, and hence I find in this bill, in the beginning of the section, these words:

That in all cases arising under the internal revenue laws where, instead of commencing or proceeding with a suit in court, it may appear to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to be for the interest of the United States to compromise the same—

That seems to refer to a civil proceeding, although technically not necessarily so. But the proviso at the end of the section reads thus:

That it shall be lawful for the court at any stage of such suit or criminal proceedings to continue the same for good cause shown on motion of the district attorney.

The whole matter by this section in the future is to be left with the district attorney, as it has been in the past.

Now, sir, you start out with this great fact: that substantially the enforcement of this law heretofore has been almost a total failure; in view of the fact that there have been less than twelve convictions where there have been thousands of offenses, you may say a total failure; and yet you leave the machinery for compromising and defeating this system in the same hands in which it has almost totally failed heretofore. Sir, the compromise system is the bane of our revenue system. Let us have no compromise at all. Let us have every case tried through. If you leave that door open at all the great body of offenders will walk out through it. They have done so heretofore, and they will do it again. I want no compromise. If there is an offense committed, let it be tried out. If the man is innocent, let the court say so; if the man is guilty, let the court say so; but when you prepare a door of compromise and leave it open in the law the great body of offenders will march out through it, as they have done heretofore. Are we such Bourbons here that we cannot learn anything by experience? That would seem to be the fact.

Mr. SHERMAN. The only question now before the Senate—and it is rather surprising, after running along almost through the bill, that we should all at once be stopped by such a small pebble—is whether the compromises provided for by this section shall be approved by the solicitor of internal revenue or by the Secretary of the Treasury. That is the only question before the Senate. The general merits of the proposition to allow compromises to be made will come up at a later stage, when it will be open to amendment. I say the question we are to vote upon—no motion to amend is in order at present—is whether we shall make compromises upon the advice and consent of the solicitor of internal revenue or of the Secretary of the Treasury. Now, let us look at that for a moment. The solicitor of internal revenue is an officer of secondary importance, a mere adviser of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, a mere aid of a bureau officer. There is none now appointed, and the duties of the office are being performed by a clerk. Therefore, to make his opinion a check upon the Commissioner of Internal Revenue would be the same as to say that the Secretary of the Treasury's action must depend upon the opinion of a clerk, because that is the effect of it.

Mr. MORTON. I did not argue that question. I argued against the whole section.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know; but that is not before us at present. That is what I am complaining of. The point before us is quite a different question from the one that has been argued.

Mr. MORTON. I think it is before us.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now we interpose the Secretary of the Treasury, and require his advice and consent to every compromise that is made in every individual case. Under existing law the Secretary of the Treasury has nothing to do with compromises unless his regulations require it. The Senator from Maine says that under the existing regulations they must be submitted to the Secretary; but under the law the Commissioner of Internal Revenue passes finally upon them, subject, however, to such regulations as may be made. Now we provide that no compromise can be made except with the written assent of the Secretary of the Treasury; and further than that, in order to show that it cannot be done upon insufficient information, we require another officer to file his opinion in writing, setting out certain facts, the basis of the opinion by the Secretary of the Treasury.

It may be said that we ought to make the opinion of the solicitor of internal revenue final. That would not be right. Otherwise, we ought to leave it entirely to him. But with the aid of this written opinion the case is made up, goes to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, is decided by him, and if his opinion in favor of compromise is approved by the Secretary of the Treasury in that particular case, it is made unless, forsooth, a suit has been commenced. If a suit has been commenced, the bill, as it came to us from the House of Representatives, required the assent, in addition, of the district attorney. In order to avoid the objection to that I intended, at the proper stage of this bill, to move to strike out so much of it as provides for the assent of the district attorney, and to require the assent of the Attorney General. This would make it harmonious. In all matters that arise before suit, the case must be settled by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with the advice and consent of the Secretary of the Treasury, and upon the opinion in writing of the solicitor of internal revenue. That surely is a sufficient guard. After a suit is commenced I would require all these other aids or checks, and in addition to them the opinion of the Attorney General.

To require the opinion of the Attorney General in advance on matters not brought into court at all would be to burden him with the whole weight of the business of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Thousands and tens of thousands of cases arising out of ignorance or mistake or misapprehension or errors on the part of officers come to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and are decided as matters of formula. If every one of those cases must be brought before the Secretary of the Treasury or the Attorney General we might as well provide for half a dozen Attorneys General. He could not do it. But when a suit has been commenced and is pending, and a proposition is made to compromise that suit, we may then properly ask for the opinion of the Attorney General. There is, then, a good deal of force in the objection made by the Senator from Indiana that the opinion of the district attorney, who, perhaps, is interested, or who, by possibility, may be corrupt, or who is lazy, indolent, careless, and would rather settle a suit than try it, should not be final. I think it would be very proper there to interpose the opinion or assent of the Attorney General.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator permit me to ask him if there is any provision in this bill fixing within what lapse of time after a seizure is made, an information or proceeding shall be filed in court against the property seized?

Mr. SHERMAN. That reminds me of another observation. More than nine cases out of ten are cases where no seizure has been made. For instance, suppose a mistake in the case of the income tax. The question comes before the Commissioner of Internal Revenue whether a certain man has been assessed properly for income. There may be no seizure. There may be no property to seize. The only remedy may be by suit. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue has the case made up before him, and he may say, "it is better on all the facts of the case to take so much money in settlement of this claim than to commence suit."

Mr. EDMUNDS. There may be no seizure in an income case. There the prosecution must be personal.

Mr. SHERMAN. As a matter of course this section applies to all cases, and in the great body there are no seizures. There are no seizures except in regard to whisky and tobacco. It seems to me the committee have sufficiently guarded this section. If the Senate, upon the second reading of the bill, choose to strike out the whole section, that is another question; but my own judgment is that you cannot administer the collection of the internal revenue without trusting somebody with the power to adjust disputes, and compromise both before and after suit. All the checks and all the guards that may reasonably be suggested to guard against the abuse of this power I am perfectly willing to vote for; but the power itself must be provided for by this bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I did not get any answer to my inquiry from the chairman of the committee, who I supposed was familiar with the bill, whether there is any provision in this proposed law for requiring a prosecution, as he calls it, a suit, to be commenced against any property seized within a definite period of time?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir. There is a statute of limitations against commencing it after a certain time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That we understand. That is quite a different thing. The result of it then would be, as the section will stand with this amendment put in, while the power of compromise would be left with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with his solicitor and the Secretary of the Treasury indefinite and absolute, there would be no obligation on the part of those officers, or anybody else, ever to commence a suit in the world. They might hang up a seizure, therefore, just as long as they pleased, until the party whose property had been seized could, through the instrumentalities that the Senator from Indiana has so well referred to, bring sufficient influence to bear to produce a compromise.

I do not see any difference in theory or in justice between requiring a check from the Attorney General's office after a libel, if that is the proper term, has been filed or before or after a seizure has been made. If you leave it as it now stands, a case may be hung up indefinitely; and then comes on the party whose property has been seized, who has committed the fraud, with his friends, and gets his member of Congress, or his Senator, to go first to the solicitor, and then to the Commissioner, and then to the Secretary. Failing there, he goes to the fountain-head of all honor and all pardon, the President of the United States; and at last through some of those officials he gets off entirely. That is altogether wrong in my opinion. It has been, as my friend from Indiana has said, the greatest abuse in this country—this matter of compromising these claims before any process is filed in court where parties upon both sides can see exactly what the charge is, and exactly how much the Government would be entitled to have by way of forfeiture or the duplication of the tax, as the case might be made.

In the external revenue service experience has provided a much more satisfactory way. The laws and regulations prescribe that within ten days—I believe that is the number of days—a very short period of time after a seizure is made, a libel shall be filed, so that the judicial officers of the Government, whose bounden duty it is to protect the Government against frauds of this kind, will have their hand upon the prosecution, as well as the mere executive officers of the Government; so that you then have an additional safeguard not only as to the rights of the citizen whose property may have been illegally or improperly seized, but you have a safeguard for the rights of the Government that no private settlement brought about by political favor, personal influence, corruption, bribery, or whatever improper influence may be brought to bear, can be had.

No provision of that kind is made here; and while you give an absolute and indefinite power of compromise and settlement to these mere executive officers, you do not impose upon them any duty at any time which would be a corresponding check of proceeding against the property in court. The result is that you surrender the whole thing into their hands, and our experience has shown, as the Senator from Indiana has so well said, and I need not repeat it, that it has been the greatest abuse in the way of collecting taxes and the imposition of burdens that this country has ever experienced.

As the Senator from Ohio has said, all this does not necessarily and exactly arise upon this precise amendment; but when we are voting one thing out and another thing in without any explanation, the implication would fairly arise that we were satisfied with what we were voting in and were satisfied to leave it in that condition. I do hope we shall make some change that will impose upon these officers the duty of prosecuting the property in court so that there will be a check upon them, or else that we shall have this check enlarged by referring it to some other department of the Government, like that of the Attorney General.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Vermont if he understands that in every case of seizure it is necessary to prosecute a suit in court under this act?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know whether it is or not. I know it ought to be. I know the Constitution says a man shall not be deprived of his property without due process of law.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Before the Senator from Oregon goes on, I ask him to allow me to propose a distinct amendment and see if the Senator from Ohio and the committee will not agree to it. Instead of the committee's amendment, I suggest that we take the House section as it is down to the ninth line, and after the word "writing," in the ninth line, insert "and be approved by the Attorney General."

Mr. JOHNSON. How will it read then?

Mr. TRUMBULL. It would read in this wise:

That in all cases arising under the internal revenue laws where, instead of commencing or proceeding with a suit in court, it may appear to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to be for the interest of the United States to compromise the same, he is empowered and authorized to make such compromise with the advice and consent of the solicitor of internal revenue, whose opinion in the case, with the reasons therefor, shall be given in writing and be approved by the Attorney General and delivered to the Commissioner.

Then before the Commissioner settles the case he would have the opinion of the solicitor of internal revenue approved by the Attorney General.

Mr. SHERMAN. As I said before, I have an amendment on my table already prepared to make the opinion of the Attorney General necessary after suit is brought.

Mr. TRUMBULL. This would not subject the Attorney General to very great labor, because he would not prepare an opinion himself, but would revise and examine the opinion of the solicitor, and would have simply to indorse it "approved."

Mr. SHERMAN. It would subject him to labor that the Attorney General cannot possibly perform. In order to understand this matter, you must take it generally; you have got to examine several laws. It is utterly impossible for him to do it. If the Senator wishes information on the subject, I will try to give it to him. The forty-first section of the internal revenue law, as it now stands, authorizes suits by collectors to collect all taxes and to enforce all fines, penalties, and forfeitures. No suit, however, can be commenced without the sanction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. In the great multiplicity of these cases a suit does not grow out of one in a hundred of them. They are decided first by the assessor, whose decision may, by appeal of the interested party, be finally brought to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. No suit can be brought under the existing law without his sanction. It comes up before him usually, first upon the assessment by the assessor, and then upon the resistance by the party assessed, and the case comes before him in the light of a judicial officer. Now, the question comes up before him, "Shall I sue?" He decides that in the first place. He says "It is better on the whole for the interests of the Government that this matter should be settled." Under the existing law he can settle it without limitation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does that apply to seizures, or only suits for underrating taxation?

Mr. SHERMAN. That applies to all proceedings of every kind and description.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Read that clause.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will read section forty-one of the present law, so that I shall not have to read it in another portion of the argument:

That it shall be the duty of the collectors aforesaid or their deputies, in their respective districts, and they are hereby authorized, to collect all the taxes imposed by law, however the same may be designated, and to prosecute for the recovery of any sum or sums which may be forfeited by law; and all fines, penalties, and forfeitures which may be incurred or imposed by law, shall be sued for and recovered in the name of the United States, in any proper form of action, or by any appropriate form of proceeding, qui tam or otherwise, before any circuit or district court of the United States for the district within which said fine, penalty, or forfeiture may have been incurred, or before any other court of competent jurisdiction. And taxes may be sued for and recovered, in the name of the United States, in any proper form of action before any circuit or district court of the United States for the district within which the liability to such tax may have been or shall be incurred, or where the party from whom such tax is due may reside at the time of the commencement of said action. But no such suit shall be commenced unless the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall authorize or sanction the proceedings: Provided, That in case of any suit for penalties or forfeitures brought upon information received from any person, other than a collector, deputy collector, assessor, assistant assessor, revenue agent, or inspector of internal revenue, the United States shall not be subject to any costs of suit, &c.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is not the question which I wished answered. I am alluding to a case of seizure for a violation of the law by fraud or otherwise, for the forfeiture of the very thing, as the seizure of a distillery of whisky. I wish to ask him if forfeitures of that kind are prosecuted by the collector of internal revenue instead of by the district attorney in court?

Mr. SHERMAN. As a matter of course, when an actual suit is commenced, it is by the district attorney. A seizure is not considered in these proceedings in the light of a suit. Provision is made for proceedings of various kinds before suit is commenced. A seizure is made by an officer, and finally by an appeal the merits of the case on the face of the papers, are brought before the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. He then, for the first time, decides whether he will appeal to the courts to enforce that seizure, or enforce that tax, or that claim, whatever it may be; and he directs it to be done either in one form of action or another. He directs a prosecution in criminal courts; he direct a qui tam proceeding; perhaps a seizure, or he directs a suit.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am speaking of the case of seizure alone for the time being, so that we shall understand each other; whether in a case of seizure of property as forfeited, and which must be proceeded against in rem—"the United States against so much property seized for a violation of the revenue laws"—whether a prosecution of that description ought not to go into court, and be controlled by the same principles that relate to seizures for violations of external revenue, where, as the Senator knows, the law has always provided that the prosecution, as he calls it, the suit against it, the libel should be filed within ten, or a certain number of days? That is the point to which I wished to call attention.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have already answered that. As I understand it, it is not necessary at all to go into court to commence a suit or any proceedings in court to enforce a seizure. The officer goes on in pursuance of the authority conferred. He seizes the property and he sells it. He proceeds to act as the executioner of his seizure, to judge and sell the property. As a matter of course the owner of the property has a right by proper proceedings to restrain him, and to bring the case into court; but the officer may go on and enforce the sale of the property without any legal proceedings. However, upon complaint, and upon an appeal, in any stage of the proceedings, it comes before the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and then he determines whether or not he will call to his aid the courts.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do I understand the Senator from Ohio to say that in a case of seizure for a forfeiture instead of a seizure to enforce the collection of taxes by sale of the property, the collector of the internal revenue tax may dispose of that property finally without a decree of condemnation of a court?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do say so, and I say it has been done, and is done, and is provided for by this bill. The very portion of the bill which has been passed upon provides in case of forfeiture how the sale shall be conducted, the mode and manner of proceeding. As a matter of course any person believing himself injured has a right to appeal to the courts, and so the United States may, on an order of the Commissioner, appeal to the courts.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then, may I ask my friend, if the United States have the right, under the power of seizure, to sell the forfeited property without any steps of a court at all, what is the object of their ever taking a step in court? Why file a libel if they can sell without a libel? That cannot be the construction of the act. I am very much mistaken—my friend from Ohio will pardon me if I say so—if he is not confusing himself by confounding the case of a seizure of a man's property under a warrant to compel him to pay what he owes, and the seizure of his property for a criminal violation of law which forfeits the property itself. In this last case I am very much mistaken, I repeat, if the law is not, and has not always been, that before the United States can dispose of that property they must file an information or a libel against it in a proper court, and have it tried where the claimant may appear and defend himself, and condemned by the judgment of the law. That is the class of cases that I am alluding to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know that it is necessary for us to pursue the various and devious proceedings of the law; but I have stated to the Senate what I understand to be, and what is daily practiced, the ordinary mode of proceeding in the collection of internal revenue. Either party, the claimant or the United States, through the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, may at any time appeal to the aid of the courts.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What does the Commissioner want of the aid of the courts if he can sell the property?

Mr. SHERMAN. In not one case in a hundred is there property to seize.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am speaking of the seizure of property.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then he must appeal to the courts, and where a private individual is aggrieved he has a right to appeal to the courts. Either side may appeal. The only question now is whether the solicitor of internal revenue or the Secretary of the Treasury ought to be selected as the advising and consenting officer to a settlement. Whether the Attorney General ought to be added in the multiplied cases that would arise where no suit is to be brought, is for the Senate to decide. I say to impose that duty on the Attorney General where no suit is pending, to pass merely in revision upon the acts of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in the ordinary discharge of his duty, would be to incur his office with a mass of details totally inconsistent with the discharge of the duties of that high office. Even the amendment that I intend to propose, requiring his assent to the settlement of cases where suits are pending, will impose upon him a mass of labor which, in my judgment, will make it necessary to give him additional assistance more than the law now contemplates.

Mr. MORTON. The law already provided for the initiation of proceedings is very abundant, as read by the Senator from Ohio; and it is so clear that I believe no two Senators agree as to what it means. Mr. President, as was remarked by the Senator from Ohio, there is not much use in discussing this law here. Why?

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not say that.

Mr. MORTON. "In discussing that question here," I understood you to say.

Mr. SHERMAN. I say it belongs to another stage of the bill. We are on the first reading of the bill, and no amendments to it are now in order except the amendments of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MORTON. Perhaps this discussion is just as proper here as anywhere else; but a discussion as to what this law means is not very important at any time. It is practically a dead letter, and it has been. You might almost as profitably read from Robinson Crusoe or Baron Munchausen. The whole system is a failure. There is the great truth about it—it is a failure.

Now, Mr. President, let me refer once more to the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois and that suggested by the Senator from Ohio. The Senator from Illinois proposes to throw an additional safeguard around this compromise by having it finally referred to the Attorney General. I will take the case of a compromise of an offense in a case where suit has not been commenced. The parties come before the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the Secretary of the Treasury, or the solicitor of internal revenue, as the case may be. They present an ex parte statement, one that is very strong on their side and not on the other. They succeed in getting a compromise with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and the solicitor of internal revenue, not being any better lawyer, perhaps, and not having half the experience, they make out a case that is all fair on the face of it. It would perhaps satisfy you or me just by reading it; but bear in mind it is an ex parte case. They submit that to the Secretary of the Treasury. What time has he to go back to the original sources of information? Here is their paper that is fair on its face. He gives it his assent. Then they take it to the Attorney General, and the same paper, fair and unexceptionable on its face, making out a good case, receives his approval. What time has he to go to Cincinnati or St. Louis, or to send out there and make original examinations about the case? None at all. It is out of his power to do so. He is bound to take the case as it is sent to him.

Therefore I say that the proposition to send the case to him for revision is a mere sham; it is a humbug that amounts to nothing. And thus it is with the whole system. It is an ex parte system that is a sham from beginning to end. If you do not believe it, I ask you again how it has worked? Just go back to your experience of nearly five years and ask yourself how it has worked. If men will not learn from experience they cannot learn from any source. How has it worked? As it has worked in the past so it will work in the future. And yet, sir, here we are about to reenact the same old folly, the same system which has led to the great loss the Government has sustained and the almost universal escape of these great criminals, some of whom, perhaps, are now, or very often are, sitting in our galleries, the finest gentlemen about the city, who have robbed the Government of millions and yet have gone harmless from the law. They have suffered no penalty but that of a compromise, and we are reenacting the same thing right over again.

Sir, if they can cheat the Government out of two dollars on the gallon they can cheat it out of fifty cents on the gallon on the same system. The temptation is not quite so great; but they have now learned the business; all the processes have been studied out. It is not half the trouble now to get up a fraud that it was three years ago, because they know how to do it. It is a trade; and it will pay them just as well to get up a fraud now on fifty cents a gallon as it did three or four years ago on two dollars a gallon, and they can do it just as easily. And here they find us coming in, constructing a great big door of compromise, through which they can travel without jostling each other, as they have done in times past.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Mr. President, I am as much in favor of closing the door against compromises as any Senator possibly can be; but it is indispensable that some party here in Washington should have the power of making compromises. As long as human nature is no purer than it is at the present day, there must be somebody to protect the honest tax-payer, or he will inevitably suffer if this power is not given. For instance, suppose that one of the officers either ignorantly or maliciously shall seize and confiscate the property of a tax payer; if it is ignorantly done, say that it is a mere mistake of figures; if it is maliciously, it is done for the purpose, say, of black-mail, of levying a contribution, or something of that kind. When this comes to the knowledge of the officers here in Washington there ought to be somewhere a power lodged for compromise.

But allow me to say to Senators who were so earnest on this subject that all the fault is not here at the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. We have had positively no convictions in the last six months—

Mr. MORTON. Allow me to correct my friend from Vermont. I do not mean to say that the fault is here. I said last winter, and I say now, that the great power lodged in the hands of district attorneys has been fatal to prosecutions, because there have been no prosecutions.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. The fault has been chiefly with the district courts. We have several district judges who have so charged that it was impossible that any jury should convict, and we have had in some places jurors who were in the interest of the "whisky ring" and would not convict.

There is another reason. Congress itself is not entirely exempt from blame. The district attorneys are not paid sufficiently to attend to these numberless cases. They are paid in some instances not more than their mere traveling expenses, so that they are no better off for attending to the cases than they would be if they stayed at home; and in some instances I am told that they cannot attend to the cases and pay their board and traveling expenses without absolute loss. These things ought to be remedied by Congress.

All that I rose for, Mr. President, was to protest against the idea which seemed to prevail from the current of the debate that there was great wrong and corruption here at Washington in relation to the compromise of cases. I do not believe it. There may be some errors, some blunders, some mistakes, and I am quite ready to go for a restriction of the rule; but it ought to remain there to some, at least to a moderate extent. If we find the courts all over the country, as they have done for the past six months in New York and in Richmond and in one other place, so charging the juries as to produce conviction, we shall have no trouble in executing the laws and collecting the revenue; but until we can do that, of course we shall fail.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Finance to section one hundred and one.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in lines eight, nine, and ten of the section, to strike out the words "whose opinion in the case, with the reasons therefor, shall be given in writing and delivered to the Commissioner."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line twelve of the section, after the word "solicitor," to insert "of internal revenue."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to propose to strike out the words "the district attorney," in the twentieth line of section one hundred and one, and all the words to the end of the section, and insert in lieu thereof "the Attorney General," so that in cases where suits have been commenced and are pending the assent of the Attorney General shall be required to a compromise.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think that amendment is objectionable notwithstanding it comes from the chairman of the Committee on Finance. I did not know that the committee had agreed to any such amendment. It seems to me that the district attorney is the person who must necessarily have personal knowledge of the transaction, and he ought to be required to recommend a discontinuance of a prosecution before it is discontinued or compromised by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The Attorney General has no knowledge of the subject at all, and can have none whatever except what he derives from other officers. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue has no knowledge on the subject except what he derives from others; and so of the Secretary of the Treasury. These officers here in Washington who are required to act, must necessarily derive their information from the officers in the district where the suit is pending. I would not object to an amendment requiring the consent of the Attorney General, also, in addition to the district attorney; but to strike out the district attorney and substitute the Attorney General it seems to me would be rather unwise.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am not authorized by the committee to accept such an amendment, but I have no objection personally to requiring the district attorney as well as the Attorney General. My own opinion is, however, that a district attorney ought not to have anything to do with the settlement of cases. He is an interested party. His fees are somewhat contingent on the number of cases he tries. As a matter of course the Attorney General would not consent to the settlement of cases without some information from the district attorney, and I would rather just throw the responsibility where suits are pending on the Attorney General. The preceding part of the section provides that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue must go through all these matters and make an arrangement, if that is deemed better than a suit; and then it goes on to provide in addition that the assent of the district attorney must be had to a compromise in cases where suits are pending. The district attorneys are sometimes men upon whom we can not place entire reliability, and they are somewhat interested. They may have acquaintances who are interested. Their friends may be the parties implicated. Now, the Attorney General is a responsible officer here, and he would act probably on information derived from the district attorney. I am disposed, therefore, to require his sanction as the chief of the law department. I agree with the logic of the Senator from Illinois so far as suits are concerned, but I would not burden him with the matter before suits are brought. It is, however, for the Senate to say.

Mr. HOWARD. I hope the amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed in section one hundred and one to strike out, in lines twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, and twenty-three, the words "district attorney for the judicial district in which the suit or proceeding is pending, or of such other counsel as may be employed to conduct or prosecute the same on the part of the United States," and in lieu thereof to insert "Attorney General."

Mr. CORBETT. I have drawn up an amendment which I suppose is not in order at this time, but I may state it for the information of the Senate. I am opposed to striking out the district attorney, but I propose, after the word "pending," in line twenty-one, to insert "and his statement under oath that in his opinion said case cannot be maintained in court."

Mr. HOWARD. Most of the cases that are compromised must, of course, rest on the mere facts of the case rather than upon the law; and I do not see what additional security the Government gets from consulting the Attorney General. I do not think we shall derive any advantage at all from such a provision, for the very reason that as the case must depend on the facts which are not within his knowledge, his recommendation would amount to very little indeed. The great difficulty is to make some provision for the settlement of cases of controversies as they happen to arise before they are brought into court. I think that a very dangerous practice. It cannot be denied that it will necessarily open the door to great temptation and to frequent frauds on the part of the officers of the Government, for it is in effect almost holding out an invitation to persons engaged in the administration of this law to get up cases against parties for the very purpose of compromising them and making something out of them and putting it into their own pockets.

I do not say that it is convenient, or even possible, perhaps, to frame a law which shall be entirely free from such an objectionable provision; but I think we ought to be very strict about it, and to give no more discretionary authority to officers of the Government than is absolutely necessary. Where the line is to be drawn I really am not able myself to see just at this time; but I am clear in one thing, that I would not impose on the Attorney General this additional burden contemplated by this amendment of the Senator from Ohio. He cannot look into the subject as it ought to be examined because he has not the means of ascertaining the facts of the case. Where do the facts come from? Where is the original proof, the original evidence upon which a compromise is to be made? It is presented in the first instance ordinarily by the officers of the revenue to the district attorney. The district attorney is first informed by the informers what the facts are in regard to a particular case. He derives his information from them; and if afterward he undertakes to make any recommendation in the case, his recommendation must of course rest entirely on the veracity and reliability of his informers. These informers in many cases, not to say in most cases, we all know to be men upon whose veracity the world is not very generally willing to rely.

I think myself, if it were practicable, it would be safer for the Government in all cases to permit no compromise unless a suit had been actually brought in court and the pleadings put in, and something like the facts of the case developed before the public. After that, if the case should present peculiar grounds of hardship to the accused, so frame your bill that the facts may be made public, may be made known, and somebody held responsible for the compromise made.

As a question of principle, Mr. President, I certainly should be in favor of such a provision, and in favor of excluding from the law this discretionary authority to settle controversies before they have been brought into court. There is the point of difficulty in this whole case, that it is to be done privately, secretly, when the eyes of the world are not upon it, when it is impossible for the public really, in most cases I mean, to ascertain what the real nature of the case is.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, the Senate has passed at this session—I am not sure whether the House of Representatives have concurred in it or not—a bill abolishing the solicitors of the Court of Claims and providing for the appointment of two Assistant Attorneys General, and casting upon these officers the duty of attending to suits in that court. It is very doubtful whether those two can properly discharge that duty, for there are some thousand or more of cases in that court; and the result of the measure will be to leave the Attorney General alone to attend to the business proper of his office as it exists under present laws, which is to give opinions to all the heads of Departments that may from time to time request opinions of him, and to the President, and to try all the Government cases that may be in the Supreme Court either by appeal from the decisions of the Court of Claims or from the several circuits.

It is very obvious that duties so extensive as these can be of themselves hardly adequately discharged by any one man. They require not only a high order of ability and great professional knowledge, but they require the greatest possible industry; they will take up nearly all the time any man can devote to them. Now, it is proposed by this bill to cast upon him duties that will very seriously increase his labors, and duties which I think he is very unfit to discharge. He cannot know except through the district attorney of the district where the case may be pending, or through the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, what the facts of each case are; and when he is called upon to decide on statements made by those officers, either individually or conjointly, it will very often happen that whether he is to dismiss the suit or not will depend upon how he may view the facts in each case. Sometimes it may depend upon his opinion of the law. In the execution of this internal revenue bill, I can imagine that hundreds and hundreds of cases will be sent to him almost monthly that it will be impossible for him properly to attend to; and the result will be, unless he declines altogether for want of time, if he attends to them all, that he will take the statement of the district attorney or the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

It is true, as stated by my friend from Indiana, as I believe, that one of the difficulties which we have had in connection with the revenue under this particular tax has been a want of integrity on the part of some of the subordinate officers, and perhaps that want of integrity may have been found in some of the district attorneys. We cannot expect to find integrity in all the multitude of officers the United States have. That would be almost a chimerical hope. But we must trust the officers; and the only safeguard that we have against suffering from their want of integrity is to be found, I think, in punishing them criminally. Make it a criminal offense for a district attorney to settle a case wrongfully, and knowing that it is wrongful, and he will, perhaps, very seldom be found to commit that wrong.

But what I rose for was merely for the purpose of saying that the bill, by the amendment proposed by the honorable chairman in behalf of the committee, will so add to the labors of the Attorney General that it will be impossible for him properly to discharge them.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend the bill by striking out sections one hundred and two and one hundred and three, which are as follows:

Banks and Bankers.

SEC. 102. And be it further enacted, That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a tax of one twelfth of one per cent, each month upon the average amount of the deposits of money, other than public money of the United States, subject to payment by check or draft, or represented by certificates of deposit or otherwise, whether payable on demand or at some future day, with any person, bank, association, company, or corporation engaged in the business of banking, and a tax of one fourth of one per cent, each month on the average amount of all deposits of public money in their possession to the credit of the Treasurer or any disbursing officer of the United States; and a tax of one twenty-fourth of one per cent, each month, as aforesaid, upon the capital of any bank, association, company, or corporation engaged in the business of banking, and on the capital employed by any person in the business of banking, beyond the average amount invested in United States bonds; and a tax of one sixth of one per cent, each month upon the average amount of circulation issued by any bank, association, corporation, company, or person, including as circulation all certified checks and all notes and other obligations calculated or intended to circulate or to be used as money, but not including that in the vault of the bank, or redeemed and on deposit for said bank. And a true and accurate return of the amount of circulation, of deposit, and of capital, as aforesaid, and of the amount of notes of persons, State banks and State banking associations, and of States, cities, towns, or other municipal corporations, paid out by them for the previous month, shall be made and rendered monthly by each of them to the assessor of the district in which such bank, association, corporation, or company may be located, or in which such person has his place of business, with a declaration annexed thereto, verified by the oath or affirmation of such person, or of the president or cashier of such bank, association, corporation, or company in such form and manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. And for any refusal or neglect to make or to render such return and pay the tax, any such bank, association, corporation, company, or person, so in default shall be subject to and pay a penalty of $200, besides the additional penalty and forfeiture in such other cases provided by law; and in default of such return the several amounts subject to tax shall be estimated by the assessor, or assistant assessor, on the best information he can obtain. And in the case of banks with branches, each branch shall make a separate return, and the tax shall be assessed on each severally. And so much of the forty-first section of the act to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof, approved June 3, 1864, as imposes a tax on the banks organized under that act, and requires returns to be made to the Treasurer of the United States, be, and is hereby, repealed: Provided, That the deposits in associations or companies known as provident institutions, savings-banks, savings funds, or savings institutions, having no capital stock and doing no other business than receiving deposits to be loaned or invested for the sole benefit of the parties making such deposits, without profit or compensation to the association or company, shall be exempt from tax on so much of their deposits as they have invested in securities of the United States, and on all deposits less than $500 made in the name of any one person; and the returns required to be made by such provident institutions and savings banks shall be made on the first Monday of January and July of each year, in such form and manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

SEC. 103. And be it further enacted, That every national banking association, State bank, or State banking association, corporation, company, or person engaged in the business of banking, shall pay a tax of ten per cent, on the amount of notes of any person, State bank, or State banking association, or of any State, town, city, or other municipal corporation, used for circulation and paid out by them, and such tax shall be assessed and paid in such manner as shall be prescribed by law, and by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue: Provided, That this section shall not apply to banks, persons, or institutions which are in liquidation and which have not issued any notes for circulation for a period of more than one year.

The amendment was agreed to.

Section one hundred and four, now become one hundred and two, to which no amendment was proposed, was read, as follows:

SEC. [104] 102. And be it further enacted, That when any tax is imposed, and the mode or time of assessment or collection is not provided for, the same shall be established by regulation of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and the Commissioner is authorized to make all such regulations, not otherwise provided for, as may become necessary by reason of any change of law in relation to internal revenue made by this act.

Section [one hundred and five] one hundred and three was next read, as follows:

SEC. [105] 103. And be it further enacted, That where not otherwise distinctly expressed or manifestly incompatible with the intent thereof, the word "person," as used in this act, shall be construed to mean and include a firm, partnership, association, company, or corporation, as well as a natural person; and words of the masculine gender, as applied to persons, to mean and include the feminine gender; and the singular number to mean and include the plural number; and the word "State" to mean and include a Territory and District of Columbia; and the word "county" to mean and include parish, district, or other equivalent territorial subdivision of a State.

Section [one hundred and six] one hundred and four was next read, as follows:

SEC. [106] 104. And be it further enacted, That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed: Provided, That all the provisions of said acts shall be in force for levying and collecting all taxes properly assessed or liable to be assessed, or accruing under the provisions of former acts, the right to which has already accrued or may hereafter accrue under said acts, and for maintaining and continuing liens, fines, penalties, and forfeitures incurred under and by virtue thereof. And for carrying out and completing all proceedings which have been already commenced or that may be commenced to enforce such fines, penalties, and forfeitures, or criminal proceedings under said acts, and for the punishment of crimes of which any party shall be or has been found guilty: And provided further, That an office created by the said acts and continued by this act shall be vacated by reason of any provisions herein contained, but the officers heretofore appointed shall continue to hold the said offices without reappointment until their successors, or other officers to perform their duties, respectively, shall be appointed as provided in this act: And provided further, That whenever the duty imposed by any existing law shall cease in consequence of any limitation therein contained before the respective provisions of this act shall take effect, the same duty or tax shall be, and is hereby, continued until such provisions of this act shall take effect; and where any act is hereby repealed, no duty or tax imposed thereby shall be held to cease in consequence of such repeal, until the respective corresponding provisions of this act shall take effect.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to amend that section by striking out the word "and" before "continuing," in the eighth line, and by inserting after the word "continuing" the words "and enforcing."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move further to amend the section by striking out lines ten, eleven, twelve, thirteen, and fourteen, as follows:

And for carrying out and completing all proceedings which have been already commenced or that may be commenced to enforce such fines, penalties, and forfeitures, or criminal proceedings under said acts, and for the punishment of crimes of which any party shall be or has been found guilty.

And inserting in lieu thereof:

But this act shall not be construed to affect any act done, right accrued, or penalty incurred under former acts and every such right is hereby saved; and all suits and prosecutions for acts already done in violation of any former act or acts of Congress relating to the subjects embraced in this act may be commenced and proceeded with in like manner as if this act had not been passed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read the following amendment reported by the Committee on Finance, to be added to the bill as section one hundred and five:

SEC. 105. And be it further enacted, That in any case where there has been a refusal or neglect to pay any tax imposed by the internal revenue laws, and where it is lawful and has become necessary to seize and sell real estate to satisfy the tax, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may, if he deems it expedient, direct that a bill in chancery be filed, in a district or circuit court of the United States, to enforce the lien of the United States for tax upon any real estate, or to subject any real estate owned by the delinquent, or in which he has any right, title, or interest, to the payment of such tax. And all persons having liens upon the real estate sought to be subjected to the payment of any tax as aforesaid, or claiming any ownership or interest therein, shall be made parties to such proceedings, and shall be brought into court as provided in other suits in chancery in said courts. And the said courts shall have, and are hereby given, jurisdiction in all such cases, and shall, at the term next after such time as the parties shall be duly notified of the proceedings, unless otherwise ordered by the court, proceed to adjudicate all matters involved therein, and to pass upon and finally determine the merits of all claims to and liens upon the real estate in question, and shall, in all cases where a claim or interest of the United States therein shall be established, decree a sale, by the proper officer of the court, of such real estate, and a distribution of the proceeds of such sale according to the findings of the court in respect to the interests of the parties and of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert:

SEC. 106. And be it further enacted, That the internal revenue laws imposing taxes on distilled spirits, fermented liquors, tobacco, snuff, and cigars, shall be held and construed to extend to such articles produced anywhere within the exterior boundaries of the United States, whether the same shall be within a collection district or not.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have several amendments to propose now, mostly of a verbal character that are not printed. In line five of section three, on page 4, I move to strike out the word "or" before "starch," and after "starch" to insert "molasses."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. On page 9, after the word "business," in line three of section seven, I move to insert "after the passage of this act and on the 1st day of May of each succeeding year."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. On page 11, in line thirty-four of section eight, before the word "conditioned," I move to insert "such bonds shall be."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. In line twelve of section seven, line ten of section eight, and line thirty-seven of section eight, I move in each case to strike out the words "this act" and insert "law."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. On page 13, I move to strike out all of section ten after the word

"provided," in line twenty. The words to be stricken out are:

And, in like manner and under like restrictions and provisions, there shall be ascertained, recorded, and reported, the capacity of every establishment now existing, or that may be hereafter commenced, for redistilling distilled spirits.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. On page 15, after the words "carried on," in line nine of section twelve, I move to insert "nor within six hundred feet from premises authorized to be used for rectifying."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. On page 19, before the word "spirits," in line eighteen of section sixteen, I move to insert "low wines or."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. After the word "condenser," in the next line, I move to insert, "back to the still or doubler, or forward."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. On page 30, section twenty-three, I move to strike out, in lines four and five, the words, "and shall be immediately removed into the distillery warehouse;" at the end of line five to strike out the word "and;" and after the word "proved," in line six, to insert "and marked," so as to make the section read:

That all distilled spirits shall be drawn from the receiving cisterns into casks, each of not less capacity than twenty gallons wine measure, and shall thereupon be gauged, proved, and marked by an internal revenue gauger, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. In line ten of the same section, after the word "shall," I move to insert "be immediately removed into the distillery warehouse, and the gauger shall."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. On page 39, in lines nineteen and twenty of section twenty-eight, I move to strike out the words "on all money accounted for by him for tax collected on distilled spirits."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. On page 49, in line two of section forty-two, after the word "distillery," I move to insert "nor distilling apparatus."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. On page 56, in line twenty of section forty-eight, I move to insert the words "and sold," after "manufactured;" and in the same line, after the words "put up," to insert "and sold."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. On page 73, at the end of section fifty-five, I propose to insert:

And whenever in the opinion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue any distillery or other warehouse shall become unsafe or unfit for use, or the merchandise therein shall for any reason be liable to loss or great wastage, the Commissioner may discontinue such warehouse, and require that the merchandise therein shall be transferred to such other warehouse as may be designated by him within such time as he shall prescribe. Such transfer shall be made under the supervision of the collector, or such other officer as may be designated by the Commissioner; and the expense thereof shall be paid by the owner of such merchandise; and if the owner of such merchandise shall fail to make such transfer within the time prescribed, or to pay the just and proper expense of such transfer, as ascertained and determined by the Commissioner, such merchandise may be seized and sold by the collector, in the same manner as goods are sold upon distraint for taxes, and the proceeds of such sale shall be applied to the payment of the tax due thereon and the costs and expense of such sale and removal, and the balance paid over to the owner of such merchandise.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. On page 79 I move to strike out the clause which has been agreed to in regard to retail liquor dealers, and substitute for it the following:

Retail dealers in liquors shall pay twenty-five dollars. Every person who shall sell or offer for sale foreign or domestic spirits, wines, ale, beer, or other malt liquors, and whose annual sales, including the sales of other merchandise, do not exceed twenty-five dollars, shall be regarded as a retail dealer in liquors.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON. I desire to offer an amendment striking out fifty cents and inserting two dollars as the tax on whisky per gallon.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am not quite through with the amendments of the Finance Committee.

Mr. CAMERON. Then I give way for the present.

Mr. SHERMAN. On page 85, in lines seven and eight of section sixty-one, I move to strike out the words "except snuff, which may, at the option of the manufacturers, be put up" and insert "or."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. In line seventeen of section sixty-one, on page 86, I move to strike out "can be" and insert "has."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. In lines six and seven of section sixty-seven, on page 93, I move to strike out the words, "the manufacturer's name and."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. In section eighty-nine, line four, page 114, I move to strike out "conclusive" before "evidence" and insert "prima facie."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I offer an amendment now to come in at the end of the bill:

And be it further enacted, That all provisions of this act which requires any use of revenue stamps for denoting the tax thereby imposed, shall take effect at the end of sixty days from the passage of this act: Provided, That if at any time prior to the expiration of the said sixty days it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury that a longer delay is necessary for the preparation and due delivery of any such stamps, he shall be authorized to fix a day not later than the 1st day of December next for putting said provisions, relative to the use of either of such stamps into operation, and shall give public notice of the day so fixed and determined upon, which day shall then be held and taken to be the time when that portion of this act which requires the use of revenue stamps for denoting the tax thereby imposed, shall have effect.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now, I believe, all the amendments of the committee have been acted on except those on pages 59 and 60 to section fifty, which were passed over informally last night. I ask that they be acted on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments to the fiftieth section which were passed over will now be considered.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Committee on Finance propose to insert as part of section fifty before the word "that:"

That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall have power, whenever in his judgment the necessities of the service may require, to employ competent persons, not exceeding fifty in number at any one time, whose term of service shall continue at the pleasure of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who shall perform such duties and at such places as may be required of them by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, at a rate of compensation to be determined by the said Commissioner before the commencement of his employment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have been looking at that amendment and the other amendments in that section, and my opinion is that to adopt the amendment will be injurious. It is a change from the provision made by the House of Representatives, which, I think, is much better. To understand it you will have to look back a little. The House provided in the preceding section, on page 57:

That the Secretary of the Treasury, on the recommendation of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, shall appoint one officer for each United States judicial district to be called a supervisor of internal revenue on distilled spirits and tobacco, whose duty it shall be to reside in such district and keep his office, &c.

The Committee on Finance have changed that, and I think have changed that section for the better. Instead of confining it to supervisors of distilled spirits and tobacco in each judicial district, they have provided for the appointment of a specified number of general supervisors of internal revenue. It is quite obvious that you do not want a supervisor of distilled spirits and tobacco in every judicial district, for there are many judicial districts in the United States where no spirits are distilled, and no tobacco grown. Therefore that provision has been very well changed to provide for the appointment of a specific number, not exceeding twenty. You want as many as may be needed for the districts in which spirits are distilled and tobacco is grown and manufactured; and if twenty are enough—upon that I give no opinion—I am willing to agree to it, and make them general supervisors, though the object is undoubtedly to supervise those particular manufactures.

Then it will be observed, and I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the provision, that they afterward dispense with general agents in the section which is now under consideration, but they do retain the local inspectors. In conversation with the honorable chairman he thought it was not the intention to retain the local inspectors, but by looking at the preceding section he will see that it was the intention to retain them, because if you look on page 59 you will see that in speaking of the power of the supervisor of internal revenue, it is said:

"He shall have power to transfer any inspector, gauger, or storekeeper, from one distillery or other place of duty to another, or from one collection district to another within his district, and may by notice in writing suspend from duty any inspector, gauger, or storekeeper."

And then in the succeeding section they abolish the Treasury agents, special and general, but say nothing about inspectors. Now, the Committee on Finance have provided for another class of officers, who are in fact general agents, and authorize the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, "whenever in his judgment the necessities of the service may require them, to employ competent persons, not exceeding fifty in number at any one time, whose term of service shall continue at the pleasure of the Commissioner;" and then they strike out all the district inspectors, by adding the words:

"That from and after the passage of this act no general or special agent, by whatever name or designation he may be known, of the Treasury Department in connection with the internal revenue, and no district inspectors, except as provided for in this act, shall be appointed, &c."

It may be very well to substitute gangers and inspectors and supervisors in districts where tobacco is raised and manufactured, where those officers may be needed; and perhaps a small number of general supervisors all through may be useful; but in other districts, in my judgment, you cannot dispense, and it was not the intention of the House of Representatives evidently to dispense with the local inspectors altogether. The number of them has always been within the control of the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary by this new provision will undoubtedly be relieved of the necessity of appointing a great number of them; but if Senators will think a moment they will see that the information gained by local inspectors, which they have of the business of their immediate neighborhood, of the property of men, of the income of men and the business which they do, is absolutely essential to the collection of the revenue, more especially that part of it which arises from the income tax.

I cannot give a better example of it than my own State. We distill no liquor there; we raise no tobacco there. The revenue, such as there is, is derived from other sources. Of what use in the world for looking up the sources of revenue there would be these agents, of whom there may be fifty, who are to be sent wherever the Commissioner may want to send them? He will only send them in cases where he fears there may be fraud. They will not be on the spot, will not have the power to know what the property of men is, or the income of men, or the business of men that produces income. You want local knowledge on these points.

I think it vastly better, therefore, and it will work a great deal better, to leave the provision as the House of Representatives had it, and rely upon your storekeepers and gaugers and supervisors with reference to the two great sources of revenue, spirits and tobacco. But when you come to all the other matters, and especially in districts where there are no spirits and tobacco manufactured, you must have the local knowledge of this set of men, because you see that if you strike down the inspectors you have no local agents except the collectors and assessors and their assistants, who have duties of their own to attend to, and they will not do and never have done this particular kind of business, and that is the reason why inspectors have been found necessary more or less in all the States. There has never been but two in the State of Maine, and they have been found sufficient. I suppose there has not been more than one in the State of New Hampshire and one in the State of Vermont, though perhaps there may be two in each of those States. You want the local knowledge of such men and the bestowal of their time upon ascertaining what the revenue ought to be.

For the reasons I have stated I do not think that the substitution of these fifty agents who may be sent away to distant places from time to time, as the Commissioner may see fit to send them, will be of any essential service. I have seen that done in other cases. After a fraud has been committed an agent is sent to look it up and settle it, but that is after the thing takes place. An agent of that kind cannot look after the things of which I have been speaking. If you are to provide for such agents, you had better have a smaller number and leave the local inspectors to be appointed in such districts as the Secretary of the Treasury or the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, no matter which, shall think necessary. Otherwise my judgment is that you will lose a great deal of your revenue, especially that revenue which is derived from incomes.

I hope, therefore, that this amendment will not be adopted, but that the section will be left substantially as it was passed by the other House originally. I think it will work much better and produce a better effect. I am told that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue favors this view of the case, and I think, unless he has changed his opinion entirely from what he said to me, he would be opposed to striking out all provision for local inspectors, and the Senator from Ohio will see by looking at the latter part of the previous section that that was not the design of the House. I hope that this amendment will not be adopted, or, at any rate, if it is, that the number provided for will be cut down, and the local inspectors left wherever the Commissioner may see fit to appoint them, as there are some places where they will be absolutely needed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the Senators present will give me their attention for a few minutes while I state the reasons that actuated the committee, and then they can decide as to the best class of officers to be employed for the detective service. The existing law provides for detective service, for revenue agents, special agents, and revenue inspectors. The duties of inspectors are defined by existing law, and the provision in regard to them is:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury may appoint inspectors in any assessment district where in his judgment it may be necessary for the enforcement of internal revenue laws or the detection of frauds, and such inspectors and revenue agents aforesaid shall be subject to the rules and regulations of the said Secretary, and have all the powers conferred upon any other officers of internal revenue in making any examination of persons, books, and premises which may be necessary in the discharge of the duties of their office. And the compensation of such inspectors shall be fixed and paid for such time as they may be actually employed, not exceeding four dollars per day and their just and proper traveling expenses."

They are local officers appointed for detective service only; they have no powers except simply for the detection of frauds and look after the observance of the revenue laws. The House of Representatives, by section forty-eight of the bill, undertook, as we supposed, to strike out all detective officers and special agents. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue had the impression, and so stated to the committee, that the section repealed all authority to employ district inspectors; but on examining the law, I am satisfied, as the Senator from Maine is, that it did not do that, that it abolished the special and general agents, but left the district inspectors. The question was then with the committee whether we should continue these local officers in their offices or whether we should provide some other mode of detecting frauds; and that is the question presented to the Senate.

After consideration we thought it better to give to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue authority to employ temporarily, from time to time, upon compensation to be fixed by him, dependent on the character of the service, contingent or absolute, a certain number of inspectors or detectives, because they are detectives, with authority to send them from Washington wherever he might have reason to believe a fraud had been committed. For instance, there is a famous detective in the city of Chicago who it is believed can pursue any kind of fraud or allegation of fraud until he solves the riddle; and it is said that no one can avoid his detective power. It is important sometimes for the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to have it in his power to employ persons of that kind, men of great experience, to whom large pay has to be given; sometimes, perhaps, contingent pay. It was thought better to entrust him with this power to employ temporary service, even if it costs more, in order to follow out threads of fraud which may be in his possession from other officers. These inspectors are merely local officers; they, perhaps, have their affinities, their likes and dislikes in the district. They may not have the general knowledge and information required for this service, and at four dollars a day they are not likely to have. Their pay is too small to secure the character of service needed, and we propose to give to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue power to secure the service he needs.

The Senator may be correct in supposing that it is proper to give him a certain number of district inspectors, and the amendments are in such shape that the Senate can divide them; but I consider it vital to give the Commissioner of Internal Revenue power to employ the kind of service he needs. The present Commissioner will go out soon; but whoever is at the head of the office should have power to employ the best detective talent in the United States of America for the time being to follow up any frauds that are alleged.

When we reached this section last night the Senator from Illinois [Mr. TRUMBULL] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] admitted the importance of this service, admitted that fifty was not an unreasonable number, admitted that the mode and character of employment here proposed was advisable, but they said they were troubled with a constitutional difficulty; that as the Constitution conferred the power of appointment of inferior officers upon the President, the heads of Departments, or the courts of law, according to the discretion of Congress, these persons could not be employed temporarily by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue because the employment is not by the President, the head of a Department, or a court of law. I did not think there was anything in that suggestion, and I do not now. There are more than a dozen officers who are neither heads of Departments nor courts of law who are now authorized to employ persons in just such language as is used here. The Superintendent of the Government Printing Office employs a whole army of people and fixes their pay almost without any limitation, or with only a general limitation. In the navy-yards hundreds of people are employed every day on indefinite pay, not by the head of a Department, but by a master workman, an inferior grade of officer. The officer in charge of the public buildings and grounds in this city employs great numbers of persons. So of the architect of the Treasury extension. I thought over this morning of more than a dozen officers who now exercise the power, according to law, of employing and discharging people and fixing their pay; so that I think there is no constitutional difficulty.

Mr. FESSENDEN. None at all. This is nothing but an employment, not an office.

Mr. SHERMAN. So I said last night; but these learned lawyers thought there was some grave constitutional question. I think reflection must convince anybody that the power to employ persons temporarily in the discharge of the duties devolved on an officer may be confided to that officer, and it is not necessary to have those persons appointed by the President and Senate, or by the President alone, or by the head of a Department, or by a court of law.

If there is no constitutional objection to conferring this power upon the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, there are many reasons why it ought to be conferred upon him, and not upon the Secretary of the Treasury. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue is charged with the important duty of enforcing the revenue laws; the power of the Secretary is simply supervisory. It may be vitally important to give the Commissioner of Internal Revenue power to detect offenders, even without the knowledge of the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury is a political officer, more or less affected by political influences, and disposed to appoint persons to office for political reasons. If a detective applied to the Secretary of the Treasury for office, he would have to show that his political opinions were those of that great officer in position at the time. In order to make his application to the Secretary, he would have to be right on political issues. But if the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, having a suspicion of fraud or collusion in any collection district, or desiring to watch the conduct of any subordinate, was at liberty, without consulting any one, to just say to Mr. Pinkerton or any one else, "You go and follow out this suspicion of mine; see whether there is any ground for it; do whatever is necessary to detect it, and I will pay you a liberal compensation dependent on the character of the service," it might be of great advantage to the Government.

That power ought to be exercised, and it seems to me that the number of these employes is not too great under all the circumstances. Still, if the Senate think fifty are too many at any one time, they can reduce the number. Even if the Senate think it important to keep these revenue inspectors in certain districts they ought to furnish the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with these agents to follow up the system that is proposed by this section. At present the Commissioner of Internal Revenue has not a single officer having his entire confidence, whom he can appoint and set to work in the discharge of this duty. The special agents and revenue agents are not appointed by him, but are appointed upon political influence. There are now three or four hundred of them scattered over this country that do not do much else than attend to politics. This bill wipes them out, dispenses with them entirely. By another law the number of general revenue agents was entirely unlimited, but by this bill they are abolished. Not one of these persons can now be called upon by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to perform this important duty, because they are all appointed either for political reasons or for local reasons as local agents.

As this is a divisible amendment, I trust the Senator from Maine will first allow the question to be taken on the first clause.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator has convinced me—in fact I made no opposition to it—of the wisdom of putting it into the power of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to employ these detectives; but according to his own showing they are only needed on special occasions. When the Commissioner thinks there is necessity to investigate affairs in any one district, he sends an agent he can trust. That is very well; he should have that power; but those things do not occur every day, and therefore it strikes me that the number of fifty at one time presupposes that there is to be fraud going on continually of an enormous character all over the country, and that he must have a large force of detectives. It strikes me that if he were limited to a less number it would answer the purpose, though of course if you have a good officer he will not use any more than he wants, and so no harm will come by providing for fifty. But the Senator will perceive, and the Senate must see, that these men are only to be used on special occasions to hunt out particular frauds, and they are to be sent from Washington for that purpose. It is well that there should be such a class of officers; but they do not make up for the constant vigilance and supervision of officers who are on the spot. The small leaks are constantly occurring and it needs vigilance and care to guard against them. These detectives can know nothing about them and can find out nothing about them, whereas a vigilant and careful local officer on the spot, looking at the manner in which the collector and assessor perform their duties, and looking up the sources of revenue can render very great service to the Treasury. I speak of that from some little personal knowledge, for I have known of cases where they have been of great value. You get men that are shrewd, men that devote a certain portion of their time to that business, what is necessary, and they get their four dollars a day. You can find shrewd men who are willing to take that, and who do.

Under these circumstances, while I am perfectly willing that as many of these detectives to be at the command of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue as he may need, shall be granted to him, and approve very much of that idea and certainly do not design to make any opposition to it, yet I say, it will not do, unless you mean to leave all chances of small leakages open, not to be looked after, which in the end amount to a great deal, to dispense with the local inspectors; and as I said before, it is quite evident that the House of Representatives did not mean to dispense with them. They perceived the necessity of having them still kept. Undoubtedly the number will be very much diminished, when you have appointed the gaugers and storekeepers and supervisors for whom this bill provides. The probability is that the committee were led to strike them out from the consideration that they were legislating in this bill for nothing except liquor and tobacco. That is nominally so; but by changing the whole phraseology of these sections as the Committee on Finance propose, they dispense with all these other officers who are needed for other things, a separate class entirely. Whatever the Senate may do with the first amendment to the fiftieth section, I hope they will strike out the other, which dispenses entirely with the local inspectors, for I am satisfied that many of them are exceedingly useful and that as a class they are necessary to be kept.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) Does the Senator from Maine ask for a division of the question?

Mr. FESSENDEN. No, sir; the amendment as it stands is an amendment proposed by the committee. I express the hope that it will not be adopted. I had thought of proposing to limit the number; but if the committee say that they are satisfied that even if you keep the local inspectors there ought to be as many as fifty of these agents I will withdraw any opposition and yield my judgment to that of the committee who have examined the subject. My impression is that the Commissioner cannot want as many as fifty at any one time to investigate matters in different parts of the country, because they are to investigate only particular cases for which they are sent.

Mr. SHERMAN. In regard to the number I will say that it was fixed after full conference with Mr. Rollins. He thought fifty might sometimes be useful. Sometimes two or three may have to be sent off on the same errand. As a matter of course they will not be employed unless their services are required.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Very well; I make no objection to the number.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President, I have a few words to say in regard to this bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I ask the Senator if he will not let us dispose of this section.

Mr. CAMERON. I would rather not. I have been waiting for an hour and a half to get an opportunity to say what little I desire to say, and I think I may as well do it now as at any other time.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have been waiting here all day to get a chance to have this question settled.

Mr. CAMERON. To satisfy the Senator I will begin my remarks by reference to the motion now before the Chair, and by saying that I agree perfectly with the Committee on Finance as to the machinery for collecting the tax on whisky. I think it was very well gotten up by the Committee of Ways and Means of the other House, and was in very good shape when it was passed by the House; but the Finance Committee of the Senate have perfected it to a great degree, and have made great improvements on it. Hitherto one great trouble in collecting the tax on whisky has been in the means provided for doing it. Now, the difficulty I have with this measure is not in regard to the mode of collecting the tax, but it is with the bill itself.

Mr. President, I cannot give my consent to the proposed reduction of the tax on whisky, from two dollars to fifty cents per gallon. The arguments in favor of such a reduction are forcible, but they are not convincing to my mind.

From the beginning of the whisky frauds it has been the custom of dishonest distillers to place about one eighth of the amount manufactured in bond, with the intention of abandoning that portion to the Government. It was not possible, even for the "whisky ring," to steal all the tax levied, and this bonding of a small part of the manufacture was the result of shame rather than of duty to the Government. By abandoning a fraction, whenever payment became necessary, the pretext was secured for swindling the revenue of the tax on the remaining seven eighths boldly thrown on the market, and that proportion of the tax was openly stolen from the Treasury.

Mr. SCHENCK, the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House, gives the amount of whisky now in bond at more than twenty-five million gallons. The Government now has a legal lien of two dollars per gallon on this whisky, amounting to $50,000,000. By this bill we deliberately forego our legal rights to $140 on each gallon of this whisky. By reducing the tax to sixty cents we make a present of $40,000,000 to those who have been constantly and systematically robbing us. Would it not be wiser to adhere to the two dollar tax, and realize the $50,000,000 now due, or, when the proper time arrived, confiscate and sell this twenty-five million gallons at the market rate, and so secure $37,500,000, or about twice as much as has ever been paid in one year from this source of revenue, which should pay us $200,000,000, and to that extent relieve the honest industries of the country.

It is claimed that an increase of revenue will follow a reduction of this tax as proposed in the bill before us. I doubt this very seriously. Whisky can be produced, I am informed, for forty cents per gallon. The proposed tax of fifty cents is one hundred and twenty-five per cent. of the cost of production. I believe it is much more. But I take the figures as I find them. The amount annually distilled is, say, one hundred million gallons. On this vast amount a tax of fifty cents per gallon is enough to excite the cupidity of the rogues who have been defrauding us, and enough to satisfy even the greed of the "whisky ring." For if, under the reduced rate, we collect as much as we now do, and I have no idea we will collect more, there will remain unpaid and stolen the sum of $30,000,000 a year as a premium on villainy.

I am satisfied that it is not good policy to reduce this tax now. It is a virtual admission that we cannot enforce the laws. The remedy does not lie in a modification of the laws, but in their enforcement. It may be that for a few months longer we must continue in the disgraceful attitude of a Government unable or unwilling to execute its laws. But had we not better continue the struggle until an honest Administration under Grant shall relieve us, than to abandon the contest to a corrupt combination of law-breakers and escaped criminals leagued in this stupendous villainy? There are plenty of men in this country who have both the nerve and the integrity to collect this tax; and when it shall become possible to secure the appointment of one such any tax we may choose to levy will be collected, depend upon it.

To surrender to this organized theft, and to admit the "whisky ring" to be the masters of the Government, may meet with favor from those to whom peace is precious; but it will not satisfy minds used to grappling with difficulties, and to overcoming opposition. We have the unquestioned right to levy whatever tax we please on whisky, and I am one of those who believe that we have the power to collect whatever we may choose to levy on this purely luxurious product. The English Government levys, and collects, ten shillings, or $2 47 per gallon on spirits, and I am unwilling to admit, by the proposed reduction, that we are not equal to the task of collecting our revenues. A nation which suppressed the rebellion should not be guilty of this disgraceful surrender to the "whisky ring." The immense majority of the American people respect the laws, and pay, without resistance, what you impose upon them; in their name I protest against the passage of this bill, because it still further oppresses the honest tax-payers to enrich that band of thieves who have conspired to defy your laws, and to debauch and corrupt your public life. That conspiracy has already succeeded in making the revenue service a nest of robbers, and this bill is their payment for that work. These convictions account for the earnestness with which I renew my protest against its passage.

I have other grave objections to this reduction. The burdens of taxation should be borne by just such luxuries as whisky, wines, and tobacco. I know that, under the incoming Administration, this whisky tax can be and will be collected. If you reduce the tax on spirits now can you restore it a year hence? No candid man will assert that an increase can be passed after a surrender, which plainly admits our inability to enforce the payment now. It is not statesmanship to tamper with laws to suit temporary emergencies; especially laws which produce revenue should not be hastily changed. They should never be touched at the dictation of an admittedly corrupt combination engaged in defying them.

If the hope of increased revenue from this measure should be disappointed, if a less amount shall be collected than at present, which I fear, then must the inevitable deficit be made good by the honest and now suffering industries of the country. I, for one, will not place these interests in danger of additional burdens by relieving the most undeserving of all our productions from its just share of the expenses of the Government.

When the tax was fixed at two dollars per gallon an immense remission of taxes was made in the interest of the whisky manufactures. All whisky in first hands was allowed to go free of tax, and this was the entering wedge to all the corruption which has followed. How much we were mistaken as to the determination to collect this tax may be shown by a reference to the debates of the House of Representatives. If my memory is not at fault, General SCHENCK, the able chairman of the House Committee of Ways and Means, at the beginning of this session declared that the two-dollar tax could and would be collected. This opinion prevailing, another large remission of taxes (about one hundred million dollars) was made in favor of the manufacturers. The result of all this must be a large deficit. What assurance have we now that an increased revenue will follow a diminution of this tax. What fair reason have we to hope that we can again restore this tax, when an honest Administration shall make its collection possible? I have no idea that a reduction of the tax will yield or secure an increased revenue, nor have I any hope that we may restore the two-dollar tax if we now abandon it. If I am right, I know that an enormous deficit must result from such legislation as this bill contemplates, and that this deficit must be made up by taxation which shall press with severity upon interests now staggering under heavy burdens.

I cannot approve legislation which makes such a danger possible, and I submit to Senators whether we ought not now to insist on the retention of the tax at two dollars per gallon, and throw on the present Administration and its supporters the odium of cheating the revenue at every point and on every pretext. By continuing to fight this universal corruption until a new order of things shall relieve us, we not only do our duty, but we lay bare the robbers, whose shameful thefts are the cause of so much danger and so much national disgrace, and we will fill the Treasury by a tax of which no one will complain.

One very important consideration with me is that we should give permanence to such laws as affect values. An honest manufacturer of whisky is not so anxious about the sum per gallon you tax his product as he is that the sum shall be fixed and reliable. It is large operators and speculators who are benefited by these changes in the revenue laws.

At this moment it is publicly announced that one of these wealthy speculators has bought an interest in bonded whisky, so large that he actually controls the whisky in bond, and the price of it in this country. This immense interest has been bought by this man for ten cents per gallon, and the passage of this bill will enable him and his associates to make millions, while the honest producer can justly claim that we are unsettling the basis of his business without benefiting any one except those who have become conspicuous in their opposition to the enforcement of the laws, and their accomplices who occupy high positions in the Government.

But my opposition to a reduction of the tax is intensified because of the improved machinery for the collection of whatever tax we may decide upon, which this bill secures. We are now collecting less than ten per cent. of the whisky tax. I hope that this bill will secure, even under the present order of things, not less than fifty per cent. of this tax; and I am certain that under an honest administration we shall be able to collect nearly all of it. Assuming this, how will we stand relatively? With a tax of fifty cents we shall obtain $25,000,000 per year for the balance of this administration. After it passes away we shall, no doubt, succeed in collecting $40,000,000 per annum, or just the amount we now present to the "whisky ring," in the vain hope of developing honesty in that batch of ruffians.

Now, let us calculate what would be the result if we retain the two-dollar tax, and it will appear that until the 4th of March next we may secure a revenue at the rate of $100,000,000, and after that period $180,000,000 a year, every cent of which will be so much taken off the better industries of the country and placed on that one which ought to pay the most heavily.

In every view of this case I hold it to be our duty to refuse to make the proposed reduction. Gentlemen favor this bill because under the corrupt influences now at work the "whisky ring" are enabled to cheat the Government out of vast sums, and with these sums so stolen they may carry the elections next November. Will gentlemen who make this a pretext for voting a reduction of the whisky tax be good enough to demonstrate, if they can, that the people can be bought, and, if so, why the $40,000,000 we now present to the "ring" owning the bonded whisky is not sufficient for their purpose?

If money stolen from the revenues can elect a Democratic successor to Johnson, does any sane man doubt that it will be stolen? I do not, for an instant doubt this, but I am determined that they shall steal this money and bear the odium of the theft, and by no means wheedle me into voting a corruption fund of $40,000,000 into their pockets to enable them to defeat that man whom no one else has ever defeated.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I suggested some objections to this particular amendment last evening, which I will now repeat with some additional thoughts which I will state.

Here are a large number of appointees provided for without any designation; no name given. What are they to be? Commissioners, agents, superintendents, inspectors? They are called "persons," the most general term which could possibly be selected.

In the next place, it is a little remarkable that there is not the slightest attempt to define their duties; the section does not prescribe what they shall do! They may do anything, so far as this amendment is concerned, that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue tells them to do. Are they to be engaged in inspecting establishments on which taxation is imposed? Are they to examine and assess property? Are they to make collections of money that is to come into the Treasury under the revenue laws? Are they to detect frauds, pursue investigations with reference to those indirect and corrupt influences which we encounter in administering our system? What are they to do? The amendment does not inform us. I venture to say this is the most vague and indefinite designation or appointment to public duty of which our legislation bears any account.

Again, sir, it is a little remarkable that while compensation is provided for, no rate is fixed. Here are fifty persons or officials, whichever you call them, who may be engaged continuously in the public service; there is no limitation of time, and their compensation may be anything which the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may choose to fix. If he chooses to pay them twenty dollars per diem the faith of the Government is pledged to the appropriation of that money, or rather to its payment, for I suppose general appropriations would cover this outlay of public funds. Let me read this amendment in connection with my remarks:

"That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall have power, whenever in his judgment the necessities of the service may require, to employ competent persons, not exceeding fifty in number at any one time, whose term of service shall continue at the pleasure of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who shall perform such duties and at such places as may be required of them by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, at a rate of compensation to be determined by the said Commissioner before the commencement of his employment."

That is a very remarkable amendment, and as I understand this is to supply all the existing provisions which relate to the appointment of agents of the Treasury Department in connection with the internal revenue, and also for the appointment of district inspectors except as provided in other parts of this act. I am very reluctant to assent to anything so vague, indefinite, and in my judgment so liable to abuse as the new system of appointment of revenue persons, I suppose I may call them, proposed in this amendment. As to the number of them I have no means of information. I am perfectly content to take the judgment of the committee as to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Finance.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There is another amendment proposed to the thirteenth line of the same section to insert the words "and no district inspectors." I move to amend that by striking out "and no district," and inserting "except inspectors;" and then after "inspectors" insert the word "and."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Committee on Finance propose after the word "revenue," in line thirteen of section fifty, to insert the words "and no district inspector."

The Senator from Maine moves to amend the amendment by striking out the words "and no district," and inserting "except;" and after "inspectors" to insert "and;" so as to make the clause read:

That from and after the passage of this act no general or special agent, by whatever name or designation he may be known, of the Treasury Department in connection with the internal revenue, except inspectors and except as provided for in this act, shall be appointed, &c.

The amendment to the amendment was adopted.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Now, to carry that out, it will be necessary not to agree with the committee in inserting the words "or inspectors" on the next page.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no disposition to press this matter; but one great complaint that has been made has been that an inspector has been appointed for almost every district in the United States. How true that is I cannot tell. I have no doubt this will continue them in office.

Mr. FESSENDEN. They can be reduced and will be unquestionably when you come to appoint these other officers, but there are some districts where there must be inspectors where we cannot get along without them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK stated the amendment of the Committee on Finance to be to insert the words "or inspectors" after "agents," in line sixteen of section fifty.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move the following as an additional section to come in at the end of the bill:

And be it further enacted, That the penalty provided by law for issuing any instrument, document, writing, or paper without being duly stamped, may be remitted by the collector in the manner and cases specified in section nine of the act approved July 13, 1866, entitled "An act to reduce internal taxation to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes,' approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof," at any time prior to the 1st day of January, in the year 1869, or at any time within one year after the making and issuing thereof.

I can explain this in a word if it needs any explanation. The chairman understands it. Section nine of the act referred to provides for remedying the difficulties occasioned by the want of a stamp. The provision is substantially that wherever a stamp has been omitted, it may in certain cases and in a certain way be put on afterward on paying the proper sum and paying the penalty affixed of fifty dollars. Then there is an additional provision that that penalty in different cases where the collector is satisfied that the stamp was omitted by accident or misunderstanding, without any intention to deter the Government, may be remitted, also. The provision is that it may be remitted at any time before the month of August of that year, or at any time within one year after the date of the instrument, application being made for the purpose. This amendment merely provides that the time within which the penalty may be remitted may be continued up to the 1st day of January next.

We have to pass these acts every once in a while in order to prevent a good deal of evil to the community.

It is merely continuing the time within which the collector, in old cases, where they come to the knowledge of persons may remit the penalty. My attention has been called to it by a letter I received from West Virginia stating a very hard case, and I presume there are many cases of that kind in the southern States, particularly where they do not know the trouble until they come to use papers in court. In such cases, where there was no intention to defraud the revenue, to impose the penalty of fifty dollars would be very oppressive.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I desire to propose an amendment to section fifty-four, pages 70 and 71. It will be noticed by Senators that in the case of drawbacks the bill of lading is to be sent to the collector of customs at the port of entry, and then another transmitted to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. It is deemed to be better that this should be confined to the collector of the port of entry and the returns made to the Secretary of the Treasury instead of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and I am about to propose amendments to effect that object. In line five I move to strike out the words "in charge of exports" and insert "of customs." Then in line nine I move to strike out "Commissioner of Internal Revenue" and insert "Secretary of the Treasury." In lines forty-four and forty-five I move to strike out "sent to the collector of customs at said port of entry and;" at the end of line forty-five, to strike out "the other;" in line forty-six, to strike out "entry shall be;" and in line forty-seven, to strike out "Commissioner of Internal Revenue" and insert "Secretary of the Treasury," so as to make the clause read:

One bill of lading, duly signed by the master of the vessel, shall be deposited with the said collector, to be filed at his office with the entry retained by him; one of said entries shall be, when the shipment is completed, transmitted with the duplicate of the bond to the Secretary of the Treasury, to be recorded, &c.

In line fifty I move to strike out the words "in charge of exports" and insert in lieu thereof the words "of customs," and at the end of that line and the beginning of the next to strike out the words "the internal revenue" and insert "a customs;" so as to read: "an order or permit signed by the collector of customs and directed to a customs gauger," instead of an internal revenue gauger.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. These amendments are to a section which has been inserted.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I propose to include all my propositions in one amendment after I have read all I propose. On page seventy-two, line fifty-five, I move to strike out "internal revenue" before the word "gauger;" and at the end of the line and beginning of the line fifty-six to strike out the words "in charge of exports;" and then, at the end of line fifty-six, and beginning of the next line, to strike out the words "Commissioner of Internal Revenue" and insert "Secretary of the Treasury;" and in line fifty-eight to strike out "in charge of export;" so that the clause will read:

The casks or packages shall be inspected and gauged alongside of or on the vessel by the gauger designated by said collector, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, &c.

Now, Mr. President, in order to effect all these changes I move to substitute the section as amended as I propose for the present section fifty-four. The effect is to place this matter in charge of the collector of the port of entry and the Secretary of the Treasury instead of the officers of internal revenue and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. POMEROY. The several amendments produce that effect?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Yes, sir; and I move it all in one amendment now. I move to substitute the section, as amended, for the section as it stands in the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is right. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue requests that the amendment be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont proposing to modify what has been already amended is not strictly in order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suggest that the bill be reported to the Senate and then it can be done.

Mr. POMEROY. It can be done now by general consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received if there be no objection. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to suggest an amendment. I do not see the necessity or propriety of more than one mode of taxation of whisky. The first section of the bill provides for a tax of fifty cents upon each and every gallon. There are other sections of the bill that impose a special tax, one a tax of four dollars for every cask of forty gallons, "and the collector shall proceed to collect the same as in cases of other assessments for deficiencies." These two classes of tax upon whisky and the different modes of collection tend to complicate the system. It seems to me that the more simple the system can be of taxation upon whisky the better for the tax-payer, and for the Government also. I think it would be much better that there should be but one tax imposed upon whisky. If the tax of fifty cents is not sufficient for the purpose of revenue let the additional special tax of four dollars per barrel be comprehended in an increase of the tax of fifty cents.

There are some other objections to this special tax of four dollars a barrel. It will be equivalent in large distilleries to a daily payment of tax. That is what some gentlemen write to me who are engaged in the distillation of whisky. I will read a paragraph from one of their letters:

"You will observe that the tax as imposed by sections twelve and sixty-five on future distillation are all collected monthly, which is equal to cash. A distiller making, say twenty-five barrels of whisky per day, will have to pay, perhaps, not less than $120 per day of taxes in cash."

The tax being made payable monthly he deems to be equivalent to a tax collectable each day. I suppose there is very little difference. A man engaged in distilling whisky making that quantity will have to keep his deposits in bank from which to pay this tax monthly; and it would make very little difference to him whether he paid it daily or monthly. But it seems to me that a system of taxation cannot be too simple. In proportion as you simplify it you make it acceptable to the people who have to pay the tax; you make it easily comprehensible by them, and by the officers who are to collect the tax. Certainly there is much greater liability to misunderstandings and to vexatious delays and impediments under this double system of taxing whisky than there would be upon a simple principle of taxing it so much per gallon.

I think that the honorable chairman of the Committee on Finance could, without any sacrifice of the interests of the public Treasury, include both systems in one simple mode of taxation. Let the amount that shall be collected upon whisky, the total aggregate amount, be payable by a simple tax of so much per gallon.

There is another objection to the special tax. That is payable before the whisky is sold. It is payable monthly; it is payable, therefore, as a general rule, before the sale of the whisky. Large operators will have to advance a considerable sum in the way of this special tax before they can have the opportunity of selling their whisky and obtaining the money to pay the tax by the sale of the article. I think, and would respectfully suggest to the honorable chairman, that the system might be simplified and improved both in relation to the complexity that the two modes of taxation produce and the time of payment of the tax. I merely throw it out as a suggestion.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not wish to discuss this question, because I hope we shall be able to get the bill reported to the Senate before five o'clock, and avoid an evening session.

I desire to say that the Committee on Finance considered itself concluded upon the amount of tax to be levied upon whisky; not so precluded but that we could propose amendments; but the discussion in the other House, and the general concurrence of sentiment throughout the country in a measure precluded us from opening the question as to the rate of tax upon whisky. I regret myself exceedingly to surrender the large tax now imposed upon whisky. I thought at the time it was adopted that it was too high. I believed then that a dollar a gallon could be collected, and I still think that a dollar a gallon might be collected. But the general feeling in the country has been one of disgust at the failure to collect the whisky tax. The manifest frauds throughout the land, the gross and immoral practices that have grown out of it, have convinced men of the necessity of breaking them up even at the surrender of the tax, and I think the general judgment of the moral men of the country is that it is better to surrender this whole tax and all the revenue to be derived from whisky rather than to continue a rate of tax that is entirely for the benefit of what is called the whisky ring. It is a general satisfaction to the people throughout the country that this enormous profit, which went to the worst men in the country, should be broken up even at the sacrifice of a considerable amount of revenue. At any rate, the committee did not choose to open the question, although any Senator is at liberty to do so. We reported the fifty-cent rate because we found it in the bill.

In regard to the double tax referred to by the Senator from Kentucky, I will say that in the first place I thought the whole tax might properly be levied on spirits when sold, but I am now satisfied that it is better to divide the tax. This limitation prevents small distilleries from running to advantage. The minimum tax is levied on distilleries producing a hundred barrels or less. Consequently the small distilleries that produce twenty or thirty or forty barrels are at a disadvantage. It is to the interest of the Government to break them up, because the amount of revenue derived from these small distilleries does not pay for the gauger and proper officers to take charge of them. The tendency of the special tax we impose is to break up the small distilleries and confine the business to distilleries of a larger size.

I tried last night to get the Senate to raise the minimum. Instead of a hundred barrels I would make it five hundred, and that would have a more beneficial effect, by stopping the distillation of spirits at the small stills, where it cannot be properly watched. This arrangement divides up the tax, and they pay it monthly. It is put on in such a way that it is almost impossible to defraud the revenue. Most of the distillers prefer this division of the tax. Besides, by it the Government gets a uniform revenue, while by the other system the whisky may remain in store twelve months without the Government getting any tax, and in the mean time the Government lose by the waste, the stealing and the fraud that may occur in store during these twelve months. Under this system we at least get the tax upon the product as it is distilled paid monthly, assessed by the gauger, and ascertained by the storekeeper. It is no inconvenience, but rather, I think, a matter of convenience to the distiller, because the monthly payments break up the amount of his tax, and there is no difficulty in ascertaining it, because the same machinery which ascertains the producing capacity also ascertains the amount that is to be taxed when it is taken out of store. I will not debate it longer.

Mr. POMEROY. I am not going to occupy the time of the Senate, but I wish to say that if the Senator from Ohio expects that reducing this tax to fifty cents is going to make everybody honest, and that he will collect it, he will be, I think, mistaken. I read the debate in the other House, and I was sorry to see that our friends had all stampeded before the whisky ring. So I suppose it will be unavailable to try to make any effort here not to concur in the tax of fifty cents per gallon, though I say distinctly that I have no more faith in collecting fifty cents on the gallon than I have in collecting two dollars.

Mr. SHERMAN. If my friend will allow me, as I find there is a general disposition in the Senate to avoid a recess to-night and to sit a little longer and try to finish this bill, I desire to submit a motion—

Mr. POMEROY. I am not going to take two minutes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the recess for to-day be dispensed with, so that we may proceed along until we finish the bill. It will not take long.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I suppose the Senator means only to go on until the bill shall be reported to the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; I think we can pass it pretty soon. I move to dispense with the recess for to-day.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. POMEROY. I was only going to observe that when there has been an organized system in the country of defrauding the Government that organization will exist, and when they cannot defraud it in dollars they will defraud it in dimes, and they will keep it up. If we all stamped before the whisky ring, and give it possession, I have no more faith that we shall collect the revenue at fifty cents than that we could do it at two dollars. The machinery of this bill, I think, has been well drawn and carefully guarded, and I do not know that it can be improved upon; but for the Congress of the United States and the American people to come down to say that we cannot collect a reasonable tax, a tax that other Governments can collect, not more honest than ours or more efficient, to say that there is a ring which beats the Government and beats the revenue officers, and that we will retire from the field and say that they may have their own way, and that we will only take fifty cents on the gallon, is not only, as the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] said, humiliating, but I do not believe in the policy of it, and we shall not get the revenue by it. I will content myself by voting against it.

Mr. COLE. Mr. President, I cannot bring myself to the point of acquiescing in a reduction of the tax on whisky from two dollars to fifty cents a gallon. It seems to me that it will be an acknowledgment exceedingly humiliating to us as a nation. I believe the machinery which is provided by this new bill that we are about to act upon is very complete; every exertion, at all events, has been made in committee to make it perfect; and if it is sufficient to collect fifty cents tax on whisky I am quite satisfied that it will be sufficient to collect a larger tax. If it is not sufficient to collect two dollars tax we had better leave the machinery as it is. I do not see that we are going to add to the revenue by dropping down from two dollars tax to fifty cents tax, with, at the same time, a confession that our machinery is imperfect. The "whisky ring," if there be such a concern, and nobody can question its existence, will cheat as readily for the purpose of avoiding the tax of fifty cents as they will for the sake of avoiding a tax at a larger rate.

The tax upon whisky collected in Great Britain, as I am told and believe it to be the fact, is $2 50 a gallon—ten shillings a gallon. They are able to collect it very closely. They are able to collect, I believe, about all of that description of tax. We, it seems, are not so successful. But the presumption is, or ought to be, that we are improving our machinery, that we are getting it so nearly perfected that we can collect more and more of the tax. The machinery, no doubt, has been imperfect from the start so as to admit of many frauds; but it takes some time to perfect any description of machinery. Senators need not be reminded that the steam engine was many years in becoming perfected; and the means by which any particular description of tax is to be collected cannot be made perfect at once. With this presumption that is now before us that the machinery about to be provided if this bill passes will be more efficient to collect the tax, we ought not certainly at the same time that we provide this machinery reduce the tax from two dollars down to half a dollar. I have thought all along since this matter has been discussed that we might reduce it from two dollars to one dollar, but to reduce it to one quarter what it was, and to do that in fear that we shall be unable to collect the tax because it is large is a confession which I think we ought not to make, and for one I am quite unwilling to make it.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. Is it in order to offer an amendment now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An amendment is in order.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I offer the following amendment, to come in as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That so much of all acts and parts of acts as impose any internal revenue tax on illuminating or other mineral oils, and on the product of the distillation, redistillation, or refining of crude petroleum, or of crude oil produced by a single distillation of coal, shale, peat, asphaltum, or other bituminous substances, together with all provisions relating to returns, assessments, warehousing, and bonding, and all other provisions for determining the quantity of mineral oil distilled for the purpose of securing the payment of the tax thereon, be, and the same are hereby, repealed; and no tax imposed by existing laws on such oils or products in the hands of the producer or manufacturer, or his agent or agents, at the passage of this act and unsold, shall be collected.

Mr. President, when a similar bill was before the Senate in the spring I proposed a reduction of this tax of one half, and at that time gave many, as I think, good reasons for it. At any rate, the proposition was carried through both Houses. I presume it may be said that I ought to have asked for the whole then. There were reasons then assigned which it may not be necessary to repeat now except very briefly. I will only say that notwithstanding the reduction of one half the tax, it is still an extraordinarily high tax. It amounts to about one hundred per cent. on the crude material out of which this oil is manufactured. It is made an exception to all other manufactures of its class in this: that a tax for any amount whatever is continued upon it. Now, when a disposition has been manifested in both Houses of Congress to relieve our manufactures from taxation as far as possible, I do not think there is any good reason why this article should be singled out to bear a tax when others are let go.

This provision, I think, is germane to this bill, because petroleum and its products constitute one of the three articles which are subject to this host of inspectors and gaugers, and I do not know what all, in order to collect the tax on that which is consumed at home. It is loading an article of general use, an article of necessity, an article which now enters into the consumption of almost every family in the land out of the cities where gas is used, and even there, with unnecessary trouble and burdens, and thereby is interfering greatly with the business.

But, Mr. President, there is another reason, and one upon which I rely most in asking the favor of the Senate for this amendment. Within a very few years this article of petroleum in its manufactured state, and also in its crude state to a less extent, has become an article of export; so that the amount now exported from this country annually is about thirty million dollars. There is hardly any other article I presume at this time, to the amount to which it is exported, that is as valuable; and certainly it cannot be denied by anybody, and it will not be doubted by anybody, it will not be pretended even, that it is not the true interest of this country to encourage every article of export that we can produce. It saves the specie from being drained from the country; it tends to pay off our foreign debt of whatever nature; and of course recommends itself, therefore, rather as a thing to be encouraged than a thing to be depressed.

Now, sir, what is the consequence of the tax? This oil that is exported, it is true, is free from tax; the tax is not exacted on that part of it which is exported, but in order to collect the domestic tax burdens are thrown upon this exportation which the country can well afford to rid them of. In order to insure the collection of the tax on that which is consumed at home the whole system is loaded with the same provisions which we have just gone over in reference to tobacco and distilled spirits. Those articles are mere luxuries and should be taxed high, and if they are taxed high means must be resorted to in order to secure the collection of the tax. They are also looked upon by many as having an ill effect upon the morals of the community. I see that clergymen now are beginning to discountenance the use of tobacco as they have of whisky for some time past. That shows, at any rate, in what esteem it is held by many of our citizens.

But, sir, nothing of this kind can apply to the mineral oil. It is not an article of luxury by any means. It is found in the family of every poor man, perhaps, in the country. It furnishes him a cheaper light than he has ever had before. It furnishes him at the same time, perhaps, a better light for the quantity of oil used. The considerations that may lead to imposing these heavy burdens on tobacco and whisky would argue a different way in reference to petroleum. And yet, sir, in order to collect this tax upon the oil that is consumed at home the export trade is heavily burdened; and it is necessary that a host of officers, inspectors, gaugers, and I know not what you call them, should be appointed. The manufacturers of oil are compelled to employ extra clerks to make regular returns, and are incumbered in that way with an additional expense which must affect them even in reference to their export trade, although nominally no tax is placed upon that.

Without attempting or wishing to detain the Senate one moment longer than is necessary, I ask them to take into consideration the fact I have last stated, that this article is a most valuable export; that it is one of our largest exports; and that this export trade, valuable as it is, is to a certain extent injured by means of the arrangements made for the simple collection tax on the home supply. For the fiscal year ending in June last the tax amounted to something short of five million dollars. One half of that is reduced, which would leave it considerably less than two and a half million dollars, and I apprehend, as the production has somewhat diminished during the last year, that it cannot be stated at over two million dollars. This is an amount, considered by itself it is true, large; but in proportion to the whole of our taxes it is a light amount. I have the opinion of the Special Commissioner of the Revenue that it can be dispensed with, and he thinks it ought to be dispensed with. I have the authority of at least a majority of the Finance Committee that they believe the tax might and should be dispensed with. I understand that the same opinion prevails in the Committee of Ways and Means, and that this amendment would probably have been made in the House, except for their strict rules, which after it was offered would have compelled it to go back to the Committee of the Whole. I trust, therefore, that this amendment will be fairly considered by the Senate, and that this relief may be given to so valuable a branch of manufacture.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not propose to controvert particularly what the Senator has said as to the necessity or justice of removing this tax; but the Committee on Finance did not consider it expedient to attach this amendment to the bill, as this bill is confined exclusively to whisky and tobacco; and it was partly upon that ground that those sections providing for the taxation of banks were stricken out of the bill, so that this legislation might be exclusively upon the two subjects of whisky and tobacco. If one amendment is proposed introducing another subject into this bill another amendment introducing another subject may be proposed; and so the bill may be incumbered. All the various interests in the country, that are complaining of taxation, will of course claim a right to be considered in connection with this bill, and the consequence will be that the bill will be burdened down with these numerous amendments, and probably defeated. The interest which the Senator represents is not the only interest in the country that complains that taxation is too high; it is not the only interest that is demanding relief; and if we allow this amendment to go upon this bill then no objection can be made to any amendment that may be proposed affecting any other interest; and instead of being a bill which was intended by the House to be a bill to regulate the tax upon whisky and tobacco, taken out of the tax bill that was reported by the Committee of Ways and Means expressly for the purpose of legislating upon that subject, it will become a bill regulating the tax upon all the various subjects in the country upon which it is said the taxes ought to be modified or repealed.

It is upon that ground, without taking time to go into the discussion, that I oppose the amendment. I am not disposed now to say that if the proposition made by the Senator was in a different form or upon a general tax bill I should not be willing to support it; but at this late day in the session, when there is no time to discuss these various propositions, the only way to save this bill and pass it at all is to confine it exclusively to the two subjects which are contained in it.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I think I can say to the Senator from Oregon, with perfect propriety and with great truth, that there is no parallel interest to this in the country. In the second place, I may say, as I have already said, that it is in some sense germane to this bill, as it has the same apparatus and body of officers that these other articles have.

Again, the Senator's remarks might well apply in the House of Representatives, where the committee were ordered to bring in a bill in relation to tobacco and distilled spirits only; but I think the Senate has the right, and has independence enough when a good proposition like this is offered to it, to pass it without being cowed by any consideration of that kind. It is the only manufacture, as I have already said, of its class that is now taxed at all.

I wish in this connection to read a letter from the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means of the House. He says:

"We think, in my committee, that mineral oil ought to be put upon the footing of all other manufactures. If you can put this amendment in the bill in the Senate we can pretty certainly carry it through the House. It would have gone through to-day if we had not been limited to spirits and tobacco."

Now, sir, abstractedly considered, it may be a very nice thing not to have too many subjects in a bill; but when an interest like this, so great as I have shown, is suffering without occasion, for I may say it is without occasion that this interest should be put to so much expense in order to conduct it, when there can be no occasion for it either in reference to the amount of tax to be collected, or to any frauds that are taking place in it, or to the character of the commodity manufactured, I hope the Senate will not for that reason at least refuse to adopt this amendment.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. President, the former argument made in the Senate on this subject, which was indorsed by the vote of the Senate, would cover completely in the pages of the Congressional Globe the amendment which is now proposed by the Senator from West Virginia. We then had a full debate on the subject of the taxation of the products of petroleum or manufactures therefrom; and it was only, in my opinion, because the Senator from West Virginia then proposed his amendment in the form of a reduction of the tax to one half, instead of an amendment proposing to remove it altogether, that we have this question again before us moved upon the present bill.

It is a decisive argument in favor of his proposition that this is the only manufacturing tax yet remaining in our revenue system, the only general tax, and that it is imposed upon a manufacture which, instead of being discouraged by us, ought to be encouraged by our legislation. The only effect of permitting this tax upon the products of petroleum to remain while the crude article is free from taxation is to push the manufacture out of our own country, to cause the raw article to be exported, and the capital and labor of Europe to be employed in its manufacture instead of the capital and labor of our own country. Therefore the clearest reasons of policy are against the retention of this tax; and it is manifestly an unjust and odious one when we have relieved other manufactures from similar burdens. This I consider to be a conclusive view of this subject, without going fully into that argument which was submitted upon a former occasion, and which then enlisted favorably the judgment of the Senate.

The only objection made by the Senator from Oregon is in regard to the time and place when this amendment is offered. He is averse to entertaining it and voting for it, although he does not object to it upon its merits, because if we adopt this amendment other amendments may possibly be offered. Now, sir, those of us who are in favor of this amendment can give a conclusive answer, a satisfactory answer, at least, to that suggestion. In the first place, these taxes are entirely unlike any others in our internal revenue system. In the next place, this question is connected with the simplification of the revenue system, which is one of the leading objects of this bill. We are to dispense as far as we can with the inspectors of revenue and with other subordinate officers under the Commissioner wherever we can. These taxes upon petroleum require a considerable number of officers for their administration. I am told that some of the inspectors have been receiving as high as eight or ten thousand dollars a year. It is made a matter of complaint and of odium that such features are permitted to exist in connection with our revenue law. I believe public opinion everywhere is tending to this ground: that our tax system should be simplified; that we should confine the burden to as few objects as possible; that we should dispense with all the officers that we can, and should confine ourselves only to those necessary objects of revenue demanded in order to meet the public burdens.

I venture to say, in answer to the Senator from Oregon, that the adoption of this amendment by the Senate will not embarrass the Senate itself. No other amendments will be offered of a general nature leading to debate and producing delay. I venture to say, also, that the adoption of this amendment by the Senate will not produce a difference with the House. The Senator from West Virginia has already informed us that the House is disposed to it; that the Committee of Ways and Means are not only willing, but some of them at least anxious to accept this amendment and to incorporate it into the present bill.

The objection that this amendment will introduce a subject not in the purview of the bill as originally introduced in the House goes for nothing. Are we to have bills introduced into that House and sent here as they were originally formed? Have we no power of amendment? Are we not permitted to cast our eyes over the whole field of inquiry, and if we find a particular object deserving of our attention, exceptional in its character, and directly connected in its machinery with the measure sent to us, shall we not propose an amendment? And especially are we to be deterred from doing so when we have the best assurance that the House of Representatives will concur with us in our action, and that even if there should be objection in that House we can recede in a moment when the bill is returned with a non-concurrence in the amendment?

For these reasons I think there is no force in the point which has been made by the Senator from Oregon; and for the very satisfactory reasons which have already been stated by the Senator from West Virginia, as well as for the reasons which were fully elaborated in the former debate and published to the country, I think we ought to adopt this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. VAN WINKLE and Mr. BUCKALEW called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 15, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cameron, Cattell, Cole, Connors, Cragin, Davis, Fowler, Henderson, McCreery, Ramsey, Ross, Sumner, Van Winkle, and Wilson—15.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Conkling, Corbett, Edmunds, Harlan, Howe, McDonald, Morgan, Morrill of Vermont, Osborn, Sherman, Trumbull, Vickers, Wade, Welch, Williams, and Yates—17.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Chandler, Dixon, Doolittle, Drake, Ferry, Fessenden, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Norton, Nye, Patterson of New Hampshire, Patterson of Tennessee, Pomeroy, Rice, Saulsbury, Sprague, Stewart, Thayer, Tipton, and Willey—26.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DAVIS. I offer an amendment—

Mr. CONNESS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn. It must be evident that we cannot pass this bill to-night.

Mr. SHERMAN. We can pass it in a little while now.

Mr. CONNESS. It cannot be passed to-night.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. WILLEY] is confined to his room by indisposition.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 16, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cameron, Cole, Connors, Cragin, Davis, Fowler, Harlan, Howe, McCreery, Ramsey, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Vickers, and Yates—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Cattell, Conkling, Corbett, Edmunds, McDonald, Morgan, Morrill of Vermont, Osborn, Patterson of New Hampshire, Ross, Sherman, Wade, Welch, Williams, and Wilson—16.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Chandler, Dixon, Doolittle, Drake, Ferry, Fessenden, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Norton, Nye, Patterson of Tennessee, Pomeroy, Rice, Saulsbury, Sprague, Stewart, Thayer, Tipton, and Willey—26.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now move that the Senate take a recess until half past seven o'clock. ["No!" "No!"]

Mr. SUMNER. I hope not.

Mr. CONNESS. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 14, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Cattell, Cole, Conkling, Corbett, Harlan, Henderson, Morgan, Morrill of Vermont, Sherman, Stewart, Wade, Williams, and Wilson—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cameron, Connors, Cragin, Davis, Edmunds, Fowler, Howe, McCreery, McDonald, Osborn, Patterson of New Hampshire, Ramsey, Ross, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Vickers, Welch, and Yates—20.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Chandler, Dixon, Doolittle, Drake, Ferry, Fessenden, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Norton, Nye, Patterson of Tennessee, Pomeroy, Rice, Saulsbury, Sprague, Thayer, Tipton, and Willey—24.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. CONNESS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. SHERMAN. We may as well close the bill first as last.

Mr. CONNESS. It is impossible to pass this bill to-night. The Senator ought to see that, I think.

Several SENATORS, (to Mr. SHERMAN.) Do not give it up.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not give it up; but if the Senate choose to adjourn they can do so.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes twenty-one—

Mr. SHERMAN. I think we may as well have the yeas and nays on this motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 21, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cameron, Cole, Connors, Cragin, Davis, Fowler, Harlan, Howe, McCreery, McDonald, Osborn, Patterson of New Hampshire, Ramsey, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Vickers, Welch, and Yates—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Cattell, Conkling, Corbett, Edmunds, Morgan, Morrill of Vermont, Ross, Sherman, Wade, Williams, and Wilson—12.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Chandler, Dixon, Doolittle, Drake, Ferry, Fessenden, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Norton, Nye, Patterson of Tennessee, Pomeroy, Rice, Saulsbury, Sprague, Thayer, Tipton, and Willey—25.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, July 7, 1868.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON.

The Journal of yesterday was partly read, when

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

The motion was, by unanimous consent, agreed to.

PAYMENT FOR GOVERNMENT SUPPLIES.

Mr. DELANO, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1869) to provide for the payment of certain demands for stores and articles used by the engineer department of the Army of the United States; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

ISAAC I. RICHMOND.

Mr. BAKER, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee of Claims be instructed to inquire what measure of relief is due to Isaac I. Richmond, of Alton, Illinois, for services rendered the Government as acting assistant assessor for the first division of the twelfth collection district of the State of Illinois during the months of December, 1866, and January, 1867, and to report by bill or otherwise.

TERMS OF VIRGINIA DISTRICT COURT.

Mr. BOUTWELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1370) to fix the time for holding the terms of the United States district court in Virginia; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NIAGARA SHIP-CANAL.

Mr. VAN HORN, of New York. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the bill now in the Committee of the Whole, providing for the construction of a ship-canal around the falls of Niagara, be postponed to, and made the special order for Thursday, the 10th day of December next, immediately after the morning hour, and continue as the special order from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. WASHBURN of Illinois, Mr. DELANO, and Mr. PHELPS as the committee of conference on the part of the House upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 605) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1869.

POTAWATTOMIE INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. JULIAN, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Whereas a contract has been made which purports to be a treaty between certain commissioners acting in the name of the United States and the Potawatomi Indians, by which the unallotted lands of said Indians, amounting to three hundred and forty-two thousand acres, have been sold to the Atchison, Topeka, and Santa Fé Railroad Company, at the price of one dollar per acre; and whereas these lands are known to be valuable, and said price is believed to be in monstrous disproportion thereto, and said treaty, so called, is declared by prominent and respectable men in the State of Kansas to be similar in character to the late Osage treaty, which has been emphatically condemned by this House: Therefore, Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be instructed to inquire into the facts and circumstances of said so-called treaty, that they have power to send for persons and papers, and that they report to this House by bill or otherwise.

REFERENCE OF BILLS, ETC.

Mr. UPSON. I move to reconsider the various votes taken this morning on the reference of bills; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

IMPEACHMENT OF THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I rise to a question of privilege, and present a resolution, upon which, after it is read, I propose to submit some remarks.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, after which the Chair will rule whether it is or is not a question of privilege.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas a high court of impeachment has lately been in session to try Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, for high crimes and misdemeanors, and has adjourned without completing its judgment; and whereas it is proper that additional articles should be filed, if the House deem expedient: Therefore,

Resolved, That a committee of — be appointed to prepare additional articles of impeachment, and report the same in substance as follows:

Additional articles of impeachment exhibited by the House of Representatives, in the name of themselves and all the people of the United States, against Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, in maintenance and support of their impeachment against him for high crimes and misdemeanors in office.

First Additional Article.

That the said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, did abuse the patronage of the Government, which by virtue of his office had been intrusted to him, and did pervert it to improper and selfish purposes, inasmuch as he used it to corrupt the people of the United States, and to induce them to abandon and renounce the principles which they conscientiously held, and to adopt others which they did not approve, in order to promote the selfish purposes of said Andrew Johnson. The President of the United States came into power and received his office because he professed to hold the principles of the Republican party, and zealously avowed his determination to carry them into effect. When he came into power he found the offices of the Government, many thousands in number, filled with men professing the same Republican principles, and who had been appointed expressly to carry them into effect. When, by a fatal accident, he became the Chief Executive of the nation, he determined to seek an election for the same office at the next presidential term. He foresaw that it would become necessary to renounce the principles of the Republican party, and to establish a new personal party, specially devoted to himself, and he did not hesitate to apply to that object the profits of thousands of offices and of millions of revenue. He set deliberately about turning faithful officers out of their places because they would not renounce their principles, and of appointing others to office because they pledged themselves to support him and his principles. The removals and appointments were avowedly made for no cause of merit or demerit, but for the purpose of adding recruits to the new party.

Second Additional Article.

That the said Andrew Johnson, being the Chief Executive of the United States, and being assigned by law to the duties to take care that the laws shall be faithfully executed, and having no judicial or legislative powers confided to him by the Constitution, all his duties being strictly executive, did, on the 29th day of May, 1865, and before and after that time, usurp to himself the powers of another branch of the Government, and did do acts and exercise functions which belonged to the legislative branch alone; and in pursuance of such claim, having at the time the Army and Navy of the United States at his command, did establish and erect into a separate government that portion of the territory which had been conquered by the United States from the late y so-called confederate States of America, and which was lately embraced within the boundaries of the State of North Carolina, and did, by his own usurped authority, create a State and form of government hitherto unknown to the United States, and did create an office hitherto unknown to our Constitution, and appointed thereto an officer whom he called provisional governor, and directed him how to construct and carry out said government. He fixed, and by his own will decreed, the qualification of electors, and who should be eligible to office in the new government, which he by proclamation declared was deprived of all civil government by the armed forces of the independent belligerents with whom we had been at war. And he appointed William W. Holden to the office of provisional governor of North Carolina, and directed him to administer the offices of the newly-created State.

On the 13th of June, 1865, he usurped the same powers, and without any direction from Congress, to whom alone it belonged, erected into an independent State that part of conquered territory formerly known as the State of Mississippi, and appointed William L. Sharkey provisional governor thereof.

And on the 17th of June, 1865, he in like manner erected a portion of said territory into what he called the State of Georgia, and appointed James Johnson provisional governor thereof. On or about the 17th, 21st, and 30th of June and the 13th of July he, in like manner, created governments which he called the States of Texas, South Carolina, and Florida. And when afterward Congress declared such governments and institutions null and void, and prescribed other methods of governing said territory, and to enable it to enter the Union by the consent of Congress, the President declared such laws null and void, and advised the people to resist their execution; and he has never aided in carrying into effect, but has resisted, what are called the "reconstruction laws."

Third Additional Article.

For that Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, by his corrupt practices did attempt to induce the Senators-elect from the State of Colorado to perjure themselves, upon the condition of his signing the bill admitting Colorado into the Union as a State, and thereby admitting them as Senators of the United States.

He did also pardon and restore the rights of franchise to one hundred and ninety-three deserters who, during the war, had deserted from the United States Army, upon condition that they would vote for the Democratic party at the then immediately ensuing election; and they did thus vote, and give to the Democratic agent, Hon. Thomas B. Florence, the sum of $1,000 in cash.

He appointed numerous persons to office who could not take the test- oath, and did not take it, but were allowed to act and discharge the functions thereof in defiance of law.

He ordered agricultural scrip to be issued to the State of North Carolina, which scrip was issued under the act of 1862, when North Carolina was in armed warfare against the Union.

He restored, without authority of law, large tracts of forfeited property; enough, it is believed, to pay the national debt, which had been forfeited under act of Congress, approved July 17, 1862. By reason of all which outrages this Government became impoverished, the people embarrassed, the rebel raiders allowed to flourish, and the Constitution flagrantly violated.

He sold pardons for money, or allowed it to be done through pardon brokers.

Fourth Additional Article.

He did take from the Treasury of the United States large tracts of land and large amounts of money, sufficient, it is believed, to have paid our national debts, and which had been transferred to the United States by act of the 17th July, 1862, as enemies' property, to be applied to the expenses of the war and the debts of the United States. This was corruptly and unlawfully done without any authority of Congress.

Fifth Additional Article.

He did usurp the powers of other branches of the Government, and exercise the legislative power in defiance of the Constitution, in creating or attempting to create new governments out of the territory conquered from the "Confederate States of America," so called, and to govern them by his own mere power, by forms unknown to the Constitution, without consulting Congress, but defying their authority when they had spoken, and denying the constitutionality of the laws of Congress enacted to govern said conquered territory.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that this is a question of the highest privilege.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, when the English jurists undertook to establish forms of jurisprudence, they established two or more sets of tribunals—one for the trial of high criminal offenses against the good morals and the heart of society, in which trials the most rigid rules of law and evidence were observed, especially in the defense and protection of the accused, and when conviction was had, the most rigid punishments were inflicted to deter from future wrongs upon society, not simply as punishment, but as example—example being a large portion of the object, but punishment by no means overlooked.

But such was the structure of their unequal society that it was very difficult to bring large malefactors to conviction and punishment for offenses involving disgrace and capital inflictions. Hence, wrongs committed by public men against the mere administration of Government, if prosecuted as such, were apt to escape punishment. Still it was necessary that such public offenders should be deprived of the opportunity of longer injuring the community, and another tribunal was established for their trial, composed of men elevated above their sphere or dread of influence; and to secure success the punishment for political offenses on such conviction was in most cases reduced to mere removal from office, without fine or imprisonment or disgraceful inflictions suffered. Although the criminal feature was still retained in England, it was very much modified, indeed entirely changed, under our Constitution.

But in England the objects of such trial were soon perverted. Passion, revenge, and malignity refused to let large malefactors escape from the hands of those who were persecuting them by impeachment, and they changed the punishment to one of criminal extent, and inflicted death by the block and gallows, as well as imprisonment and banishment upon many of the high as well as low offenders. Many found themselves arraigned and tried for the deepest crimes in this form of proceeding, while the acts they had done were merely of a political character. It was in this perverted state of the English law that our Revolution broke out and our Constitution was formed. So that our statesmen and judges, groping in the dark for the right reason of the law and seeing it "as through a glass darkly," so construed our law of impeachment that when the first cases under it came to be decided, and indeed all the sound cases, the judges, though somewhat mystified in the proper construction to put upon it, almost uniformly excluded from the essence of the impeachment all necessity for the charge of moral guilt, malignity, crime, and malum in se. They rejected the whole idea of the necessity of the commission of indictable offenses, and followed the text of Story, of Wharton, and the precedent of Peck's case as stated by Buchanan, Wharton, and Curtis, of the earlier case of Chase, in neither of which is there any attempt to prove "crimen and malum in se," all recognizing the doctrine that the great offense was a political one purely, and the object of its punishment the prevention of further injury by the incumbent.

When lately—I mean by the Committee on the Judiciary—Andrew Johnson was impeached for high crimes and misdemeanors, which meant simply high political offenses, a grand opportunity was presented, for the first time in this country, for great judicial minds to lay down broadly and forever the law of impeachments, so that on the one hand they would not allow political offenders to escape for abusing their high trust, and on the other hand would not allow heated and malignant demagogues to persecute political opponents and rivals so as to carry their punishments to the bloody margin of hatred and vengeance.

If further punishment were found necessary there would be no advantage from political ascendancy, for then the prosecution would proceed according to the impartial principles of the common law, where justice could be administered between man and man. I had hoped that these great principles would have been so elucidated by the learned Judiciary Committee of this House that no future time would produce the risk of judicial persecutions and murders.

Of all prosecutions which I have ever witnessed, either in civil or military affairs, that result was to me the most unsatisfactory. I speak of the first prosecution. I have nothing to say of the last one, and I beg my remarks will be so understood throughout. But having my own views I must utter them in good faith, without regard to the position which the listener may happen to occupy. When that prosecution was first commenced, I believed it then, as I believe it now, to be the deep-seated conviction of nine tenths of the honest men of the party that the respondent was guilty and ought to be convicted.

I admit that after the election of the new President of the Senate there was a cooling off in certain quarters, from motives which I have never been able to fathom, and do not now intend to scan. When the Republicans of the House came to scrutinize the acts of the President preparatory to taking evidence I believe that none were of the opinion that the time occupied in taking testimony would extend over a period of more than twenty days.

To their minds the whole question was so patent, so clear, lay so completely upon the surface of events, that to seize it with the clear intention to drag it into daylight was among the things which it was impossible to evade, for the slightest exposure would make everything apparent to the naked eye.

But the Republican party fell into a great error. In a short time it became apparent that this was to be a work of very considerable magnitude, if the course pointed out were to be pursued. Instead of investigating charges of impeachment against the President of the United States on specific allegations, charges extending to every crime and every folly which a wicked, bad man could be guilty of were eagerly sought for and gravely investigated, or the investigation entered upon with a malignity and feeling which could do no credit to so high a tribunal.

To my mind the whole question of the guilt of the respondent, the whole question of malfeasance in office by the President of the United States, the whole question of his official "high crimes and misdemeanors" lay within thirty-six hours of the examination of the testimony in chief if it had been properly confined to that testimony.

But these innumerable eggs were thrown into the nest of this investigation, until it was more than full, and their was great danger of their becoming addled.

They thought to break the elephant's back, broad as it was, by piling upon it straws and chaff bags, out of which was to be extracted the heavy metal of decomposition; and especially, if that would not prove sufficient, to mount upon it two or three buxom damsels seated on pillows; Mrs. Cobb proved too light.

Now, sir, I merely wished to lay before the House and the committee a few reasons why I was so wholly dissatisfied, as I have been and am still.

That a misdemeanor is triable by a common law court in England, and a felony is triable as a high crime before a common jury, no one doubts who has paid the least attention to the common law. But no one can, and so far as I know, no one does pretend that either of those offenses can be tried under the law of Congress at common law, there being no common law in the United States.

Why, then, is it pretended that any common law offense can be brought before a judicial tribunal of the nation? Why is it pretended that any of the offenses charged against Jefferson Davis and his associates can be tried as criminal offenses before the Government on impeachment? Whether they could now be tried for riots and mutiny I give no opinion, having always held that the sovereignty, when it once reconquered its sovereign power, could inflict just such punishment, and through just such tribunals as it saw proper, not by virtue of its old tribunals, but by virtue of its eminent domain, or by virtue of its remnant of municipal power.

Instead of alleging that impeachment can only be instituted where there is an indictable offense, I contend that the great object of impeachment was to punish for malfeasance in office—where there was no actual crime committed—no malfeasance against which an indictment would hold, and against which no allegation of evil intention need be made. In other words, that proceedings in impeachment should be had mainly where the true distinction was made between a charge against a party with malice aforethought in it, and a charge against a party with no evil intention, but with great injury to the country; in short, that they could be had mainly for political offenses; and that the grade of high crimes and misdemeanors spoken of by the Constitution as subjecting the party to impeachment, did not involve the guilt of malum in se or wickedness of heart, so that the highest official in the land can be impeached, convicted, and punished without having committed a single offense which involved malignity of heart.

If an officer cannot be impeached except for an indictable offense, then you must wait until he has done some injurious act with malice aforethought. It cannot be, sir, that malice is an ingredient that makes the maladministration of an officeholder either more or less injurious to the public, better or worse, as it does not operate directly on the individual, but on the Government. He may believe that a certain course of conduct tends to the good of his administration and the country. He is warned by his advisers and by the legislative branch that he is mistaken and must desist. He reconsiders it and persists, under the conscientious belief that he is right and his advisers are wrong.

Here is no indictable offense, here is no ingredient which constitutes an indictable offense—malice aforethought. And yet if there be large interests at stake intrusted to his care he may be crushing the life of the nation while he believes himself but doing his duty. How can any man pretend that such acts as these, which are destroying the welfare of a whole people, and persevered in after repeated warnings, do not constitute impeachable offenses, although not indictable ones?

But has not this subject been adjudicated time after time, and by tribunal after tribunal? Have not the elementary writers of the various States of America, and of the General Government of the United States, clearly and decidedly pronounced the same judgment? I refer to Story, to Rawle, to Madison, Hamilton, May, and Curtis.

Seeing, then, that there are no obstacles in the way of impeachment, let us go a little further with the facts which are produced in some slight manner to sustain the preliminary action of this tribunal?

We will now partially consider the evidence and arguments applicable to the first additional article. To corrupt the youth of a nation was held by Socrates and Plato to be among the most atrocious of offenses, because it tended to overthrow the solid forms of government, and built up anarchy and despotism in their place. If it were so in an oligarchy how much more would it be so in a government where the laws control, and where the laws should be pure if that government is expected to be conducted with purity, and to survive the temporary shocks of tyrants? If it is proved or known that Andrew Johnson attempted at any time to corrupt the legal voters of the United States, so as to change them from their own true opinions to those which he himself had adopted, then, I suppose, there are few who will pretend that he was not guilty of a high misdemeanor. We need hardly call witnesses to prove a fact which everybody knows, and nobody will deny; and yet in legal accuracy it becomes necessary to prove by sworn evidence the facts to which I have referred. Does the sun shine at mid-day? It would hardly be thought necessary to answer that question by proof, and yet there is just as much necessity for it as to prove that Andrew Johnson had changed his whole principles and policy, and entered into the most dangerous and damaging contracts with aspirants for office to induce them to aid him in changing the principles of those who sought office. Did he not so authorize his known agents so to instruct Colonel Selfridge, a gentleman of high character? Who does not thence believe that the patronage was put into the hands of DOOLITTLE, Cowan, and that tribe of men for distribution on precisely such terms and conditions as Cowan stated to Colonel Selfridge? Show me a more shameless perversion of patronage in any country or in any Government, however corrupt and despotic, and I will admit that Andrew Johnson is pure as the icicles that hang on Diana's temple.

Can you look abroad over this country, even with imperfect vision, without shuddering, and forget the hundreds of instances even within your knowledge of the good and true Republicans ejected from office without any charge of misconduct, but simply for the reason that they had not joined the party of the President?

Now, sir, I admit that when a new Executive comes into office it is not only proper but it is his duty to change his office-holders, especially the large ones, so as to remove from power those who differ, and place those in who agree with him, and in this way to propagate the principles he advocates, and upon which the people of the United States had placed him in power. Not to do that would, I think, be badly treating those who elevated him and expected him to teach their doctrines. But for an Executive who has been elected to office professing and loudly proclaiming one set of principles to change into a diametrically opposite course all those principles through which he was elevated to power, without surrendering that power to those who gave it, and to bribe by patronage, by money, or by the people's offices, the very men who had assisted to so elevate him to adopt other principles, and thus to corrupt and pervert the good morals of the country, so far as his patronage will allow, seems to me to fall little short in atrocity of the most corrupt practices of Europe in the worst days of the corrupt courts of Charles and Edward, and to put Judas Iscariot to the blush. Would to God that such an Executive had the repentance of that remorseful malefactor, who had been guilty of no indictable offense, but had simply indicated by a kiss the identity of the Master who trusted him.

But let us look a little further into the items which the evidence discloses. I will speak now of the acts which have been perpetrated by the President in attempting to corrupt and bribe citizens of the United States, now members of Congress, and here ready to discharge their duty.

Colorado, a virgin golden State, presented herself for admission into the Union of the States. She presented a constitution to which no branch of the Government objected, so far as I recollect, except the Republicans, who insisted upon the allowance of the enfranchisement of the blacks.

But it was objected to by the President upon various grounds, among which was want of population, together with others which I do not find it necessary to recapitulate; one of which, however, I believe was his desire to have all men enfranchised. Congress then so modified it as to agree to accept it, with one or two exceptions, among them that which I have before mentioned.

They so directed their members of Congress, the vote of whose Senators was necessary to give the requisite two thirds majority to pass it over the veto. Before this period had arrived the President had set up a kingdom for himself and determined to people it with apostates from honest communities. He informed the Senators from Colorado that he could not sign the bill for the admission of their State unless they agreed to support his policy in the course he had determined to pursue; and he most distinctly said, if there be any truth in those gentlemen, that if they thus supported him he would in turn support them, and become their friend, and give them his signature, which would admit them into the Union. I know that cavils have been had upon this point, but I know, also, that no man of common honesty would enter into the arrangement I have cited unless both parties fully understood it to mean precisely what I have stated. To say that there was no written pledge is but an insult to the high place and what ought to be the high character of the Executive.

Supposing, then, that this offer was made, is it a crime and misdemeanor, such as entitles the prosecution to a verdict against the respondent and a consequent removal from office? In my judgment if no other proposition were ever made and proved, if the testimony of Mr. Evans and Mr. Chaffee is not contradicted, there is no honest tribunal upon the face of this globe which would continue the President in his place and enable him to go on disgracing the high functions which a nation of freemen have placed upon him. There is no jury in any portion of the land who is not too intelligent to be deluded by any of the humbug arguments which would cast such remarks into another quarter, and make them mean anything else.

Here then, sir, I might stop and say to you and this body, which of you is it that is corrupt and fit to be impeached and thrust forth from your high offices? You cannot both remain where you are. One of you, or both, speak with a forked tongue, and require that the sons of Almonah, if they never complain, shall be so punished that the indomitable energy of their nature should never again be exhibited in the land of civilization.

Sir, I am almost ashamed to charge the respondent with so small an offense as corrupting the lawful voters of the United States to build up a party for himself, especially when there are so many graver charges, charges which, in any other country, would bring out the block and sharpen the ax. But it may be well to expose to the gaze of the loyal people of the nation the conduct of him who claimed to be pure, and who violated all his claims. It is charged and proved, beyond the possibility of a doubt, that one hundred and ninety-three deserters from the United States Army, who had taken with them their arms and accoutrements to the enemy, were pardoned by the President a few days before the election at which they were expected to vote, in order that they might cast their ballots for Mr. Andrews, of Virginia, and Colonel Montgomery, of Pennsylvania, both friends and partisans of the President.

No one doubts, from the evidence of Colonel McEwen, that he urged the pardons upon that ground alone. No one doubts that to procure such pardons he paid my friend Tom Florence $1,000, and that, by the way, is the only redeeming part of the transaction; for had he made it $2,000 I would have passed it over without comment, so anxious am I that my old friend should flourish in these times.

Does any one doubt that all these cases are fully proved? If they do not, where is there any man sufficiently corrupt to deny their impeachable character in the Executive of the nation? If there be any such, let him speak. But let us pass over the quires of scandalous testimony going to prove the respondent's depraved appetite and licentious habits, as matters to be dealt with to the shame of those who selected him rather than by his public accusers, and proceed to the graver charges of embezzling or allowing others to embezzle the public property, and of the abuse of the high prerogative of the pardoning power.

On the 17th of July, 1862, Congress passed a law, and a very comprehensive one, the first four sections of which defined the punishment of treason and misprision of treason. They extended no further than to punishment by death without confiscation. All the other portions of the law, which is a long one, treated the officers, soldiers, aiders, and abettors of the so-called confederate States of America as independent belligerents, and proceeded to denounce against them the punishment which should be inflicted and the penalties which they should endure when conquered. Among these penalties and forfeitures it was expressly provided that the President of the United States should seize all the property of any member of the belligerent army, and proceed to have the same confiscated, not as the property of traitors or citizens guilty of treason, but as enemies' property, engaged in a national war with the United States, whenever subdued, and that the same should be applied by the President to the Treasury of the United States, to pay the expenses and damages which the enemy had caused to be created on the part of the United States.

Here was a most distinct, emphatic transfer of all the property belonging to the independent belligerent, and to all the members, aiders, and abettors of the so-called confederate government, whether as officers or soldiers, and the same was directed to be appropriated to the Government of this nation. By virtue of subsequent laws, which I have not time nor strength to enumerate, all the abandoned property of the independent belligerents who should have left their homes was directed to be seized by the Army and Navy of the United States and to be transferred to the officers of the Freedmen's Bureau, in trust for the freedmen and those who were made destitute by the war. These laws, also, were absolute and unqualified, and admitted of no ambiguity, no doubt of their construction, and under them large amounts of property were seized.

Under the first-named law the officers of the Government, as fast as our armies conquered the country, seized the lands and goods of the enemy, and instituted proceedings for confiscation. No one, I suppose, doubts that had these laws been fully carried out enough revenue would have been produced to pay the whole of our national debt, together with the damage done to loyal men by the enemy, both in southern territory and in the northern States which they invaded, and that, too, without seizing one particle of property whose owners were worth less than twenty thousand dollars. No poor man, guilty or not guilty, would have been disturbed in his possessions, or, if the proceeding be a hard one, would have been unjustly punished for his offense. Fortunately for such a proceeding the South was a land of satraps and nabobs, and their estates were of almost indefinite extent. I once had an estimate by competent men in the Census Bureau, and I found that it would affect less than sixty thousand men out of a population of some six million. Now, it would seem that no one who desired the punishment of crime and a remuneration for wrong done could much object to such a proceeding, unless all his ideas of justice were perverted, and he would turn the punishment of the malefactor on the innocent and his reward on the guilty.

When the President had been commissioned, like the tormentor of Job, to deal with a nation to whatever devilish extent he chose, in order, I suppose, to try their virtue and the endurance of the fire of liberty, and had commenced his acts of torture and injustice, he began by pardoning the most lofty rebels, having first exonerated all of the lower grade, and ordered to be restored to them the land which had been seized as enemies' property by the conquering power.

Of course I cannot now attempt to enumerate the one tenth part of the property which had been seized, and which, under the vain idea that a pardon restored it, the President ordered to be returned to his friends, the original owners. A few specimens may serve for the whole. General Sherman, in company with the Secretary of War, had seized Charleston and the adjacent mainland, together with the Sea Islands, so famous for cotton, and had set aside these islands and the margin of the water fronts as homesteads for the liberated freedmen, as some slight recompense for their lives of toil. On those islands more than forty thousand persons were thus provided with comfortable homes—made, as they thought and all thought, proprietors of the soil and independent landholders. The testimony shows that four hundred and fifty thousand acres of the mainland were laid off in a similar manner for the accommodation of these unhappy freedmen. The testimony also is that more than two thirds of Charleston were taken possession of on behalf of the United States, and for the same purpose.

Now, what those Sea Islands and Charleston were worth I have no means of knowing—many millions, says the testimony. I should think they were valued very low at a billion. And who were they given to? The testimony shows that they were given to the richest men in the South; Aiken, Trenholm, and Whaley, and others of the opulent, who were proved to have made vast amounts of money by blockade-running during the war. The estates of these three are estimated at from five to twenty millions each; taken altogether, but little short of a billion. The abandoned property in Virginia, Louisiana, and other provinces was proved to be very large, and would most probably carry up the aggregate to $1,500,000,000. But it matters not what the abandoned property was worth. The real estate of the rich belligerents over the value of $20,000 each would more than pay all our national debt and the damages done loyal citizens. To be sure, the expenditures which we have already incurred, probably exceeding $3,000,000,000, can never be regained from the enemy, for there is no trace of their amount. Let us see how the account would stand. The liquidated debt, as reported by the Departments, is returned at about $3,000,000,000, and if the Government is foolish enough to pay, under the pretense set up by bondholders that it ought to be paid in gold instead of money, it will probably reach $5,500,000,000—an enormous debt, which no nation ever incurred and survived. But taking it for granted that no Administration ever dared to give away of the people's money more than $1,500,000,000 or $2,000,000,000 that do not belong to the claimants, and taking it for granted that no clamor of bondholders or shavers or hired editors will ever induce an honest Secretary of the Treasury, or an honest Administration to pay the debt in anything but lawful money when it falls due, still I suppose the debt would amount to over $3,000,000,000.

Now, the property already seized as confiscated and abandoned, from the evidence taken before the Committee on Reconstruction and the various reports from the Freedmen's Bureau, could it have been all applied in that direction, would have nearly paid, if not quite, the obligations due by the United States to the various holders both in Europe and America, including the certified indebtedness and legal tenders. This property, you remember, is ordered by act of 17th of July, 1862, and other acts, to be reduced to money and paid to defray these very claims. And if that course had been pursued by the President, who was expressly commanded to see it executed, the debt which now by the weekly statements looms up to about twenty-five hundred million dollars would have been liquidated and paid. Why was not this done? By the law of nations and by the practice of every well-regulated Government, the conqueror compels the vanquished belligerent in an unjust war to pay not only the debt incurred by the victorious party, but all the damages caused by the invasion and inroads of the enemy.

It was the duty of the President, and which he had sworn to perform, to convert this property into money and pay off this debt. Had he not been guilty of official perjury the whole of the bonded debt, which is now a lien upon every man's property, would have been paid or be in process of payment out of the confiscated funds of rebels.

But he preferred to grant them pardons, and then order that the property seized, either as belligerent or abandoned property, should be restored to its rebel owners. How much the restoration cost those whose influence was used to gain their pardons and procure their restoration I do not undertake to argue. I should be very sorry if any man's reputation were to depend upon the testimony of the Cobbs, Davises, and Bakers upon such points as these. That they were probably right in their account of his social intercourse with them I think likely; but that would no further implicate him in high crimes and misdemeanors, or be relevant evidence, than as it went to show a looseness of morals which would induce honest and upright men to give but little faith and credit to any of his acts.

If the property to which we have already referred had paid off the national debt and relieved the United States from its burdens, it is clearly proved that a very large amount of surplus remained to the large land-holding belligerents after the war was ended. In all the slaveholding States, farms, instead of occupying two or three hundred acres, were manors of from three to thirty thousand acres. The brothers of Jeff. Davis, it is shown, were owners of hundreds of thousands of acres of the richest bottom lands of Mississippi, and too proud to ask for pardon that they might save them. They bade defiance to the conqueror, and their relations had to make the application for them. When one of these high culprits was pardoned, the President invariably ordered a restoration of his property by a clear violation of the Constitution. He has the pardoning power, but that power does not take from the Treasury any property of the United States and bestow it on the convict.

Where an act of Parliament or of the legislative power of a nation declares the forfeiture, and orders its application for the purposes of the Government, it is beyond the pardoning power of the Executive. It is not a case that comes within the law of forfeiture at common law, but it is one that requires precisely the same power to restore it that it did to take it away. I feel no doubt, therefore, that the restoration of this property was all a nullity, and it is the duty, and has been the duty, of the Executive ever since he has seized this property to convert it into money and apply it to the payment of the national debt. If we are right in this, is it not the duty of every member of this body who has any respect for his constituents or any regard for his oath to put the respondent upon his trial and see how far he is guilty? Any other course, it seems to me, savors so much of party corruption and party demoralization that it can be accounted for in no other way than, in looking over this body, to suppose we are beholding not an amphictyonic council, but an assembly of cowards. I will not, therefore, believe that any adverse vote will be had until I have heard the responses as the parties are called.

There is but one thing further on this branch of the subject which I deem it necessary or even proper to touch. For if the fact be as I suppose, and its exhibition do not induce this body to vote for impeachment, then all effort were vain, and we should not obey, though one were to raise from the dead to instruct us. After all the governments in the ten or eleven conquered States which had formed the confederate States of America had been subdued, crushed, conquered, by the United States, and were admitted to be subject to their disposal and lying prostrate at their mercy, the question, a grave though not difficult one, arose: in what way shall they be governed? The conqueror had a right to impose just such laws as he chose, within the bounds of humanity. He had a right to give them new forms of government, new constitutions and laws, to obliterate their old boundaries and make new ones. Who did I say had that right? The conqueror, the nation, the Government, that had subdued them. That conqueror, in every nation claiming to be free, consists of the legislative power of the empire. The Commander-in-Chief of its armies, its judiciary, had nothing to do with the permanent governments to be set up, except to obey and execute any laws which the legislative power might deem proper to pass. That was resolved and decreed, not once simply, but more than once, by a two-thirds vote, until every person belonging to either branch of the Government was fully aware of it. And until those governments were established it was just as clear that the conquered provinces had no lot in Israel. And, in order to give them any right, they must petition the conquering power and receive whatever terms it might deem fit to give.

Whatever might have been the doubt of ignorance and ambition immediately after the contest, no one not entirely destitute of the proper knowledge of the law of nations and the decrees passed by this Government can now be in ignorance of the fact that such is the law which this nation determined to enforce. But the executive officers thought themselves superior to the sovereign power of the nation, and instead of consulting them and obeying their instructions they proceeded to institute governments of their own, to dictate the kind of laws and constitutions under which their subjects should act, and how they should demean themselves so as to be represented in the nation. The sovereign legislative power rejected this proceeding, and ordered new governments to be established as provisional until they had time to prescribe better ones. The President, with a dogmatism and determination which well became a tyrant, commanded the old States to revive and be again represented as live bodies in the Government of the nation. If this usurpation be not a high official misdemeanor, then the putting of a crown upon his head would have been an innocent amusement in Andrew Johnson; then the seizure of the property of his subjects and making it all subject to his good will, pleasure, and disposition would be no crime. That he did all this requires no other proof than his own official records; and had I been conducting this prosecution on the occasion referred to, when I had shown this usurpation and this abstraction, through pardoned rebel friends, of the billions of the public money, I would have stopped and asked the Congress either to appoint a new trustee for the nation or to become the slaves of a single man and change their whole form of government from republicanism to tyranny.

We will now briefly consider a few more things connected with the additional articles. We have already partially discussed the first additional article. We will add a little more, and refer to the second, under which we had intended to insert the evidence in the body of these remarks, but I have concluded to publish it as an appendix, lest the same should become too tedious.

It is not necessary again to refer to the cases of General McEwen, Colonel Montgomery, and the pardoned soldiers. These were cases of clear official misdemeanor, which appeared too brightly in the sunshine of truth to blind any but that bird of wisdom that sends forth his beautiful words by night.

Nor need we recapitulate the conclusive evidence of the shameless corruption as given by Colonel Selfridge. If an officer could be corrupt to the core, and abuse all the trusts confided to him, it was the man who made such shameful propositions to the gallant colonel. His own Cabinet minister has testified in seeming ignorance of its enormity of the causes for which he was compelled to remove from office and make appointments.

Hon. Alexander W. Randall, Postmaster General, testifies that up to the period he gave his evidence, a short time after the President's apostasy, there were removed from office, in his Department, the number of sixteen hundred and four, of whom twelve hundred and eighty-three were removed for political reasons alone. He explains what he means by political reasons, that the persons should abandon their honest principles and adopt those they did not approve of, ordered by the President. All of his removals and appointments were conducted upon this system.

If that number of victims were assailed and prepared for corruption in one of the most important Departments of the Government, within so short a period after the apostasy, how many similar cases in other branches of the Government felt the effect of this corrupting policy? The Treasury contains (?) several times more officers than the Post Office Department, and of ten times more value. I am afraid, without authentic information, to state the number; they, however, amount to tens of thousands. How many honest men were hurled from appointments? How many poor women and children were reduced to suffering by this political Nero because they would not swallow the wormwood and the gall of moral apostasy? God knows that there were vast numbers who fell because they believed they could not withstand the command without producing suffering upon those dependent upon them. They were to be pitied! Were not these things high misdemeanors? Shame on the caiff who denies it!

The testimony of the Senators from Colorado goes to show with what facility the President would lead men to perjury for his own vile purposes. How, in this corrupt and corrupting world, are men with human hearts to stand and not to fall?

Everything, whether mind or matter, however large or small, should stand on a square and firm foundation. Place it upon its apex, and it will topple down. Its frequent vibrations and jarrings will so loosen its hold on gravitation as to make it liable to be more easily overthrown in violent convulsion. Human virtue is believed to be so firm in most minds as not to be easily assailed. Human virtue is believed to be the great foundation of human excellence and human glory. Monuments of art are raised to celebrate the glory of virtue and truth, as if material monuments were to endure sufficiently long to be worth seeking. And yet scarcely a generation shall have passed away till you hear the vanity of their shortness deplored. The most costly and solid monuments of brass or marble, erected to the achievements of heroes and statesmen, in a few short years become the subject of the search of antiquaries, and their mutilated legs and arms and extracted eyes are scattered curiosities to enrich the museums of the world. This serves to illustrate not the worthlessness of virtue, but the folly of attempting to perpetuate its memory by mere material memorials. How many fragments of monuments strew the grounds of Palmyra without their indicating their original purpose. Enter the ever-glowing tombs of Egypt, cut from the solid rock, and painted with colors that never fade, and you will ask yourself in vain whose exploits and virtue do they commemorate? It is, therefore, but little wonder that men in the present and other generations should set such little value on the passing judgment of the age, or should endeavor to enjoy the benefits of their acts in present riches, however obtained, while they are yet in the way with them. Nor is it wonderful that men of the meanest intellect and meanest aspirations are no more easily open to the influence of corruption than the man of the loftiest position and most cultivated intellect. Hence many men have come to the conclusion that no republican government is above the influences of corruption, if the means that command it in patronage, honor, or gold, shall be sufficiently large, nor, with the exception of this great and pure Republic, without seeing any fact to justify it, but from pure theory and reflection I have been driven to the same conclusion.

I do not know that it is wise to ask for a vote upon this resolution; for, after mature reflection and thorough examination of ancient and modern history, I have come to the fixed conclusion that neither in Europe nor America will the Chief Executive of a nation be again removed by peaceful means. If he retains the money and the patronage of the Government it will be found, as it has been found, stronger than the law and impenetrable to the spear of justice. If tyranny becomes intolerable, the only resource will be found in the dagger of Brutus. God grant that it may never be used. Look at Themistocles and Alcibiades, who, after having rendered illustrious service to their country, touched the riches of Persia and the gold of the Great King. Even he who so sternly wept by unconquered Salamis was not proof against the temptations of gold.

This may seem to be the argument of spleen, emitted by disappointment at recent events; but I disclaim any reference to those events, nor do I intend that they shall be made to apply to any fact or individual connected with recent transactions. True, I cannot deny that certain modern events have attracted my attention and made me more deeply reflect upon the possibilities of the human heart, from which reasoning I have been led to conclude that the loftiest intellect, the most cultivated mind, and the most aspiring ambition is just as liable to be purchased with gold as the most moderate intellect and the most limited personal ambition, when the amount of the corrupting influence tendered to each shall be in proportion to their high intellectual qualities. The man of mean ambition and low aspirations may be more easily seduced into error by lower motives and probably by smaller amounts than the man whose ambition grasps hemispheres and would induce him to desire the luxury of millions.

But let the latter be tempted by the auri sacra fames which would measure his capacity with the lighter one of his neighbor, and why would he not yield? Has he ever resisted from the time of the progeny of the Ptolemies—to the mean traitor who sold American liberty for a paltry sum, though fortunately for the world he failed to make delivery. Indeed, I am not sure that the less cultivated mind, who sails lower in his sphere of hopes and desires, may not be harder to mislead from the path of virtue, so far as corrupt argument is concerned, than the ripe scholar who has spent his time in perusing the works of philosophers. The latter have learned to measure glory and worldly good by the splendor of its earthly light, and they will not be as likely to be shocked by the mere upbraidings of conscience as those who have learned their principles by implicit reliance on the teachings of the Scriptures and are more likely to be startled by a proposed departure from them. Nor, supposing the temptation to be increased in proportion, do I believe that any of the finer qualifications of the human heart are a protection against such corruption unless it has been touched by the coal of regeneration from the burning altar of the living God. We have seen Lord Bacon, who, in everything but virtue, stood next to the angels, behold with cold indifference the corrupt and corrupting sutor fastening bags of gold to his horse's crupper. Beyond this human audacity could not soar; lower than this human depravity could not sink. The most austere appearances, the most sedate and virtuous demeanor, even the most repulsive austerity, is no sure indication of the intellectual man.

I can recollect but two men whom I deem absolutely impenetrable to temptation, he of Athens and He of Bethlehem. The counselor who gives the chief suggestions to our acquitted President did not deem the latter above corruption. He took him to the top of the highest mountain and offered him all the kingdoms of the earth to bow down and worship him. Here was enough "landed estates" to have tempted the land-loving "high court of impeachment of the House of Lords."

To what a pitch of fame would our Republic have been raised if could have been heard issuing from the lips of the most astute, eloquent, highly cultivated, and austere of our court of impeachment, in concert with the great tempted Divine, the rebuke, "Get thee behind me, Satan!" But, no; the sun of our glory is wading through watery clouds and the murky atmosphere of doubt and distrust.

I had spoken before of the different kind of persons open to seduction; I would not do injustice to the inambitious. Indeed, I am not sure that the man of modest pretensions and moderate acquirements is not less liable to yield to corruption, especially when conscience is relied upon as a monitor, than the man of highly cultivated, intellectual, and lofty aspirations. The one places faith in the solemn teachings of the Scriptures, while the other relies on his own strong reason and his cultivated intellect.

The one is startled with a violation of the teaching of his sacred Master, while the other views them with more reasoning equality, while gold is of more value to the philosopher than to the more moderate plebeian, and it takes more to satisfy his wants, and more to satisfy his doubts as to the flames of future torments than it does those of the implicit believer. Besides, how much more desirable it is to win the man of celebrity, so that he will cover the acts of others and give character to the transaction. Hence, I have come to the conclusion that the well-furnished mind, the cultivated intellect, may be the nest of malignity, corruption, and depravity, as well as less cultivated minds.

I trust that no corruption will ever so infect our public men, and especially our public tribunals, as to taint the holy principles upon which our Government rests. If it should, the grief of the people, the grief of the friends of liberty throughout the world, will be more deeply moved than when the veil of the temple was rent in twain, and will be more intensely sad than was mourning Athens when they beheld the approach of the fatal vessel from Delos which was to seal the fate of their inspired teacher.

If this Government should learn to punish her delinquent rulers, and never to depart from the principles of the Declaration of Independence, especially from the inalienable rights of life, liberty, and its necessary concomitant—universal suffrage—she never can take a step backward, but will sail forward on a sea of glory into the very verge of that awful gulf which divides time from eternity.

Mr. Speaker, Providence has placed us here in a political Eden. All we have to do is to avoid the forbidden fruit, for we have not yet reached the perfection of justice. While nature has given us every advantage of soil, climate, and geographical position, man still is vile. But such large steps have lately been taken in the true direction, that the patriot has a right to take courage.

My sands are nearly run, and I can only see with the eye of faith. I am fast descending the downhill of life, at the foot of which stands an open grave. But you, sir, are promised length of days and a brilliant career. If you and your compeers can fling away ambition and realize that every human being, however lowly-born or degraded, by fortune is your equal, that every inalienable right which belongs to you belongs also to him, truth and righteousness will spread over the land, and you will look down from the top of the Rocky mountains upon an empire of one hundred millions of happy people.

Still, we must remember not to place our trust in princes, for we have seen that in the richest heart, the most highly cultivated mind, adorned with every literary grace, keen in argument as the Stagerite, and fortified with an outward shield of bronzed austerity which seemed to forbid the approach of levity or corruption; this richest composition of human mold may be the abode of malignity, avarice, corroding lust, and uncontrollable ambition, as the owl, the prairie-dog, and rattlesnake nestle together in loving harmony in the richest soil of the prairie.

I desire that the resolutions shall be postponed until next Monday, as certain gentlemen wish to look at them.

[APPENDIX.]

Extract from the testimony taken before the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives, second session Thirty-Ninth and second session Fortieth Congress.

Colonel Wood testifies as follows, in a direct interview with the President himself, being the least atrocious of an hundred similar cases:

"Question. After that did you apply to the President for any office?"

"Answer. I did, sir.

"Question. By whom were you recommended?"

"Answer. By Colonel Ruel, by Mr. H. F. Cosper, assessor, and several military recommendations.

"Question. When did you apply to the President?"

"Answer. On the 20th or 21st of September, 1866.

"Question. Did you wait for him to return from his journey to Chicago?"

"Answer. I did; I arrived in Washington during his western trip.

"Question. State as distinctly as you can the form of conversation and what took place between you and the President.

"Answer. I introduced myself and showed my recommendations, and stated my claims for Government employment; that I was a resident of the South, and being a Union man was driven away from the South, and compelled to lose all my property; that I had been in the Army and had a good record, and thought I was entitled to Government employment, as I was poor and out of employment. He looked at two of my recommendations, I think, and glanced at some others, but did not read them, and said my claim was good, or worthy of attention, I do not remember which. He then asked me what position I wanted. I suggested some appointment in the internal revenue department, as I was acquainted with that, and it had been suggested to me by some of my friends in Memphis that I should ask for something of that kind.

"Question. Did you suggest to him where?"

"Answer. I suggested in Alabama or some part of the South. He then asked me—I suppose noticing that I was not much of a politician—what my political proclivities were. I told him I was in favor of the present Administration, had always been a loyal man and a Republican, and that I had faith or confidence in our Administration, in our present Congress, and in the Chief Executive of the nation. He then asked me if I was aware of any differences between himself and Congress. Wishing to make as good a case as I could, because I wanted the appointment, I said I was aware of some differences on minor points. He then replied: "They are not minor points, sir; and the patronage and influence of these officers must be in my favor," leaving me to infer, in his favor, as opposed to Congress. As I inferred that I replied that I could not accept an office, and retired."

Testimony of James L. Selfridge.

"Question. State your residence?"

"Answer. Bethlehem, Pennsylvania.

"Question. State if you were appointed to any office in the congressional district in which you reside?"

"Answer. In the latter part of June, 1865, I was appointed assessor of internal revenue of the eleventh district of Pennsylvania, to fill a vacancy.

"Question. How long did you continue to hold that office?"

"Answer. I held it until the 20th of November, 1866.

"Question. State, if you please, whether you held a commission in the usual form?"

"Answer. Yes, sir; I held a commission from the Secretary of the Treasury until the adjournment of the Senate.

"Question. Now state, if you please, whether your name was sent into the Senate for confirmation?"

"Answer. So far as I know it was not sent in.

"Question. Did you bring the matter, at any time during the session of the Senate, to the notice of the Treasury Department?"

"Answer. I came down here the 5th of June, I think; I do not recollect distinctly whether I saw the Assistant Secretary that day or the next day, the 5th or 6th of June; I called at the Treasury Department with the view of urging him to send my name in.

"Question. You know, then, that it had not been sent in.

"Answer. I so understood; I was unable to see the Secretary, and saw Assistant Secretary Chandler, who, after a moment, referred me to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; he seemed to be aware that my name had not been sent in; Mr. Rollins could not be seen, and I saw Mr. Whitman, the deputy commissioner; I told him that I had been over to the Secretary's office and stated my business there, and they had referred me to the Commissioner's office; I inquired why the name had not been sent in; he replied that Mr. Cowan had charge of the Pennsylvania appointments, and that when Mr. Cowan said the name should go in it would go, and not until then.

"Question. State whether you called at any time upon the President himself in regard to it?"

"Answer. No, sir; I called on Mr. Cowan and stated to him what I learned at the Department. He replied that he supposed that was so.

"Question. Did he give you any advice?"

"Answer. He told me to go home and support the President and his policy and he would attend to the matter; I saw him before the adjournment of Congress, on the 3d day of July, in the city of Philadelphia; he there intimated to me that the name would not be sent in; he told me that if I stopped taking Radical papers and supported the President and his policy the President might reappoint me, but he would appoint no one who took Radical papers.

"Question. You had no conversation with any officers connected with the Treasury Department in regard to the matter after that?"

"Answer. I saw the Secretary of the Treasury subsequently, I think, about the 25th or 26th of February, and I inquired of him how the matter was. He said he supposed it was an omission; I told him I knew how it was; that the matter had been left entirely with Mr. Cowan. He made no reply.

"Question. Did Mr. Cowan state to you, as if by authority, what was the President's policy?"

"Answer. He stated very emphatically, so far as I was concerned, that unless I stopped taking Radical papers, and supported the President's policy, I would not be reappointed. I held the office after the adjournment of the Senate until November. I have a letter here from the Fifth Auditor of the Treasury Department, dated May 8, 1867, in which he speaks of there having been an omission in sending in my name, and they refused to pay salary and commissions after the adjournment of the Senate. I wrote to him about the matter, and he replied that there seemed to be an omission to send in my name, and that I therefore ceased to be entitled to receive compensation as assessor on the 28th of July, 1866."

Testimony of John Evans.

"Question. State your residence.

"Answer. Denver City, Colorado Territory.

"Question. To what position were you elected under the proposed State organization of Colorado?"

"Answer. United States Senator.

"Question. Were you in this city about the time of the passage of the bill, during the first session of the Thirty-Ninth Congress, providing for the admission of the State of Colorado into the Union?"

"Answer. I was.

"Question. State whether you had any interviews with the President of the United States after the passage of that bill, in reference to the same?"

"Answer. I had.

"Question. Were you invited to any such interviews?"

"Answer. I was, by an anonymous note.

"Question. Have you the note, and if so produce it?"

"Answer. Supposing it would be called for I brought it along, and present the original note.

"Question. Please read it.

"Answer. It reads as follows: 'Mr. Evans will please call at the President's house and see Mr. Edward Cooper, Monday.'

"Question. Do you know in whose handwriting this note is?"

"Answer. I do not.

"Question. By whom was it delivered to you?"

"Answer. It was left in my box at the hotel post office, National Hotel.

"Question. State whether in response to that note you called upon Mr. Edward Cooper?"

"Answer. I did.

"Question. What position was Mr. Cooper occupying at that time?"

"Answer. I understood him to be the Private Secretary of the President.

"Question. Please state what transpired at that interview between you and Mr. Cooper?"

"Answer. We had a long interview in regard to the political situation, and in regard to the probability of the President signing the Colorado Bill.

"Question. State substantially in detail what transpired during that interview?"

"Answer. It would be difficult at this late period to detail all the conversation that passed between us. The substance of it was that it was Mr. Cooper's impression that if Mr. Chaffee and I would sustain the President's policy he would not veto the Colorado bill.

"Question. Did he pretend to speak by authority?"

"Answer. I think that, although his general conversation would indicate that he did, he in terms disclaimed speaking by authority. He said the matter was in our hands, and that it was for us to say.

"Question. Meaning thereby that the approval or disapproval of that bill was in your hands?"

"Answer. That is what I understood him to mean.

"Question. After that interview with Mr. Cooper did you have an interview with the President the same day?"

"Answer. We did immediately following on the same night.

"Question. Did Mr. Cooper go in with you?"

"Answer. No, sir; he proposed that we should go in and see the President.

"Question. State as much as possible in detail the conversation that occurred between you and Mr. Cooper, and between you and the President?"

"Answer. Previous to our interview with the President we were invited into a private room by Mr. Cooper, who said he desired to talk with us in regard to the Colorado question. After a resume of the present political situation he said it was of vital importance for us to be friends of the President and his plan of restoration; said there would be no trouble about our bill if we would give our adherence to the President's policy; that believing, as the President did, that the future welfare and harmony of the country depended upon sustaining him, and against Congress, it would not be expedient in him, the President, to admit us to fix a ruling power over him in the Senate; that there was no constitutional reason or precedent upon which to veto—it was merely a question of expediency—and added, 'It is for you, gentlemen, to decide.' He said a great deal else of this import, to all of which we answered and stated that we had no personal hostility to the President; would be glad to see harmony, and hoped a more perfect understanding between the President and Congress would yet harmonize them; and that some plan would yet be agreed upon that would restore the union of all the States, so that loyalty could be encouraged and protected in the late rebel States; that one of us (Mr. Chaffee) had voted for him, the President, in the Baltimore convention; and that we should sustain him, so far as we could, in justice to our views upon the great national question of reconstruction. He then asked us to go in and see the President, which we did. The President met us very cordially; went over his whole plan in detail since his inauguration; said that our bill placed him in a rather awkward position; that he felt the necessity of carrying out his policy as the only one to restore the Union; that the Radicals in Congress, if allowed to succeed, would disrupt and destroy the Government. He characterized the leading men as actuated only by a desire to prolong themselves in power, and said he did not deem it expedient or in consonance with the future welfare of the Union to admit two more into the Senate to carry out their schemes; that he felt friendly to the West, and desired to do right, &c. To all of which we answered that we thought him mistaken about the animus and object of the majority in Congress; that we believed they, as well as himself, were actuated by patriotic motives; that we felt it to be our duty to be free to act as we thought best in our judgment, after taking the oath to support the Constitution of the United States; that we could have no object in this exigency but to act in a way that would restore the country upon a just basis, so that the rights of all would be guaranteed; that we should have sustained the civil rights bill, if we could have voted upon it; that we very much desired the admission of Colorado, and hoped he would approve the measure, &c. I further stated to him that I had been a Republican since the organization of that party. After we left him, Mr. Cooper held another private interview with us, in which he requested us to put our views in writing for him, not to be used, as near and as favorable as we could consistently with the President's policy, to think of it over night, and to see him again at nine o'clock in the morning. During this interview he left us and we went in to see the President, and after returning he made this request for us to put our views in writing. We called in the morning, separately and without consultation with each other, and declined, stating that we had said and done all that we could, and would have to submit to what the President saw fit to do in the premises."

Testimony of Hon. James Harlan.

"Question. State what you know, if anything, in regard to the issue of agricultural college scrip, under the act of 1862, to any of the States lately in rebellion against the Government.

"Answer. Some time during the summer of 1866, a gentleman appeared in the Interior Department representing himself to be the agent of the State of North Carolina, and made a demand for the agricultural college scrip to which that State was entitled. His request was submitted by me, as Secretary of the Interior, to the President at a Cabinet meeting, and I received the directions of the President to cause the scrip to be issued to that State, and I gave the necessary directions to the Commissioner of the Land Office. I do not remember the actual issue of any scrip, or countersigning any scrip; it may have been countersigned by me as Secretary of the Interior before I left.

"Question. Was the subject discussed in the Cabinet meeting to which you refer?

"Answer. Yes, it was talked over as such questions were usually talked over; not in a formal way.

"Question. Was there any question made, or any diversity of opinion expressed on the subject by members of the Cabinet, or did you yourself suggest any objections to the issue?

"Answer. I think the question of the right of the State to the scrip at the time was talked over. It was, however, the settled policy of the President to permit each of these States to receive and enjoy all the rights and privileges of any other State in the Union, on the ground that they had been fully restored to the Union. There were members of the Cabinet who dissented from the theory; but, with the concurrence of the majority and the President, it was acted upon as a settled question."

Testimony of E. A. Rollins, Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

"Question. State whether or not the executive removals made in the year 1866 in the internal revenue department were beneficial to the revenue service.

"Answer. I did not then, nor do I now, regard them so.

"Question. As far as you know, were the persons removed charged with incapacity or dishonesty in the performance of their duties?

"Answer. In but very few instances.

"Question. You stated that the removals were injurious to the revenue service. Have you made any estimate or have you any opinion of the extent of the injury to the revenue service growing out of these removals?

"Answer. I have made no estimate; it was from a variety of causes. The mere changing of experienced for inexperienced officers gave better opportunity for fraud upon such officers by experienced, designing tax payers. I have no doubt that the loss to the revenue was many million dollars.

"Question. Have you any means of saying whether the loss was five, ten, or twenty million dollars?

"Answer. I have not. This must be a matter of estimate rather than of calculation. There can be but little actual, reliable data, except what comes out of the nature of the cases and the character of the several officers removed and appointed.

"Question. Aside from the elements of experience, were the men appointed, in the qualities which public officers ought to possess, equal to those who were removed, considered as a body?

"Answer. I do not so regard them.

"Question. Do you trace any difficulties in collecting revenue on distilled spirits to the changes made in the year 1866?

"Answer. I do. I suggested in a previous answer that there was better opportunity for fraud upon inexperienced officers. Designing distillers and rectifiers were actually encouraged to combine for purposes of fraud.

"Question. Are there men in the revenue service whom you should have removed upon public grounds if the power of removal had been vested in you solely?

"Answer. There are.

"Question. Why have those persons not been removed?

"Answer. Because I had not the power to remove them?

"Question. What have you done, if anything, for the purpose of obtaining their removal by the agency of the Secretary of the Treasury or of the President, or of both?

"Answer. I have had no conference with, nor have I made a communication directly to, the President since the spring or early summer of 1866. To the Secretary I have, from time to time, expressed my opinion—unfavorable opinion—of some assessors and collectors, but made no formal communication until recently. I have filed with him, I believe, no distinct charges, based upon evidence received by me concerning the assessors and collectors of whom I had had an unfavorable opinion and whose removal I believed would be of advantage.

"Question. Why have you not recommended the removal of these persons?

"Answer. I have done so informally, but not formally, because I have supposed that my opinion would not receive much credit with the President. I have not formally done so until recently."

Testimony of Matthew McEwen.

"Question. What was your rank in the Army, and where were you stationed?

"Answer. I was surgeon in the Army. My brevet rank is brigadier general. In the early part of the war I was in charge of the United States general hospital in the valley of the Kanawha. I was afterward assigned to the second cavalry division as surgeon. I was surgeon-in-chief of the brigade, of the division, and of the corps for a short time. I resided before the war in Charlestown, West Virginia.

"Question. As such surgeon, did you become acquainted with the fact that there was a large number of deserters from the Army?

"Answer. Yes, sir. I knew quite a number who were marked deserters, in our command especially.

"Question. State whether, after you were discharged from the Army, you conceived the idea of attempting to get those deserters, or any of them restored?

"Answer. I did.

"Question. Did you make up a list of men to make application to have them restored?

"Answer. I did.

"Question. How many names did that list contain?

"Answer. One hundred and ninety-three, I think.

"Question. What was your motive in getting these men pardoned?

"Answer. I expected to be paid for it, of course; I have been acting as claim agent for the soldiers of our division.

"Question. Having this list, state whether you conceived the design of applying to anybody to get political influence for that purpose?

"Answer. I did; I applied to Mr. Andrews, of Berkeley county, the editor of the Era, who was then a candidate for Congress in opposition to Mr. Kitchin, the present member of that district. I applied to him through his son, the father being then absent canvassing.

"Question. What was the message that you sent by the son to the father?

"Answer. That the restoration of those men would be of great importance to him in his election. That was the subject we had in discussion.

"Question. Did you receive an answer to that message?

"Answer. I did, in the form of a letter to the President of the United States by Mr. Andrews. I think I have a copy of the letter; and if so, I will furnish it to the committee. It stated that it would be a matter of great political importance to have those men restored; that they nearly all resided in his congressional district, and that the majority of them would vote the Democratic ticket. I received this letter three or four days after I had sent the message by the son. Two or three telegraphic dispatches had passed between us. The son named a time when the father would be at home. I went to see him, but he was not at home, and the son furnished me with this letter.

"Question. What did you do with the letter?

"Answer. I gave it, with the list, to Thomas B. Florence.

"Question. How was this list headed?

"Answer. List of deserters; giving regiments and companies. My impression is that the original list had that heading, but I am not positive.

"Question. Do you recollect whether you gave any other paper to Mr. Florence except Mr. Andrew's letter and this list?

"Answer. I do not think I did, unless it may have been some short statement of my own; but I do not recollect.

"Question. What did you tell Mr. Florence that you desired to have done with the letter and list?

"Answer. I wished him to get those men relieved of the charge of desertion, which would place them on the rolls again. He said he would attend to it. I think I saw him again about two days after that. He said that the application looked very favorable, and that he thought it probable the men would be restored. When I called again the second time he furnished me with the order of restoration. [Witness produces the order removing all pains and penalties from the men named therein on account of the charge of desertion. It is dated 'Adjutant General's Office, November 21, 1866,' signed by E. D. Townsend, Assistant Adjutant General, and is addressed to 'Dr. M. McEwen, care of Hon. T. B. Florence, Washington, District of Columbia.' The order and envelope in which it was inclosed are attached to the testimony, marked Exhibit B.]

"Question. As to how many on that list did you, of your own knowledge, know anything of the merits of their application?

"Answer. I was personally acquainted with nearly all the cavalry men.

"Question. As to how many of them had you any written evidence of the merits of their application?

"Answer. I had no evidence at all from their officers.

"Question. Did you file any evidence in the War Department?

"Answer. I did not. There were no papers filed except what I have already stated. I am satisfied that no one had anything to do with the application but myself.

"Question. How long prior to the election did you get the order restoring these men?

"Answer. A very few days; not over three or four.

"Question. As claim agent, what did you suppose would be the amount of penalties and forfeitures that would be lost to those men in case they were not restored, and that would come to them in case they were restored?

"Answer. Some ran as high as $600, and others not over $100. Taking them altogether I suppose the aggregate amount might be safely put at $75,000.

"Question. How much were you to have as claim agent in case they were restored?

"Answer. Those with whom I had my understanding were to give me one half. With many of them I have had no understanding at all.

"Question. With how many had you such understanding?

"Answer. With nearly all the cavalry men.

"Question. You had no understanding with the infantry men.

"Answer. No, sir; there has been nothing done with any of them.

"Question. When you received that order from Thomas B. Florence, did you pay him any money therefor, as a reward for his services?

"Answer. I did.

"Question. How much?

"Answer. I paid him $1,000.

"Question. In what form?

"Answer. In ten dollar notes.

"Question. Did you take any receipt?

"Answer. I did not.

"Question. Do you know any other matter or thing, in relation to these men, which the committee ought to know?

"Answer. I do not know of anything else. I think I have told all."

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the resolutions be laid upon the table, and on that motion demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I will modify my motion and say Monday two weeks.

Mr. HOLMAN. I insist on my motion to lay upon the table.

The House divided; and there were—yeas 24, noes 60; no quorum voting.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I now move that the further consideration of the subject be postponed until Monday two weeks.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, as this question now seems to be reopened, I desire to submit a series of additional articles involving the higher political crimes. They are as follows:

Resolved, That the following additional articles be exhibited by the House of Representatives against Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, in further maintenance and support of their impeachment against him for high crimes and misdemeanors:

ARTICLE I.

That the said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, not regarding the proper limitation of his powers as such officer under the Constitution and laws thereof, but contriving and intending by means and under color of the authority vested in him as the chief executive officer of this Government, and Commander-in-Chief of its armies, to bring back into the Union the lately revolted States upon terms and conditions dictated by himself, without the consent of Congress and in defiance of its will, did under the false pretense that it was his right and duty as such Executive under the Constitution to guaranty to every State in this Union a republican form of government, heretofore, to wit: on the day of —, 1865, and at divers other days and times, unlawfully usurp and exercise powers and functions belonging only to the Congress, by issuing proclamations, of his own authority, setting up new governments in sundry of the said revolted States, placing over them in the quality of provisional governors, which was an office unknown to the law, men of his own appointment, who were disqualified under the laws of the United States, by reason of their participation in the rebellion from holding any civil office therein, in violation of the Constitution and the laws thereof; whereby the said Andrew Johnson, President as aforesaid, did then and there commit, and was guilty of a high misdemeanor in office.

ARTICLE II.

That the said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, in contempt of the authority of Congress and of the laws passed thereby, and in order to the carrying out of the policy of reconstruction indicated in sundry proclamations issued by him for that purpose, without the aid of Congress, did pay and direct the payment of salaries to W. W. Holden, B. F. Perry, James Johnson, Lewis E. Parsons, and William Marvin, provisional governors unlawfully appointed by him over the States of North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, and Florida, at rates fixed by himself, out of the contingent fund of the War Department, though well knowing that the said provisional governors were officers unknown to the Constitution and laws of the United States, and were disqualified by their participation in the rebellion from taking the oath of office required in all cases, and did not take the same; thereby disregarding and violating the provisions of the acts of Congress of the 2d of July, 1862, and 9th February, 1863, and misapplying and misusing the moneys appropriated by law to the proper and legitimate uses of the said Department; and this for the purpose of enabling him to dispense with the cooperation of Congress in and about the premises, and in violation of his high trust as chief of the executive department of this Government; whereby the said Andrew Johnson, President as aforesaid, did commit and was guilty of a high misdemeanor in office.

ARTICLE III.

That in like contempt of the Constitution of the United States, the said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, in order to pay the expenses of the provisional governments unlawfully set up by him within the said revolted States, in the absence of any means supplied by Congress for that purpose, and for the purpose of raising money therefor, without its authority or consent, did authorize his pretended governors, or some of them, to seize and appropriate for that use a portion of the property late of the rebel confederate and State governments within their respective territories and jurisdiction, which had become by reason of the overthrow of those governments the property of the United States, and also to tax the people of the said States for the same purpose in violation of the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, which give to Congress alone the power to levy taxes and dispose of the public property of the United States; whereby the said Andrew Johnson, President as aforesaid, did then and there commit and was guilty of a high misdemeanor in office.

ARTICLE IV.

That the said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, in like contempt of the Constitution and laws thereof did, on or about the — day of —, 1865, without the authority or consent of Congress, surrender and turn over to the provisional government established by him for the State of North Carolina, a large amount of real estate at Greenville, in said State, consisting of buildings erected during the rebellion for the manufacture of arms, on lands donated for that object, and of the appraised value of $33,918 78, and this for the purpose of paying in part the expenses of his said government and to enable him to maintain the same without the consent or cooperation of Congress; whereby the said Andrew Johnson, President as aforesaid, did then and there commit and was guilty of a high misdemeanor in office.

ARTICLE V.

That the said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, in like contempt of the Constitution and laws and of the authority of Congress, and with a view to the maintenance and recognition of the government established by him in the State of North Carolina, and in pursuance of a settled purpose on his part to permit each of the rebel States to receive and enjoy all the rights and privileges of any other States in the Union, on the ground that they had been fully restored by him, and in defiance of the known will of Congress in the premises, did, on the — day of —, 1865, order and direct the Secretary of the Interior to issue to the said government as one of the United States, a large amount of land scrip, under the pretended authority of an act of Congress passed during the rebellion, and authorizing the distribution thereof among the States for agricultural purposes, and in fraud of the said act, and of the true intent of Congress therein; whereby the said Andrew Johnson, President as aforesaid, did then and there commit and was guilty of a high misdemeanor in office.

ARTICLE VI.

That the said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, in like contempt of the Constitution and the laws thereof, did on or about the — day of —, 1865, without the authority or consent of Congress, and without any consideration whatever, surrender and deliver over to the rebel stockholders and owners of railroads within the revolted States, which were captured in the war waged by them against the Government of the United States, the roads so captured, on which very large sums of money had been expended by the said Government, together with the rolling stock and machinery belonging to the same—the whole being of the value of many million dollars; and did also surrender and deliver over to the same parties one or more railroads constructed by the so-called confederate government for the purposes of the war, and one or more railroads constructed at great expense by the Government of the United States itself, in violation of the provisions of the Constitution of the United States; whereby the said Andrew Johnson, President as aforesaid, did then and there commit and was guilty of a high misdemeanor in office.

ARTICLE VII.

That the said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, in like contempt of the Constitution and the laws thereof, did, on or about the — day of —, 1865, and at other times, without the authority or consent of Congress, sell and transfer to the disloyal stockholders of railroad companies within the rebel States, at a private valuation, on a long credit, and without any adequate security, a large amount of railroad rolling stock and machinery belonging to the Government of the United States, of the value of many millions of dollars; and did also, after repeated willful defaults on the part of the purchasers thereof, postpone the debt due to the Government therefor, which has never yet been paid, in order to enable them to satisfy the claims of other creditors, including long arrears of interest on a large amount of bonds of the said companies, of which the said Andrew Johnson was himself a large holder at the time, in violation of the Constitution of the United States and of his duty as President, and in fraud of the said Government; whereby the said Andrew Johnson, President as aforesaid, did then and there commit and was guilty of a high misdemeanor in office.

ARTICLE VIII.

That the said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, in like contempt of the Constitution and the laws thereof, did, on or about the — day of —, 1865, and at divers other days and times, order to be surrendered, and did surrender and deliver up, without equivalent, and under the pretense that he had authority so to do by virtue of the pardoning power vested in him by the Constitution, to the original rebel proprietors a large amount of real estate, comprising among others about one hundred and twelve tracts or parcels of land within the State of Virginia alone, which had been duly libelled and condemned by judgment of the courts for the treason of the said proprietors, in pursuance of law, and had thereby become expressly vested in the Government of the United States for the use thereof; whereby the said Andrew Johnson, President as aforesaid, did then and there commit and was guilty of a high misdemeanor in office.

ARTICLE IX.

That the said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, in like contempt of the Constitution and laws, did, on or about the — day of —, 1865, and at other times, without the authority or consent of Congress, and in plain violation of law, not only restore to rebel owners large amounts of cotton and other abandoned property that had been seized by the agents of the Treasury, under and in conformity with the law in that case provided, but did pay and order to be paid back to the rebel claimants the proceeds of actual sales thereof to a very large amount of money, at his own mere will and pleasure and in utter defiance of the act of Congress of —, directing the same to be paid into the Treasury, and referring the parties aggrieved for remedy to the courts; whereby the said Andrew Johnson, President as aforesaid, did then and there commit and was guilty of a high misdemeanor in office.

ARTICLE X.

That the said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, in like contempt of the Constitution, did, on the — day of —, 1865, and at divers other days and times, unlawfully abuse and misuse the pardoning power bestowed on him thereby, to the great detriment of the public, by releasing the most active and formidable of the leaders of the rebellion, for the purpose of securing their services in aid of his plan of reconstruction by Executive authority, and further, by substantially delegating the same to one or more of his provisional governors by pledging himself to pardon all such persons as they might recommend for that purpose; whereby the said Andrew Johnson, President as aforesaid, did then and there commit and was guilty of a high misdemeanor in office.

ARTICLE XI.

That the said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, in like contempt of his obligation under the Constitution to see that the laws were faithfully executed, did not only refuse to enforce the laws passed by Congress for the suppression of the rebellion, and the punishment of those who gave it comfort and support, by directing proceedings against them and their property, but did absolutely obstruct the course of public justice by prohibiting the institution of legal proceedings for that purpose, and, where already commenced, by staying the same indefinitely or ordering absolutely the discontinuance thereof; and, in pursuance of a general policy adopted by him to that effect, did, among other things, on or about the — day of —, 1867, not only release from imprisonment a certain Clement C. Clay, then a State prisoner, charged, among other things, with treason, with complicity in the murder of Mr. Lincoln, and with organizing bands of pirates, robbers, and murderers in Canada to burn the cities and ravage the commercial coasts of the United States on the British frontier, but did also forbid his arrest on proceedings instituted against him for treason and conspiracy in the State of Alabama, and did further order his property, when the same was seized for confiscation under the laws of Congress, at the instance of the district attorney of the United States for that district, to be restored; whereby the said Andrew Johnson, President as aforesaid, did then and there commit and was guilty of a high misdemeanor in office.

ARTICLE XII.

That the said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, in like contempt and forgetfulness of his obligation under the Constitution to see that the laws were faithfully executed, did after procuring the arrest of Jefferson Davis under and by virtue of a proclamation, charging him among other things with a violation of the law of war in the inhuman treatment of prisoners and in conniving at and encouraging the assassination of Abraham Lincoln, and offering a reward of $100,000 for his capture, and although the complicity of the said Davis in the said assassination was found by a military commission organized at Washington for the trial of the conspirators against the life of the said Lincoln, and although also an indictment for treason was known to be depending against him in the District of Columbia, did, on the — day of —, 1867, or about that time, surrender the said Davis to the civil authorities in Virginia to answer an indictment there also found against him for high treason, without making any return of the fact that he was held by him to answer for the other crimes aforesaid, and did allow him to go at large on bail taken from him to answer the said last mentioned indictment, without any discharge of the said Davis by due process of law from arrest for the other crimes for which he was so held and without any claim to hold or detain him to answer therefor; whereby the said Andrew Johnson, President as aforesaid, did then and there commit and was guilty of a high misdemeanor.

ARTICLE XIII.

That the said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, in like contempt of the Constitution thereof, and for the purpose of carrying out his policy of reconstruction by executive authority, and in pursuance of a public declaration made by him to that effect in a speech delivered by him at St. Louis, has grossly and willfully abused the appointing power conferred on him thereby.

First, in this, that he has removed on system, and to the great damage of the public service, a large number of meritorious public officers for no other reason than because they refused to induce and support his claim of the right to renege and restore the rebel States on conditions of his own, and because they favored the jurisdiction and authority of Congress in the premises.

Second, in this, that he has, in repeated instances, and in pursuance of the same object, declined and refused to make nominations at the next ensuing session of the Senate in cases of offices filled up by him during the recess, and has continued the persons by whom the said offices had been so filled in their public employments after the adjournment of that body; and Third, in this, that he has reappointed, in repeated instances, after the adjournment of the Senate, persons nominated by him to that body and rejected by it as unfit for the places for which they had been so nominated.

Whereby the said Andrew Johnson, President as aforesaid, did then and there commit and was guilty of a high misdemeanor in office.

ARTICLE XIV.

That the said Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, in like contempt of the Constitution and the laws thereof, and of his obligation to see that the said laws were faithfully executed, did, on the — day of —, 1865, and at divers other times, exercise a dispensing power over the act of Congress of July 2, 1862, prescribing a form of oath to be taken by all civil officers before entering upon the performance of their duties, by commissioning revenue officers, as well as others, who were well known by him to be disqualified to take the said oath by reason of their participation in the rebellion, in preference to loyal men, and allowing them to enter upon and exercise the duties appertaining to their respective offices, and paying them salaries for their services therein, and this in pursuance of a deliberate purpose confessed by himself of suspending the execution of the said law, because the same was not in harmony with his policy of reconstruction, and in order, as he falsely pretended, to give to the Congress an opportunity at its next assemblage of revising its policy and making it conform to his own views, although in point of fact the same was not communicated to Congress until it was drawn from the said Johnson by a call on the part of the House of Representatives; whereby the said Andrew Johnson, President as aforesaid, did then and there commit, and was guilty of a high misdemeanor in office.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, was then granted leave to print in the Globe as part of the debates, his argument in support of his additional articles of impeachment. [See Appendix.]

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that an order be made that the amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 818, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1869, and for other purposes, may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, under the five-minutes rule for debate pro and con.

No objection being made it was so ordered.

LAND BOUNTIES.

On motion of Mr. JULIAN, a letter of the Secretary of War, relative to land bounties, was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. GORHAM, its Secretary, notifying the House that the Senate insisted upon its amendments to House bill No. 605, making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1869, disagreed to the amendments of the House to other amendments of the Senate, agreed to the conference asked for by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MORRILL of Maine, Mr. HOWE, and Mr. HENDRICKS managers of said conference on its part.

It also announced that the Senate had passed House bill No. 344, to incorporate the Washington Target-Shooting Association in the District of Columbia, with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

It also announced that the Senate had concurred in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate to House bill No. 869, to prescribe an oath of office to be taken by persons from whom legal disabilities shall have been removed.

It also announced, in conclusion, that the Senate had passed the following House bill and joint resolutions:

An act (H. R. No. 366) to incorporate the National Hotel Company of Washington city;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 154) relative to the settlement of the accounts of certain officers and agents who have disbursed public money under the direction of the chief of the engineers; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 324) to extend the time for the completion of the West Wisconsin railroad.

WAREHOUSING SYSTEM, ETC.

Mr. MORRELL, from the Committee on Manufactures, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1369) to modify the warehousing system, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

The first section of the bill provides that upon the entry of any goods, wares, or merchandise for warehousing, the owner, importer, consignee, or agent of such goods, wares, or merchandise shall make a declaration in writing, verified by oath or affirmation, stating the kind, description, and quantity of goods, wares, or merchandise entered; also signifying whether such goods, wares, or merchandise are entered for consumption or exportation, and such declaration shall be obligatory upon the party entering such goods.

The second section provides that upon the withdrawal of any goods, wares, or merchandise for consumption there shall be paid by the owner, importer, consignee, or agent of such goods, wares, or merchandise, in addition to the proper duties and charges, interest, at the rate of six per cent. per annum, upon the whole amount of the duties upon such goods, wares, or merchandise, from and after sixty days subsequent to the time of the entry of such goods for warehousing until the withdrawal of the same for consumption. Such interest to be paid in the same denomination as duties are payable.

The third section authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to make such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with law, as may be necessary to carry into effect this act; and he is further authorized and instructed to cause to be published a monthly schedule or statement of all goods, wares, or merchandise entered for warehousing, and on hand at the end of each month, stating names of owner, importer, consignee, or agent making entry; also the kind and quantity of goods, wares, or merchandise so entered, and whether for consumption or exportation.

The fourth and last section provides that so much of all laws as are inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and they are hereby, repealed.

Mr. ALLISON. I rise to a point of order. I understand this to be a bill increasing the duties on imports, and therefore it ought to go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MORRELL. I do not so understand it.

Mr. ALLISON. The second section provides for a rate of interest that shall be paid in coin, thus increasing the present duty on imported goods.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. This does not seem to be an increase of the rate of tariff on any article whatever, for the reason that any person who does not see fit to warehouse his goods can receive them at the custom-house at exactly the rates now prescribed by law; but if they do not go to the custom-house, then six per cent. duty is to be collected. The Chair does not think this is an increase of the tariff, because it does not compel anybody to warehouse his goods.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to discuss the merits of this bill at length. The committee in a report, now in the hands of members, have presented the facts and argument which, in their judgment, should insure for it the favorable action of this House. It is certainly the highest duty of a Government which derives all its powers directly from the people, not only to give protection to person and property, but to guard all the rights and interests of the citizens, to protect him in his labor and in the rewards of his labor. The warehousing system has from its very inception and introduction here been fraught with evil to the country. It is and has been in direct hostility to American interests, and the friend and ally of our commercial and industrial rivals and enemies. It has been the means of forcing upon our markets hundreds, and I might say thousands, of millions of dollars worth of foreign wares, which could have been better produced here, and the importation of which diminished to the extent of their cost in labor the production of our own people, while taking from their decreased earnings the money with which they had to be paid.

It is believed that the facts presented in the report of the committee demonstrate that the entire abolishment of the system would not injure or diminish our commerce with countries between which and ourselves the trade is reciprocal, and would only affect trade with manufacturing nations whose consumption of our breadstuffs and other articles of export depends solely on our ability to compete for their custom with the cheap labor products of agricultural Europe. The committee have not, however, thought it wise to recommend our entire abrogation of the system at this time, and have reported a bill which will correct some of its evils, and prepare the way for further modification, or eventual repeal by future legislation, without serious disturbance to the commercial interests of the country. The operations of the bill will be prospective and gradual; it proposes no violent change, and can harm no one except the foreigner who has found in our bonded warehouses an asylum and ambush from which to attack and destroy rival producers in this country.

The first section of the bill provides that the importer or owner of all goods entered for warehousing shall declare upon their entry whether they are intended for exportation or consumption and shall abide by that declaration. With upwards of forty million dollars worth of foreign goods constantly impending over our markets the business communities have no present means of ascertaining what portion of this crushing weight may be expected to fall, and can make no reliable calculations in regard to the regular trade supply and demand. Under the provisions of this section the American importing merchant who orders goods for his own sales and pays the duty on their arrival will be protected, and the manufacturer will be enabled at all times to know what amount of competing wares is likely to come upon the markets, and can make his calculations and govern his business accordingly. The second section provides that, in addition to the duties and charges, interest shall be paid upon the duties of all goods entered for consumption from the date of entry until their withdrawal. The other sections only provide for carrying the act into effect.

The average amount of goods in warehouse during the past year has been about forty-three million dollars, representing over twenty million dollars of unpaid duties.

This sum may be considered in the light of a bonus to the foreigner, to enable him more effectually to crush the American merchant and manufacturer.

The regular importer and domestic manufacturer have to pay the full cost of their wares before they can be placed on the market, while the foreigner, by the aid of our warehousing system, can, through his broker or agent, put his goods on sale by sample while in Government stores, and pay the duty (which is shown to represent about one third of their free value) from the proceeds of such sale. As most foreign manufactures which go into warehouses are sent here by foreign owners to be sold by agents or commission men, the business in all its magnitude and destructive consequences to legitimate trade and production requires and involves very little invested capital in this country, the only actual cash required being loaned by the Government without interest. It is incredible that, for more than twenty years, a system has been permitted to stand almost unchallenged, which thus supplies to foreigners a capital of from twenty to twenty-five million dollars in gold, the greater part of which is used to prostrate our own industry.

The bill proposes, instead of allowing the foreign importer the free use of this large capital, as heretofore, that he shall pay simple interest for the use of it; and if this provision does not operate to diminish the amount of warehoused goods, the Treasury will be benefited to the extent of a million and a quarter to a million and a half dollars per annum, and our home industry relieved from just that amount of taxation. If it should operate to diminish imports of foreign competing manufactures we shall have less to pay abroad, and a better market for home products, and more constant employment for our own people. It is the opinion of the committee, and so expressed in the report, "that this boon to foreign commerce was obtained collusively and given unwittingly. When the warehousing laws were passed, Congress could not have conceived that their effect would be to furnish gratuitously a capital of over twenty million dollars to foreign exporters. The bold proposition to give $1,500,000 annually to alien interests could not have been entertained a moment. The necessities of the Government, and the present stern demands of the people for the most rigid economy, require that this thoughtless and unwise concession should be revoked."

It will, perhaps, be charged that the purpose of this bill is to diminish imports. I admit the charge and defend the purpose. We want less of the products of foreign labor and more constant employment for our own. We want to bring the aggregate of our imports below the sum of our exports. We have sent abroad during the eleven months of the fiscal year up to May 31, $64,486,258 in gold, besides a shipment, probably, of twice that amount in the interest-bearing bonds of the Government, States, and corporations, in the settlement of trade balances.

I do not know of the exact shipments of gold for June, but from unofficial reports judge it will be as heavy as in May, when it reached the enormous amount of $10,608,712, or an aggregate of over seventy-five million dollars for the fiscal year ending June 30. The entire estimated annual production of the precious metals in the United States and Territories is thus swept away, while we are still adding to our foreign indebtedness at the rate of perhaps $200,000,000 per annum.

We are constantly talking of a return to specie payments; and there is scarcely a member of this House who has not presented a plan to accomplish that desired end, and yet the price of gold continues to advance, and rules higher now than three years ago.

The necessities of the country demand some practical legislation in the interests of our own people, and especially such legislation as will tend to check over importations, employ our own labor, and prepare the way to a safe return to specie values. In the absence of a thorough revision of the revenue laws looking to greater protection and the suppression of frauds on the Government, the passage of this simple and brief bill will do some good, and I trust there will be no opposition to it.

I now yield to my colleague, [Mr. CAKE.]

Mr. CAKE. Mr. Speaker, as a temporary measure the recommendation of the Committee on Manufactures in relation to the warehousing system is just and proper; but in the interest of the manufacturers and producers of this country the practice of finding free storage room for importations that may or may not remain in the country and pay the duty ought to be discontinued. Until this can be done, in addition to interest upon the unpaid duty, the foreign article should be made to pay the same warehouse charges that the American production encounters while awaiting transportation or a market.

As a partial measure of justice to the labor of this country the proposition should encounter no opposition; all the more promptly should this suggestion be acted upon because the tariff and the tax bills are probably to go over to December.

The importer, whether foreign or American, can complain of no injustice in this provision; for as American manufacturers cannot go into these national warehouses for free storage the system is a direct discrimination against them. A further and a more injurious discrimination against the American manufacturer is found in the fact that it requires more capital to carry the American than the foreign competing article. The foreign article is produced by the half-paid, or, if you please, the pauper labor of Europe. Our goods, costing the same in hours and days to produce, cost double, in most cases, in money, for the reason that our labor is comparatively well paid. On the Continent wages are much lower than in Great Britain. Hon. John W. Forney, in his "Letters from Europe," gives the figures running through all the trades. I make free use of the valuable information he furnishes. A carefully prepared newspaper article contrasts the wages paid in Belgium and New York:

"The present pay of mechanics in Belgium will be found compared with that of the New York artisans in the following table:

	Belgium.	New York.
Bakers.....	27@54 cents per day.	$2 00
Tailors.....	54@80 cents per day.	3 00
Masons.....	27@67 cents per day.	4 50
Bookbinders.....	54@80 cents per day.	2 50
Coppersmiths.....	$1 00 per day.	3 50
Coopers.....	40@67 cents per day.	4 50

"The difference in the cost of living in the two countries is not so great as is commonly represented. The luxuries of life are much higher here, but for actual necessities the prices are about the same."

In Germany farm laborers are paid thirty-two cents a day for men and sixteen cents for women during the harvest season. They work twelve hours, with one hour rest at midday. Their dress and food are of the coarsest description. Two pounds of black rye bread, one quarter of a pound of cheese, and half a pint of potato whisky, or its equivalent in wine or beer, form their diet. Three times a week they are allowed half a pound of meat. Mechanics receive from forty-eight to fifty-four cents per day. Meat costs from ten to fourteen cents a pound; flour, eleven cents a pound; and potatoes seventy cents for two hundred pounds. The price of labor has only risen two per cent. in ten years. The greatest burden, however, is the heavy taxes laid upon every class. These taxes fall heaviest upon the working classes and lightest upon the rich. Ministers, teachers, and Government officers pay nothing, and labor and industry bear the whole burden. In Prussia the laws are more equitable, but all persons are taxed at least three per cent. on their incomes, while a workman without property pays annually thirty-four cents or about one day's wages.

The condition of Irish laborers hardly needs description. Labor is a mere drug throughout Ireland, and is usually of the poorest kind. Wages are fearfully low—for men, on the average, one shilling a day; for women sixpence; and for children fourpence, or nothing. Skilled workmen receive less than ten shillings a week, about three dollars of our money. The houses, dress, and food of the majority are of the most wretched description.

By this is seen at a glance the difference in the cost of production, and how generous we are to the foreign manufacturer when we put up for him a fire-proof warehouse in which to store his goods produced at starvation wages, while we exclude our own manufactures from such benefits, although they are produced at rates of wages always at the highest point warranted by the market.

The difference in the cost of production is never made up by the tariff. The tariff is intended to, but rarely ever represents the full difference paid to mechanics and laborers in America and Europe. The whole cost of the American article is borne at once, while the foreign competitor is enabled to put his goods into competition at the mere foreign cost of production, the duty only being required to be paid at the moment of sale and removal from the bonded warehouse. The question involves the free discussion of the tariff and the tax bills.

Not only as a simple duty, but because it accords with my own conviction of right and justice to the laboring classes do I most earnestly protest against the postponement of the subject of protection as involved in that of the tariff. There is now no more important subject before the American people; and, whether my remarks be considered in season or out of season, I have no apology to offer for obtruding them upon the House at this time. My own position was taken upon this question at a very early period, and as I study it in all its bearings and inform myself more completely in regard to its importance, as my means and opportunities are from year to year enlarged, my early convictions are strengthened, and I am confirmed in the opinion that in no other way can Congress so well serve the mechanic and laborer and at the same time contribute so much to the wealth and greatness of our country as by vouchsafing complete protection to our skill, our land, and our labor.

The postponement of the tax bill, from which something of relief had been hoped, leaves the question in all its bearing to the future.

Sir, so full of anxiety am I upon this subject that I am willing to unite my political fortunes with any party honestly making the advocacy of American labor its leading principle. This is not said in any demagogical spirit. The business of my district depends so much upon what is done here, and upon the activity of the business of my district depends so much of my own comfort, that I may be open to the charge of pleading under the spur of private interest, though God knows I would willingly sacrifice myself if I could set this matter right for many suffering, breaking hearts at home.

The shifting policy of this Government upon the subject of the tariff produces all the fluctuations that disturb our domestic industries. A state of affairs that stimulates the production of our staples is followed by legislation tending to cripple our manufactures, and the vigorous arm of the mechanic and laborer is paralyzed. If the tariff of 1842 had been let alone this nation, instead of numbering less than forty would have numbered over fifty million of souls to day; and the district I represent, instead of less than two hundred thousand could have boasted over half a million. Its latent wealth is equal to the employment of over a million of men. In behalf of the thousands who are there now, and idle half the time, I propose to speak this day; and if what I have to say is to have no effect, my efforts shall not therefore be spared hereafter. But I shall continue to caution the friends of protection in Congress to work together, and to withhold their aid from other projects whose friends, favoring piecemeal legislation, are always ready to take a little off here and a little off there until we shall have our tariff cut and carved down to the destructive law of 1846, not the least objectionable feature of which was the warehousing system now under discussion.

Sir, I am not unmindful of the efforts of the advocates of labor here. When I study their speeches I am amazed that all are not convinced and that any difference of opinion should exist as to the true policy of the Government. My colleague, [Mr. KELLEY,] Representative of the fourth congressional district of Pennsylvania, and by virtue of the variety and value of his services here, representative and advocate of the whole Commonwealth, has on many occasions presented to the House the wants and claims of American labor and enterprise in a manner and with an effect that might well dispense with any service which I can hope to render to those interests. My other colleague, [Mr. MORRELL,] to whose courtesy I am indebted for the floor, has also found opportunities for giving us the results of an unusually large experience in departments of productive industry, which involve a practical acquaintance with the whole range of industries that interlock in that central one which he has long and successfully conducted. Nor have there ever been lacking other educated representatives of Pennsylvania; gentlemen qualified both by study and practice in all the varieties of business interests which give to the State a representative character among the sister States of the Union, who, each in his own speciality, and all together, might well be trusted to fill up the circle of representative duty here and suffer no incompleteness by the lack of any contribution from me. Indeed, I would gladly escape the unequal trial of this general service, but there are reasons why my mite should be thrown in with their abundance—considerations which constrain me and amply justify my attempt to reinforce them, even by pressing to the front, though I may not claim equal rank among my peers in the performance of a duty charged alike by our respective constituencies upon us all.

The attention of Congress has been so long and so closely held to the consideration of questions either purely political or so remotely connected with the economic exigencies of the times that it will require some effort to secure the tone of mind and direction of thought demanded by the subjects involved in the great labor question pressing upon us now for a wise and happy solution.

We have a tariff of import duties to arrange in conformity with the sound principles and policy of international trade, the details of which, difficult enough in themselves, are besides greatly complicated by a necessary adjustment to the onerous system of internal duties which our national debt and current expenditure imposes upon our productive industry. In no circumstances, indeed, can a sound system of foreign trade be established without regard to domestic industry, for the prosperity of a country, even if entirely free from national debt, and the resulting burdens upon its industries, needs some protection, some guardianship, some general policy; aye, some favoring and fostering care; for, if every mechanic and every merchant must consider his business relations and rivalries, or the demand and supply of his neighborhood, much more must a nation shape its industrial policy to the state and requirements of its home demand and supplies, and to the foreign interferences with its own capabilities and opportunities.

It is conceded that labor is the primary source of all wealth; wealth being nothing else in its broadest and deepest meaning than "the measure of man's power over nature; power over nature, for man finds the earth and all its agencies in resistance to his dominion, and hence the significance of the original command given to the representative of the race, "to subdue the earth." This is the mission and commission appointed and enjoined; and labor, in its widest meaning, labor of muscle and mind, labor natural and artificial, the work of human hands, and the help of natural forces subdued to human service; labor of every kind which man commands is the agent by which the dominion of the earth is achieved, and this dominion is wealth. The wealth, or, in other words, the welfare of a nation, arising thus out of its labor, that labor must be the primary and principal care of human societies if they would not abandon their fortunes to chance or to the control of adverse interests and warring policies; and if there be any such opposition of interests among nations as exists everywhere among individuals, Governments, like private men, must consider and provide against them. Out of this dependence upon the prosperity of labor and its national competitions arise the necessity and the justification of defense, protection, and earnest guardianship. Household lock their doors against intruders, and if they admit a stranger to the business of their domestic concerns it is under the restraint of their own authority. Farmers build fences to protect their fields from stray cattle, and Governments construct forts and navies for the defense of their territories against invasion, and all men record their title papers for the security of their rights of property. Thus defensive means and measures are so far from being uncommon or unwarrantable that they are universal in the concerns of individual life; and that aggregate of individuals which we call a nation has a clear authority for taking a like care of its general interests; and this all the stronger that the interests of the individual are all at risk in those of the community.

But let me not tire you with the generalities of the principle on which the policy of protection to home industry safely rests. The argument is usually carried into specialities, and these are both complex and numerous. Principles are much modified in their operation by circumstances and contingencies, and for practical uses they must be met where they eventuate in facts and effects. Indeed, I would rather carry the discussion into details, into history and experience, than rest it where our antagonists usually confine it, in logical and abstract propositions, however sound I hold it to be in philosophy as well as in practice.

Let us for a moment look at the doctrine of protection in the aspect usually presented by the enemy. Experience is against them, if the experience of all prosperous nations be admitted to be sound and true. The facts which confront them are that no nation which to-day holds a high and respectable rank in wealth and power on the earth has, during its stage of growth, followed the policy of free trade either in form or effect. European, especially British, literature and speculative philosophy are loaded down to the water's edge with argumentation against the doctrine of protection; but the policy of the British islands had no such freight aboard while they rode the tide of successful experiment. I need not enter into the proof of this assertion, for no one disputes it. But the utility as well as the principles of protection are denied by those who would confute its theory. English free-traders have the boldness to say now that the maritime supremacy of Great Britain was achieved not by aid of her navigation laws, but in spite of them; and that England made herself "the workshop of the world" in like manner, in spite of the protection of domestic industry, which she maintained for five centuries, from the time when Flanders was Europe's workshop and England was selling her raw materials and buying back the skilled labor of the Continent until the time when she became an importer of raw materials and a vender of the labor and skill and of the power and products of natural forces to all the world. Now, somehow English manufactures did grow to overtopping proportions under her system of protection, prohibition, and bounties, not only absolutely, but relatively, to the early supremacy of India and the southwestern half of Europe. And the only ground for affirming that the policy under which this wonderful success was secured was not the cause and the means is simply that it was—no, that it is—unphilosophical; a conclusion that would be just as valid if one were to affirm that the adhesive inflammation which accompanies the restoration of a broken bone is unhealthy, and the splints and bandages only so much impediment and incumbrance, because they are not necessary in the sound condition of a limb. But free-traders are not only poetical in respect to principles; they are habitually and utterly untrue as to facts.

They point to the abridged schedules and the diminished rates of duty of the British tariff, as a demonstration of their theory. They say in so many words that the English system is now what they are pleased to call free trade. Our answer is that it is not now and never has been free trade in principle or purpose, in any sense opposed to protection, rightly understood.

Protection is only and simply defense. The Esquimaux need no defense for their production of walrus beef, their reindeer or seal-skin trade. New York needs no defense for its daily newspapers, nor Massachusetts for its ice. Neither the principle of free trade nor of protection touches these commodities in these circumstances. Nor do they any more apply to any product of skill in England of which she has the natural or acquired monopoly in her home market. Free trade as opposed to protection—that is, free trade as a distinctive economical principle—never had an inch of foothold in England, nor, though constantly so claimed, has it kept company with liberalism and progressiveness in the reforms of the last quarter of a century. Free trade has nothing in its spirit or aims which entitle it to fellowship with the movement in modern societies looking to and laboring for the amelioration of human conditions. The landed aristocracy of England resisted the repeal of the corn laws, indeed; and in this case English conservatism was arrayed against the form which free trade took there; but in our own country the planting interest, the slave-holding feudalists of this nineteenth century and of this progressive Republic were not protectionists, but out and out free-traders. This opposition of the conservatism in the United States and in Great Britain means something else than the assumed natural sympathy of free trade for progressiveness.

I have said that free trade, as an economic principle, has never existed in England. I go further, and say that free trade has never taken the shape and action of a principle anywhere, that an advocate dare quote its results, or supposed results, in the experience of the nation adopting it. Something of it exists as a sentiment in portions of our agricultural population where manufactures have as yet scarcely taken existence, and even there it is an opinion imported from that region of this country and from that foreign nation with which it is a mere matter of policy. Among us it has one way or other worked itself into some consideration through the agency of debating societies, off-hand editorials, and foreign treatises on political economy got up in the infected districts. The Democratic party, too, not sincerely nor advisedly, but through its unnatural alliance with the slave party of the South for twenty years before the rebellion, leaned away from the leadings of Jefferson, Madison, and Jackson toward this heresy along with its other apostasies, which together have plunged it into ruin. The building of a furnace, mill, or factory in a purely agricultural community, where the free-trade sentiment had obtained a foothold, by enhancing the value of property in the locality, stimulating the agricultural as well as all other pursuits, creating a market for the surplus labor, and by raising the value of that labor, speedily explodes the doctrine, and adds to the ranks sturdy advocates of protection.

I know that England is constantly, and it may be in many cases innocently, quoted as showing a great revolution in doctrine and practice in this matter. She is quoted as an instance of the triumph of the doctrine and of the benefit of its practical adoption. But her policy has not to this day entitled itself to the use or application of the term. It may be loosely taken to describe her present practice in reference to her foreign trade so far, but so far only, as that practice really extends; but this policy in no degree discloses the spirit or aim of her commercial system, even to the extent of its seeming application. It is not free trade that she wants, but cheap raw material and cheap provisions. Until within the last five and twenty years her system stood firmly upon protection, effected through fines, penalties, prohibitions, and import duties, high enough always to secure for her the monopoly of her home market and those of all her colonial dependencies.

This system of protection embraced food as well as fabrics, and until the towns mastered the country and the millocracy overtopped the landed aristocracy, the concession had to be made by the manufacturers and traders to the land owners. The revolution in policy, when it was effected, was really made to secure free, that is cheap, raw material, of which food is greatly more important than even any or all the substances which she works into her manufactures.

The articles which may be called food and drink imported into the United Kingdom in 1864, amounted to four hundred and thirty-nine million dollars, being thirty-three per cent. of the total value of all the British imports of that year. But when the exports of foreign goods are subtracted the food retained rises to thirty-six and a half per cent. of all commodities imported and consumed.

To show how far British free trade aims at cheap raw material for consumption and reproduction we have the striking fact that of her total imports in 1864, which amounted to two hundred and seventy-five millions pounds sterling, the manufactures amounted to no more than seventeen million pounds, or but six and three quarter per cent. of the total foreign imports.

The edifice of her industrial prosperity having been built up under protection to a height that overtopped all the nations which at first surpassed her in her own and in foreign markets, her supremacy (which certainly was attained long before she relaxed a hair-breadth of her protective system of duties) secured, and all its powers exhausted in its complete victory, the next advance step to be taken in order to preserve and extend her dominion in foreign trade was to obtain food and raw material at the cheapest possible rates that wages might be low as well as the price of the foreign materials to be employed.

This aim and object, this endeavor, pushed to its utmost capability, with no other intent than the maintenance of her enormous foreign trade against the rivalry of the Continent, which has been long her terror as well as her danger, is glozed over with the fancy name of a principle which she and her disciples elsewhere so fondly call free trade, in order that her prosperity, falsely credited to it, may be used to break down the barriers of self-defense against her commercial encroachments upon the welfare of the nations whom she seeks to reduce to, and hold in, industrial vassalage.

That this is the spirit of her so-called free-trade policy is made further evident by her constant and ever-growing policy of shifting taxation from consumption to accumulation, or the clear savings of production. This is the true secret of a continuous resort to the income tax to cover deficits of revenue, and especially to meet all extraordinary demands upon the national exchequer.

Whoever looks along the progressive reductions and remissions of impost and excise duties which mark the history of English legislation, especially since the free-trade era and corn-law repeal of 1846, will find that the burden of these reductions was invariably shifted upon the income tax when that would answer, and upon it and spirits and malt when the demand was unusually large. Sir Stafford Northcote, now a member of the Cabinet, in his work on the "Financial Policy of England," says, expressly, concerning the imposition of this tax in the year 1845, that "the Parliament deliberately adopted it, and that at the time when the tax was not proposed as a measure of urgency, as in 1798, or even in 1842, but it was calmly weighed in the balance against cheap sugar, cheap glass, cheap cotton, and the rest, and found to be a price worth paying for these countervailing benefits." This tax, always odious, and rightly described by Lord John Russell as "a tax in which inequality, vexation and fraud are inherent," and always proposed by the Government as a temporary measure, to tide the exchequer over the shallows of revenue, is nevertheless persistently maintained. Not only to meet such exigencies as the Irish famine year, the Crimean war, and revolts in India, but even when so small an item as the expense of the Abyssinian expedition somewhat increased the national expenditure we find the Minister of Finance proposing to add to the present levy twopence in the pound, rather than put three millions unprovided for upon any other objects of taxation, for upon any of these it would ultimately, if not directly, burden consumption, enhance wages, and increase the cost of production, all of which is forbidden by the necessity of providing cheap living for labor, and cheap materials and wages for manufacturing. This policy of putting all extraordinary and much of the ordinary expenses of Government upon the income tax for the purpose of exonerating the productive industry of the realm has every whit as good a claim to be called a free-trade principle as the successive reductions and remissions of impost charges have in the practice of England. Not only has the income tax been permanently maintained since 1842, but it has been made to yield an average of about forty million dollars per year, since 1846, or much more than the average annual amount of all the duties upon foreign goods remitted since the cheap labor and cheap raw material movement was introduced into English policy. To the same end and with the same purpose the duties upon legacies and successions are charged upon continually higher and higher, that manufacturers might be still further and further relieved as continental rivalry pressed harder and harder upon England's foreign trade.

Here we see, and it seems to me worth the trouble of looking after, that that system of protection which by the imposition of import duties had been fairly strained to its last stretch of efficacy, and to the last moment and limit of its need, was repealed by statute only after it had been virtually repealed by its own complete success. And then that other form of protection, which consists in shifting taxation from industry to accumulated wealth, was substituted as necessary to the struggle with the cheap commodities of rival nations for the monopoly of the labor market of all such semi-barbarous nations as can be induced, first to accept a false theory of industry and trade, and afterward the goods manufactured for their defenseless markets.

But I go further, and assert here, not only that England has never adopted free trade as a principle, but she has to this day never abandoned protection, even in form, much less in fact. The free lists in her tariff schedules cover not an item or an article that in the slightest degree can compete with her domestic productions: articles of food and raw materials for her manufactures, so far as England produces any of these, excepted, the motives for which exceptions we have already shown, and shown, too, that they are so far from the principle of free trade that they are in essence and object protective of the manufacturing supremacy and foreign trade monopoly of the United Kingdom.

England now, and during the whole period since the formal installation of her pretended free trade in the statutes of the realm, has collected an average of twenty-two million pounds from customs. The estimate of the Chancellor of the Exchequer puts this item at one hundred and ten and a half million dollars for the coming year. I admit that this charge is in the main a tax upon consumption or an excise duty collected at the custom-house, and not protective in effect. About six of these twenty-two million customs duties, however, are raised from manufactures levied as protective duties. But the amount collected from foreign imports which directly or indirectly compete with British protection is by no means the measure of the positive protection afforded to domestic industry. To the extent that duty rates prohibit or abridge importation they operate effectively. Indeed, it is in this way that they are most effective, and the only unequivocal operation which they ever have, for a more increase of price upon imports charged with duties, when it does not diminish or prevent their introduction, may fail more or less to afford encouragement to home labor and capital. The duty often does fall wholly upon the foreign producer in diminution of his profits without hindering him entirely from entering the market for domestic labor. The value or force of protective or defensive duties leveled at though they fail to be levied upon imports is the true measure of their protective power.

Taking the average production of the manufactures of tobacco, sugar, and spirits in the United Kingdom, and the difference between the customs charged against such goods and of the excise duties charged upon the home-made articles, we find that the aggregate of these surcharges upon the foreign commodity amounts to ten million pounds sterling in round numbers; and if we add to these the duties made to stand guard over the home market against foreign beer, paper, cards, dice, vinegar, plate, hats, books, mill-boards, embroidery, musical instruments, linens, and a number of other articles which compete with similar articles of British manufacture, it is safe to say that the British Government, while it actually collects something over six millions sterling upon foreign manufactures, and manages besides to defend her home productions in her home markets by a scale of customs duties which prevent or diminish foreign importation by the threatened imposition, or, the barrier of preventive charges equivalent in protective force to more than twenty millions sterling, or one hundred million dollars per annum.

Is this free trade?

The pretense is an imposture.

The demonstration that protection, formal and actual, is thus maintained by the model free-trade nation under many disguises of names and methods of exaction with which I have ventured to detain the House, might seem, after being plainly produced, unnecessary. Unnecessary simply because it is obvious upon a moment's reflection that free trade, in the meaning claimed for her system, is in itself simply impossible. How in the name of common sense can it be supposed that any people whose dependence is so largely as that of Great Britain upon the full employment of her capital and labor could possibly give up to a phantom of theory the very substance of their industrial existence, to allow their labor and capital to be displaced at home, and all the work and profit of their necessary supplies to be transferred to any and every people who from local and special advantages should be able to underwork and undersell them? Can it be supposed that with a debt of four thousand million dollars resting upon the nation, and the necessity for ordinary expenditure of three hundred and fifty million dollars per annum, to say nothing of the extraordinary, which, if not as constant are quite as certain to occur, Great Britain could possibly allow France and Germany to seize her home markets and close her workshops? The defense to which they are compelled to resort is prettily phrased or styled countervailing duties. Countervailing; what does that mean? Usually it is applied to the duty imposed upon such articles as spirits, manufactured sugar, manufactured tobacco, malt liquor, and such other articles as are selected to bear the great burden of the domestic excise. The home market for these articles thus relied upon for the greater part of the necessary revenue must be guarded against the like articles of foreign countries by countervailing duties; that is, the competing imports must be charged up to the mark of excluding them altogether, reducing them to comparative insignificance, or, at the least, throwing the whole weight of such duties upon the foreign producer. And what does this mean when pushed to its central idea? Why only this, that England can bear anything in the way of prices of commodities better than she can bear turning her labor idle or reducing its amount and at the same time striking her active capital and her foreign commerce with the resulting paralysis.

Countervailing simply means "opposing with equal strength, balancing, obviating in effect." If import duties on this ground have the highest free-trade authority for their application where inland taxes raise prices upon the domestic producers of commodities, may they not also, and upon the very same ground, be applied where wages, or capital, or both are higher than among rival foreign producers?

The intention and the necessity are exactly the same; that is, the reserving and securing to home labor and capital its opportunity of productive and profitable employment. Whoever says "no" to this proposition says that labor must everywhere be leveled to the lowest remuneration that is given to it anywhere; that it must be driven in the New World by the bog-gary of the Old World to the low scale of wages which drives the millions of toilers of that Old World from their homes forever; or else it means that they shall be excluded from those departments of production which call into play all their higher powers, and exclude them from all those kinds of labor which an advanced civilization offers to the working-men of modern times.

I have occupied the attention of the House with this theme so long and so earnestly for the purpose of overthrowing the force of the pattern, the model free-trade nation, and for the reason that it is so often and so confidently pressed upon us as an authority in theory and a demonstration in practice, and for the further reason that if the claims, pretenses, and example of Great Britain are fairly silenced we have not another instance in the world's history to meet. I mean another instance where any apparent prosperity has attended an approach to free trade in foreign commerce.

Turkey bound herself by treaty with England to free trade three hundred years ago, when she feared no rivalry either in her own or in foreign commerce. A hundred and sixty years ago Portugal opened her ports and markets to the invasion of British products, under the temptation of a difference of duty in favor of her wines as against France; and India, now something more than fifty years subject to Great Britain, has had free trade forced upon her. And where do these people stand in the scale of nations now, and what is the state of their domestic affairs? Before their own folly or foreign force stripped them of self-protection they ranked as either first-rate Powers in Europe, or what is better, as self-supporting, independent, and prosperous. Now they are the wretched relics of decayed nationalities, having fallen under the disabilities of defenseless industry, blighted and blasted, and have become nuisances upon the face of the earth.

But, on the other hand, what peoples do we see rising into the front rank of European powers? Those, and those only, who have steadily, persistently, and wisely pursued the policy of fostering that home labor which is the only source of assured wealth. North Germany, Russia, and France are Europe to-day. Austria, that never entered the Zollverein or customs union of Germany, was defeated utterly and hopelessly in a campaign of a fortnight by her neighbor nations, who since 1825 have been doing their own work, just as our own southern States were conquered by the wealth and vigor of the trained industrials of the North.

Yes, sir, it is the treasure-chest quite as much as the camp that in these times expresses the force of embattled armies, and determines the result; determines it in favor of the muscles and mind educated together in the pursuits of a prosperous industry, whatever be the spirit or enthusiasm which it meets on the battle-field.

The argument for protection found in the example of England gains greatly increased force in its application to the condition and the necessities of the United States. The situation of the two countries at corresponding stages of their respective careers have such resemblance as fully warrants us in taking the economical history of the British islands, with its results for our example, and in so far as it has been successful for our guide under similar circumstances. The people of this country, in the main, are of the same race or races, and are of like generic type, for we mingle in our diversified nationalities only a larger portion of the best blood that has mixed its stray currents in theirs. No naturalist would pretend that in mental and physical constitution, or in capabilities for the highest destiny, we are in any wise their inferior. They may claim an earlier descent from the best races of continental Europe, but we have these in their most recent and highest state of advancement, and our history since our severance from the mother country, by every test that tries the quality of men, proves at least such equality with them as logically includes us under the same law, and points us to a substantially similar directory for the conduct of our national interests.

The period of England's history which bears the closest analogy to our own present condition may be taken at the year 1816, when she had just emerged from a long war, which left her with a depreciated currency, a burden of debt, believed then to be more than she could bear, and an annual expenditure that taxed and strained all her productive energies to their utmost. Her estimated wealth then was but a little more than the half of ours. The proportion of their national debt to the property of the realm was full forty per cent., while its annual interest was about one hundred and sixty millions, or fully ten per cent. of the annual product of the United Kingdom.

How stands her wealth now? The best authorities put it at above thirty-six thousand millions, and her present national debt, at first near twice the amount of ours, and still but little reduced, has fallen in relative burden from forty to less than twelve per cent., and its interest from ten to three and a half per cent. of the annual product of the capital and industry of the country.

Now, the burden of our debt, State, national, and municipal, is, perhaps, more than three thousand millions, or equal to three fourths of that of Great Britain in 1816, and its interest is a charge relatively as heavy upon our annual products, though, perhaps, but little more than five per cent. We are struggling as she struggled after her great trial under a burden equally great upon our present means. For while the current demand is not less, our greater capital wealth lies largely in estimation, in possibility, depending for its availability upon the enterprise and industry that shall evoke its answering product.

There may or may not be a considerable difference in the figures which express the stock and the liabilities of the two countries at the dates compared; but there is a substantial likeness in our condition now and theirs then. Her territory is measured in square miles, ours in degrees of latitude and longitude. The map of our domain would cover her nearly twenty-five times over. Our mines of the precious and useful metals are practically unlimited, and we have every variety of the climates found in the temperate zone, with an equal diversity and richness of fertility and spontaneous products of the soil. Of these things we boast, which is well; but on these things, also, we are accustomed to count when we are brought to face the demands which they must meet. But what are they worth as a reliance, and what are the conditions of their availability? Not one of all these immense potentialities will adequately answer our need unless wisely managed and administered. A nation cannot live upon its capital. Its capital is only the base of its resources, but its actual support comes only from its constant productiveness. An idler may live upon his fortune as long as others are working for him and it, and no longer; a nation of idlers cannot sell its real estate, and must starve as soon as its money and surplus movables are exhausted. More immediately and directly than any individual does an entire community depend upon its every-day industry; and to secure, encourage, protect, and foster the work that yields current support and wealth is therefore the first and chief business of its Legislature.

But to our parallel: did England, circumstanced so nearly as we are now, after her war upon the Continent, lasting a quarter of a century, and with the United States during full three years of the same period, abandon the industries of her people to an open competition under the doctrine of free trade? I need not answer this question to any one having but the most ordinary acquaintance with the history of her commercial policy; but it is worth while to note the extent of the protection given to her manufacturers, to her metals, coal, wool, flax, and to the labor and capital employed in their conversion. The scale is fairly indicated by the rates charged upon foreign imports generally under her tariff act of 1819. Foreign woollens were charged fifty per cent. of their value; cottons fifty to sixty-seven per cent.; glass an average of eighty per cent.; and iron six pounds ten shillings or thirty-one dollars and fifty-two cents per ton; and the cottons of the East Indies, where labor and the raw material were at extremely low rates, were prohibited. These are samples of rates which in the main are far higher than any ever levied by our Government under tariffs that the enemy abroad and at home denounce as monstrous; nor were these rates ever abated or this protection ever relaxed until they had raised the whole range of industries up to a strength which defied all competition in her own and in the markets of the world. Is there anything doubtful in this history, or anything unwarranted in claiming it as a guiding experience for our own conduct in difficulties as great and toward an issue equally fortunate, especially as England herself, in all her strength or means, and all her acknowledged supremacy of art, is now full armed in the field against us; a competition far stronger than any that she herself ever encountered in the days of her great trials?

It will be perceived that I have confined myself to a simple, straightforward line of argument, and adhered closely to practical considerations, to a thoroughly verified and fully justified experience, running through a period long enough to meet all sorts of contingencies, and sustained by a people every way competent to give a system of policy its fullest and fairest trial. Have I not gone safely by the clear light of an analogy that makes the general question as plain as though the pattern policy selected had been a parable made on purpose to reflect all the features, facts, and results of the principles for which I have been arguing? And are we not, having reached this standpoint, authorized to turn upon the propagandists of free trade in Great Britain and their echoes at home, and say we accept the authority of your example, and refuse to adopt the theory which you have manufactured to deprive us of its advantages? Let me add to these generalities that the assumed prevalence of the free-trade theory, and its growth among the nations, is simply untrue in point of fact. The commercial treaties made by England with several of the continental Governments, beginning with France in 1860, all stipulate that the duties charged upon British goods shall not exceed, but may reach, thirty per cent. in some cases, in others twenty-five per cent. ad valorem, and that the rates shall all be converted into specific levies whenever the subjects are capable of assessment by number, weight, or measure. Thirty per cent., or twenty-five, or twenty, is surely sufficiently defensive for these manufactures and products of France and Germany, where food, raw material, and capital are at least as cheap, and wages generally even lower, of which we have the proof in the fact that France has now a market in England for locomotives, and Germany has taken contracts for the supply of railroad iron to Russia at rates which undersell England herself. These continental countries, all of them, have so long protected their domestic industries that they are able now to meet the old-time work-shop of the world in foreign markets, and ask no odds in the strife for their own.

The propagandists of the free-trade theory are constantly proclaiming the progress of their pet policy as witnessed by these commercial treaties, of which the Anglo-French of 1860 is the type. My answer to this boast is—and I am prepared to sustain it—that the tariff rates fixed by the convention between England and France are as high in figures, and greatly more effectual in operation, than our own tariff of 1861, commonly called the "Morrill tariff."

For the present I content myself with the assertion that the boast of progress made by free trade in modern opinion and action is simply a false pretense, of which I might cite the further evidence that the colonies of mother England, wherever they enjoy the right of governing their own industrial interests, are all in open revolt against the policy which she is endeavoring to impose upon them. The case is put plumply by the Westminster Review for April, 1868, in which the writer, after inveighing, in the true British spirit, against universal suffrage and Government affairs controlled by the people for their immediate interest, says that "the colony of Victoria, the most liberal and the most important in Australia, in pursuit of the popular fallacy that it is possible to turn taxation into a source of national wealth, or, at least, into a means of creating local manufactures; that is, of raising wages, the government of Victoria, representing the democratic majority, has, during the last two years, revolutionized its whole fiscal scheme in favor of a protective system, putting on new taxes, not for revenue, but for protection to native industry." Again, the reviewer says:

"Protection was taken to mean increased employment and higher wages; and protection thenceforth became, and still is, the cardinal article of the Australian democratic creed."

This is not so much a concession as a charge by the indignant critic, but it is the best sort of proof of the fact, and all the more reliable that it is extorted evidence from an unwilling witness. He ascribes the detested triumph of protection there, in plain words, to that "habit of governing by means of a democratic majority, which is very damaging to political virtue."

Agreeing entirely with this high free-trade authority as to the facts of the case, and happy that he confesses and exposes the grounds of his disgust, I merely cite him as the briefest and clearest authority against the brag of his party, "that liberalism, progress, and popular or democratic government tend toward free trade in international commerce." I am entirely safe in saying that this pretense, by whomsoever made, is either a mistake or a falsehood; and, in either case, equally untrue and the very reverse of the truth.

But protection is exposed to assaults that take the form of practical objections to its operation upon the interests of the Government, and of certain classes of the people adopting it. As against the general interests of the community, I trust that I have shown it not true. The foreign commerce and the maritime interests of Great Britain grew under a protective system of unequalled strictness into the supremacy in the markets of the world and to the domination of the seas. Nor is it true, either, that the alleged restriction of trade diminishes revenue from foreign imports. In our own experience we have the proof that high, very high, duties do not diminish either foreign trade or revenue to the Treasury.

In the year 1857, the largest amount of duty-paying goods ever till then imported, under whatever tariff, rose to the value of two hundred and eighty-three and a half millions, under an average rate of twenty-two and four tenths per cent.; while in 1867 the dutiable imports rose to the value of three hundred and seventy-two and three-quarter millions, under the average tariff rates of forty-seven and one third per cent. Here we have nearly one third more goods imported under a more than doubled average duty, and one hundred and seventy-six and one half millions of revenue derived, against forty-nine and a half millions, or an almost fourfold yield to the Treasury.

It may be noticed here that when the tariff of 1867 reduced the average rate upon dutiable imports to nineteen and a half per cent., the largest imports of dutiable goods, at these rates, which happened in 1860, amounted to only two hundred and sixty-eight millions. This was the year of our largest exports of breadstuffs, provisions, cotton, and other staples. Every possible circumstance was favorable to the trade of the year, yet it yielded one hundred and twenty-eight and eight tenths millions less to the Treasury, and brought one hundred and five millions less of foreign goods to our shores than was afforded by the forty-seven and one third per cent. tariff in operation in the fiscal year 1867.

I am dealing with facts, and I cannot so well in any other manner contradict or refute the specious doctrines of free-traders; such, for instance, as that which affirms that the lower the tariff rates the larger both the importation and the resulting revenue. A notion derived from the idea that protection means prohibition, or at least diminution of imports, to the extent of its degree, which is not true. Protection means nothing of the kind. It does not diminish foreign trade, but it selects it, and at the same time increases it by enabling the country to purchase the more in proportion to the freedom and security given to domestic industry. Why, Mr. Speaker, there is no country under the sun so well protected against rival industries as England. Her supremacy in production bars out all the manufacturers of the world, except about six per cent. of her total imports, and those imports have risen under this security from seven hundred and thirty-nine million dollars in value in 1854, to one thousand three hundred and fifteen millions in 1865, thus increasing seventy-eight per cent. in ten years; and this for the reason that her exports came still nearer to doubling in the same time. Nor has her customs revenue fallen off. It amounted to twenty-two million pounds in 1846, and yielded twenty-two and a half million in 1865, having been as high as twenty-four millions in 1863.

So much for the answer of history and fact to the plausible notion that lower duties increase imports and revenue, which might be true if the ability to buy foreign goods, was not affected by paralysis of domestic industry; but it is seen to be false when we look to the prosperity produced by full work, large wages, and activity of capital, all secured by protection of each, and all alike.

There is also another fallacy of the let-alone school of economists, specious enough on the surface, but hollow at the core. It is the assumption that the price of all imported commodities to the consumer must be increased by the amount of duty imposed upon them. But is the producer's selling price such a fixed and constant quantity that it can be taken for the basis of such a calculation? Let us see. The export price of English merchant bar iron in Liverpool was at five pounds ten shillings in August, 1832, and at ten pounds ten shillings in January, 1836, and it hovered about the latter rate until 1840. The former price of five pounds ten shillings concurred with the operation of our tariff of 1828, and the increased price ruled during the reign of our compromise act. In April, 1843, our tariff of 1842 being in force, English merchant bar iron fell to five pounds. The tariff of 1842 being repealed it went up to nine pounds ten shillings in January, 1847.

These instances are enough for illustration. Now, who paid the duty on any such iron imported into the United States when our tariff rates were at the highest? The consumer? Manifestly no. The producer, capitalist, laborer, and trader, suffered it in abatement of their profits; sometimes even to the loss of all profits, and something of capital invested besides. Home production encouraged has the natural effect of holding the prices of foreign commodities in check, even when some considerable enhancement of prices is the result. One thing is certain, that the foreign article never can go above the living price at which the domestic article can be afforded, for competition among home producers will fix the maximum for the market, and hold it there, or prevent it from fluctuation, to the injury of the consumer.

A country absolutely subjected to foreigners for their supplies in every article must allow the vendor to fix his own price upon it, and if it has but one such market for purchasing it must also be shut up to that market for the sale of the commodities with which it purchases, and the foreigner thus fixes the price of the exports as well as of the imports. This is the bondage of trade. A slave, sir, is one who can deal with but one man. A country which must deal only in one market is as much enslaved.

I have no doubt that an American consumer of tea or tropical spices must pay the whole duty imposed upon these articles at the custom-house, unless by a general abstinence the price is forced down upon the producer, and so a part or the whole of the charge be taken out of his profits. But who pays the duty when competition is open and a choice is free? How much must either party pay of such duty under the varying circumstances of the case? Alexander Hamilton, in the Federalist, touches this subject incidentally, not exhaustively, as was his usage whenever engaged upon any point of economic doctrine as the main topic of discussion. He says:

"When the demand is equal to the quantity of goods at market, the consumer generally pays the duty; but when the markets happen to be overstocked a great proportion falls upon the merchant, and sometimes not only exhausts his profits, but breaks in upon his capital. I am apt to think, [he concludes] that a division of the duty between the seller and the buyer more often happens, than is commonly imagined, for it is not always possible to raise the price of a commodity in exact proportion to every additional imposition laid upon it."

These considerations are enough to dispose of the bold assumption that all taxes and duties are necessarily and certainly so much additional charge upon the consumer of commodities. Prices are determined by supply and demand; and it is plain, therefore, that domestic competition must have the effect of regulating the cost of foreign products when they are obliged to meet the rivalry of domestic goods in the markets which they invade. If there were no other reason of policy for maintaining such a check upon the foreign domination of our home markets, this would be a sufficient one. But dependence for supplies from abroad, for anything that can be produced at home, even as a mere matter of mercantile policy, is liable to the objection that they are thus surrendered to the government of causes, accidents, caprices, and interests, over which we have no control. In the war of 1812, blankets previously costing but six dollars per pair went up to twenty, and opium rose to one hundred and sixty dollars per pound, and common pins, of which we made none at the time, became absolutely unattainable. It is even worse when arms and ammunition are to be had only from the nation with which we happen to be at war. But I need not press this point so well put by General Jackson in his letter to Dr. Coleman, written during the pendency of legislation which resulted in the highly protective tariff act of 1824 and its amendment in 1828. But the opponent returns to the charge after all his sophistries of theory are exploded with such objections as this: the protective duty must somehow increase the price of the commodity, else why impose it? I answer, it certainly increases the underselling price resorted to for the purpose of breaking up the domestic production, with the opportunity reserved of increasing it to more than indemnifying rates when dominion of the market is obtained, as we have seen always occurred in the matter of English iron.

Mr. Madison, in his letter to Judge Cabell, October 30, 1828, puts this point thus:

"Should it happen, as has been suspected to be an object, though not of a foreign Government itself, of its great manufacturing capitalists, to strangle in the cradle the infant manufactures of an extensive customer or an anticipated rival, it would surely, in such a case, be incumbent on the suffering party so far to make an exception to the let-alone policy as to parry the evil by appropriate regulations of its foreign commerce."

Mr. Madison, forty years ago, spoke of the possibility of foreign combinations to break down American industries, threatening to displace the home market with them; but the report of a parliamentary commission appointed to consider the pressing evil of strikes among British workmen, makes Mr. Madison's hypothesis a matter of history. I ask attention to a somewhat lengthy extract for the reason that it covers the ground of an argument which I would be but too happy if I could sufficiently impress upon the people of this country who are so largely concerned and yet so little impressed by its facts and force. This parliamentary committee says:

"The laboring classes (of England) generally, in the manufacturing districts of this country, and especially in the iron and coal districts, are very little aware of the extent to which they are often indebted for their being employed at all, to the immense losses which their employers voluntarily incur in bad times in order to destroy foreign competition, and to gain and keep possession of foreign markets. Authentic instances are well known of employers having in such times carried on their works at a loss amounting in the aggregate to three or four hundred thousand pounds in the course of three or four years. If the efforts of those who encourage the combinations to restrict the amount of labor, and to produce strikes were to be successful for any length of time, the great accumulation of capital could no longer be made which enable a few of the most wealthy capitalists to overwhelm all foreign competition in times of great depression, and thus to clear the way for the whole trade to step in when prices revive, and to carry on a great business before foreign capital can again accumulate to such an extent as to be able to establish a competition in prices with any chance of success. The large capitals of this country are the great instruments of warfare against the competing capital of foreign countries, and are the most essential instruments now remaining by which our manufacturing supremacy can be maintained; the other elements—cheap labor, abundance of raw material, means of communication, and skilled labor, being rapidly in process of being equalized."

This murderous policy Mr. Madison thought possible as a means of holding an extensive customer in commercial and industrial bondage. That phrase very truly describes the mercantile relation of the United States to Great Britain. Taking the year 1860 for an example, I find that the British exports to us that year, according to their own reports, stood at twenty-one million six hundred sixty-seven thousand and sixty-five pounds, while to all the world besides, other than her own provinces, the total of her exports were but seventy million five hundred and fifty-three thousand three hundred and twenty-seven pounds. Thus we are a fair one quarter of the world to her; an extensive customer, indeed, and well worth holding at any cost, by losses, bribery, or sophistry, or all together, as may be required.

But the real sacrifices of this cut-throat competition are next to nothing, for whenever by a wise policy we have enlarged our home products toward a self-supplying point a glut happens in the English market in lack of so large a customer, and then it is no matter at what price the surplus is thrown upon our market, for the balance left is worth as much as the whole, including the excess, and the sacrifice of price, which at any rate must be borne, is amply repaid by the effectual breaking down of what the parliamentary committee called "the competing capital of foreign countries." A single instance will suffice: English common bar iron is quoted at New York during 1845, 1846, 1847, 1848, at an average of seventy-five dollars per ton. In 1849 three hundred and eighteen thousand eight hundred and seventy-five tons of English iron were thrown upon our markets at less than the cost of production, and the New York price fell from the average of seventy-five dollars in the preceding four years to forty-one dollars and twenty-five cents in July and to thirty-three dollars in September, 1851. Here was a glut let loose upon us, as the prices indicate, with the unflinching result, that so soon as its work was done the indemnifying process was begun, and accordingly we find British bar in New York as early as November, 1853, at sixty-six dollars and twenty-five cents, and in November, 1854, at seventy-one dollars and seventy-five cents. In all these cases I have given the average prices of the years and months mentioned. They may be found in the appendix to the finance report of the Treasury for the year 1863. Is there no necessity, no justice, in putting up some defense against "the large capital," that thus lies in wait to spring upon us in our time of exposure to these murderous assaults? Observe, according to the parliamentary committee, neither cheap labor, abundance of raw material, nor skilled labor are any defense, as they certainly would be in fair competition. The large and cheap capital which can afford to await its opportunity and is sure by its successes to repair all losses, is the advantage of the foe. It is not even-handed competition that we have to fear, but domination from the vantage ground of capital which we cannot match.

Free trade, if it had any principle of justice in it, would at least put itself in the previous condition of a free field's fair play and an even chance. But it has neither soul nor sense.

A more plausible and harder pressed point than all others against protection in the form which it necessarily presents, is the cry of "class legislation," or the fostering care of manufactures, or the apparent overtopping and exclusion of mercantile and agricultural interests. This is one of the troubles of protection in popular apprehension. One of them, for its general trouble is that it requires to be understood; while free trade, its antagonist, requires neither knowledge of affairs, the history of national experience, nor any accommodation of general principles to the conditions which should modify their application. It means just the same thing to school girls, old ladies, and dyspeptic professors of logic that it does to its most elaborate propagandists. Protection puts restraint upon the wild liberty of international trade, and all the instincts of rebellion, revolution, and lawlessness are instantly in arms against it. A fashionable lady feels outraged at the very notion of having her traveling trunk searched, and of course decides that smuggling is merely "malum prohibitum," whose only evil effect is in its detection; and all those progressives who are in general "for liberty and against the Government" take the restrictions upon commerce to be a part of their dear, distinguishing martyrdom. Oh, my dear sir, the principles of free trade can all be written upon a thumb-paper, and any fool may have them always at his finger ends. That is their advantage, with the further help of the immediate interest of large classes to recommend them. Those classes are no less in number and power than, first, all capitalists of the commercial nation whose gains are in proportion to the supremacy they can obtain and hold over the countries less advanced in manufacturing power. Second, all the salaried officials, annuitants, and money lords, who are of the unproductive class, and are rich exactly in proportion to the poverty of the industrials of their own country, men who would have all commodities which they consume cheap, and the money they hold proportionately dear; and, third, all the poets and prattlers and peddlers of political economy that can be fooled or suborned into the service of universal levelers of labor-wages to the grade of the lowest among the nations. Moreover, these preachers of fustian have the superficial ad captandum advantage of the catching phrase of freedom, progressiveness, liberalism, natural law, and the countersigning cries of every man's right to the enjoyment of his own productions; the right to sell and buy where he pleases, with the chance of selling dear and buying cheap in all the open market-places of the earth. All of which means only a free scramble for the monopoly of trade by those who pay the lowest wages to the artificers of all commodities; by those that have the largest capital at the cheapest rate; by those who, being earlier and better provided with the means and appliances of converting skill, claim the right, as they have the power, of excluding all poorer and later strivers from entering the field of competition with any chance of success; or, in one word, as all wealth is the product of labor, it means substantially that the wages of labor and the profits of capital shall everywhere be reduced to the lowest rates that can be compelled anywhere else.

Mr. Speaker, when this doctrine of free trade is leveled down to its solid substance, when all its bubbles are exploded, its froth skimmed off, and its flutter quieted, it stands on its legs, just nothing but pauper wages, primogeniture of capital and skill, and industrial vassalage to every grade of advantages, below the highest, the oldest, and the most tyrannical.

But this objection of class legislation: first, it happens generally, and with us especially, that agriculture needs no defense against foreign rivalry. The abundance and cheapness of our provisions and of the raw material of manufactures requires no defense against the like products of transatlantic countries, and from the laws of climate only, in a very few particulars, against the products of the contiguous countries north and south of us. Where ever these are exposed to the mischief of interference from abroad, however, the principle of protection embraces them, and they are thus left without any ground of complaint of partiality in legislative protection. The possession of a fertile soil, and a universal variety of its products naturally protected by the bulk of the rival commodities and consequent cost of carriage through great distances, is the real reason why they scarcely appear among the products of industry claiming protection from foreign rivalry in the home market; for, as we have said, protection is nothing else, more or less, than simply defense against foreign invasion; and it is therefore apparent that the corn and pork of Illinois are as safe, and even more so, from foreign competition than the daily newspapers of New York and Philadelphia.

If protection seems to be mainly occupied with the products of manufacturing and mechanical skill, it is because that this, the principal, almost the entire field of the strife, is among the nations for mastery upon the part of the older and stronger, and defense on the part of the younger and weaker. For this reason manufactures hold the front rank, and apparently the exclusive regards of the friends of industrial liberty and independence.

But this charge of class legislation exploded as a logical proposition, turns practical, and alleges that all increased cost of foreign commodities and of the domestic supply thus fostered is for the exclusive benefit of the manufacturing interest, a bonus or bounty to it, and an equal burden upon the consumer.

Here, in the first place, the free-trader forgets his fundamental proposition, that competition is the regulator of prices, and, of course, does not see that no domestic production fairly secured can possibly be made to yield a larger profit to the men engaged in it, either as capitalists or workmen, than any other investment or occupation which offer themselves to the enterprise of the country; for on their showing, and better than by their concession, under a true and operative principle of business, capital and enterprise always seek the highest remuneration, and so bring all business down to the level of uniform profits. Where, then, is the bounty, the bonus, resulting from protective duties against foreign products, when domestic competition is thus sure to level profits in the most favored occupation to the common standard of all?

On the plainest principle of logic and the clearest experience of fact, the bonus or bounty charge is a feebly-false accusation; and being so, and necessarily so, the complaint of a temporary increase of prices as the result of protective duties must take another aspect and find a different responsibility than that of the "class" of the community charged with it, which class, by the by, embraces at least one half of the contributing numbers to the common stock of the nation's industrial welfare, and whose prosperity may therefore be a matter of much concern to the other half. A paralysis of one half the body politic can scarcely be less embarrassing to the whole community than a palsy of one whole side of the body to a single individual.

I am inclined to think, sir, that if this cowardly assault upon "the class" were explained to mean just what it must mean in the effect for which it is used, the croakers would find themselves directly confronted by the majority of the people. I do not admit that there is any such class, distinctive, hostile, or separate in object or interest. I look upon the entire productive community as an organism in which there are many functions, but all tributary to the well being of the whole, or all uniting in one body, without even independence of each other, much less disagreement or real difference of interests. If the enemy will have a census of what they must mean by "the class," which protection favors, they will find it, in its varied ramifications, too large to be encountered with either justice or safety.

The charge of undue favoritism thus finds a broader and a much less unpopular pet than the numerically few mill-owners and boss manufacturers of the country; nay, it really falls further back than the whole body of its representatives; it falls upon the community en masse for the fault that it is young, weak, poor, and unskilled relatively to the antagonist against whom it claims protection.

If the "class" cannot produce as cheap commodities; if the laborers will not work at as low wages; if capital is worth higher rates of interest than in the older countries of Europe, then this favoring legislation is a question for the nation, not for its manufacturing capitalists, to meet and answer. And the question simply amounts to this: Will you, for a brief period, pay a premium upon your own industry or permit it to be subordinated to that of all the world abroad, whose barbarism and pauperism in labor and supremacy of wealth and discipline demand your perpetual dependency? Will you suffer yourselves to be remitted to a uniform condition of unskilled labor, with your whole population struggling against each other, or will you, at the required cost, favor that distribution of occupations which will make you among yourselves mutually assistant and against all foreign rivalry, nationally and integrally independent?

But I will not any longer discuss these questions as matters of abstract principle. I will fall back upon the demonstration which my own State affords of a sound system of industrial economy, and leave the inferences from her history and condition to indicate their application to the conduct and policy of the entire Union, of whose varied interests she is an exemplar and representative.

According to the census of 1860 Pennsylvania had nine and a quarter per cent. of the population of the Union, having increased twenty-five and seventy-one hundredths per cent. in the decade; while the six New England States had a minute fraction less than ten per cent. of the national population, having grown but fifteen per cent. in the decade. The wealth of Pennsylvania was just ten per cent. of that of the Union, having increased ninety-six and five hundredths per cent. in the decade, while New England held thirteen and two hundredths per cent. of the wealth, with an increase of only sixty-five and two hundredths per cent. in the decade. The manufactures of the last census year in Pennsylvania are reported at fifteen and three hundredths per cent. of the whole, while those of the New England States reached twenty-four and eight hundredths per cent. of the total of the Union.

I quote these particulars for the purpose of remarking that while the aggregate personal and real property of Pennsylvania was about four hundred and forty-seven millions short of that of New England, in 1860, it had been growing faster in the decade as ninety-six is to sixty-five, or one half faster; and for the purpose of noticing some things in the condition and character of her varied industries which have not been generally considered or understood.

Iron and coal have been so conspicuous in her products, relatively to those of the other States, that they are commonly thought of as almost her sole reliance. Yet in the year 1860 (or rather 1859) the value of all her cast, forged, rolled, and wrought iron was but thirty per cent. of all the product of the Union; together they were valued at twenty-two and a quarter millions, or only seven and two-third hundredths of her manufactures. Now, recollecting that her wealth was but ten hundredths of that of the nation, it may be news to some of us that her woolen and cotton goods were twelve and one-third per cent. of the product of the nation, and came within less than two millions of the value of her iron; that her boots, shoes, and clothing reached beyond her iron in value; that her leather and harness almost equaled it; her flour and meal greatly exceeded; her sawed lumber was worth half as much; and her steam engines, carriages, wagons, and agricultural implements were again nearly equal in value to her whole iron product. Here, then, we have five several branches of manufactures, each yielding as much value in products per annum as her distinguishing staple product, iron; and another, sawed lumber, worth nearly half as much.

How broad is the range, how wide the diversity that reaches from the rank of the highest styles of modern manufactures back to the rudest products of the forest, and all of them nearly equal in commercial value and importance.

In agriculture she produces wheat enough to feed her population at the liberal rate of five bushels per head per annum; her Indian corn suffices for her wants; in slaughtered animals she stood fourth in rank among the States most distinguished for their herds and flocks; and in value of farming implements and machinery, which may be taken to indicate her agricultural grade, she stood second only to New York, whose greater wealth and larger territory will account for her larger value in this kind. Another proof that proportion is well maintained between the agricultural and the manufacturing industries of the State is that just as her aggregate wealth is to that of the nation, so the cash value of her farms bore the ratio of ten per cent. to the whole, greatly exceeding the value in this respect of the States that are purely agricultural; a farming State, ranking with the highest of those of the sister States, and at the same time on a level with the oldest and wealthiest, who have made converting skill the absorbing object of their productive industry.

In foreign commerce Pennsylvania makes no pretense to rank with New York or New England. Her wealth is otherwise, and every way better-wise, devoted and employed. In the commerce of home—of the vicinity—in the exchange that loyally yields all its benefits to the common country, she is behind none in the nation. In proof: of the railroads of the country, reported now at thirty-six thousand eight hundred and ninety-six miles, she has four thousand and thirty-seven miles, at a cost of over two hundred and ten million dollars, or nearly fourteen per cent. of the cost of the roads of the nation, and sixty millions more than New York, larger in territory, greatly excelling her in wealth, but behind her as greatly in the means and provisions of internal commerce.

May not a State thus balanced in the various departments of industry, thus reconciling the supposed antagonisms of trade, manufactures, and agriculture within her own limits, assume to speak for them all when they are all to be considered and provided for.

I have produced this great diversity of industrial interests and pursuits in the Keystone State to show that her policy must necessarily be impartial as between those branches of production which modern doctrines of political economy so industriously array as inimical to each other, and thus to fortify the authority of her policy and example in the legislative treatment of every one of them. And now I invite attention to a different analysis of those six or seven branches of production, and the system of internal transportation which they have called into existence in the joint service of all, from that which a mere statement of their relative market value presents. We have found at least five classes of manufactures equal to the iron product of the State in annual money value; we have found the agricultural product fairly up to the highest standard in the States most favorable to its prosperity; and we have found the machinery of trade and transportation at the very highest figure. Now, let us inquire the reason at once of this great relative and absolute development of the State's industry, and of the happy proportion between these comprehensively developed enterprises of capital and labor.

As I have in this inquiry constantly avoided the metaphysics of statistics, I shall not now indulge in speculation, though the point submitted strongly invites a logical scrutiny of the principles involved. I will treat it by analogy, using a universally accepted pattern of industrial experience as an exemplar. In so doing I shall have the clear light of a well proved experience thrown upon the phenomena of Pennsylvania's condition, and shall make bold to assume for it the philosophy which has written itself out in the facts of a kindred case.

England is accustomed to credit her supremacy in manufactures of every kind to the possession and development of her iron and coal. Pennsylvania compares with her closely in this primary condition of industrial development. Curiously enough the exports of the United Kingdom in 1865, if they may be taken to indicate the rates of its productions, show a striking resemblance in the proportion of iron and steel and their manufactures to the total of the manufactures of both countries of the United Kingdom. This great staple and foundation product, which is believed to support and rule her other industries, amounted to no more than eight and one tenth per cent. of the total of British and Irish exports; while in Pennsylvania, as we have seen, the iron product was just seven and two thirds per cent. of the value of her total manufactures. The total British and Irish exports of 1865 were eight hundred and four million dollars; the iron and steel, &c., were sixty-five million two hundred and thirty-nine thousand five hundred and eight dollars and eight cents. Products of Pennsylvania in 1860 were two hundred and ninety million one hundred and twenty-one thousand one hundred and eighty-eight dollars; her iron, twenty-two million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.*

Opinion, however, both among experts in industrial statistics and all ordinarily intelligent observers, unites in carrying the mainspring of a generally diversified and prosperous system of production back of the supply and yield of native iron. English authorities are accustomed to say of the coal beds which underlie so large a portion of the kingdom that they are vastly more precious than mines of the precious metals, like those of Peru and Mexico, would have been; that it is the possession

The production of iron and coal has increased very rapidly since 1859. Over thirteen million tons of anthracite coal alone will be mined in 1868, at an average cost, including rent and lateral tolls, of two dollars per ton. It is not now bringing the cost of production in a market that cannot do without it, and its gross value at the "head of navigation" may, therefore, be put at $25,000,000.

Much interesting and valuable statistical information compiled from the publications of that distinguished and most indefatigable journalist, Benjamin Bannan, esq., of the Pottsville Miner's Journal, has been fitted, in order that it may be introduced in an argument relating to additional railway communications with the anthracite coal fields.

of her coal mines which has rendered Britain in relation to the whole world what a city is to the rural district which surrounds it—the purchaser and dispenser of the various products of art and industry. Here, as in the proportion of the value of England's iron to her total manufactures, which we found to be eight per cent., very closely corresponds to that of Pennsylvania, which was seven and two thirds per cent. of her manufactures in 1860, and probably bears that ratio under all subsequent increase. So in the production of coal. Great Britain in 1867 mined one hundred and one million tons of coal, worth fifty million pounds sterling, which is as near as may be to seven per cent. of the total value of her industrial production in the year, which her own statisticians put at about seven hundred and twenty million pounds. The value of the coal mined in Pennsylvania in 1867, amounting to eighteen and three quarter million tons, had a gold value, according to the rate of prices in 1860, of twenty-three and a half million dollars, which is within a trifle of seven per cent. of the total industrial production of the State at the like rate of prices.

I do not think that the aggregate value of all the industries of either Great Britain or of any one or all the States of this Union is even approximately given by the exports of either country; but I believe it safe to say that the errors in each are so nearly equal that the ratio here taken may be relied upon. What there is in coal and iron which should thus be the exponent, and probably the cause, of the other industries of a nation favorably situated for their development need not be argued. It is enough that they are found in the constant connection of which Great Britain and the State of Pennsylvania exhibit such striking examples of concurrence. There is one feature in them, however, that looks as if it might go far to account for the fact that they thus serve as bases for the greatest variety and the largest extent of all manufactures. It is this: their products, from the rudest to the very highest powers which human skill can bestow upon them, have nearly their whole value made up of wages, of the earnings of those sorts of labor and skill which would be utterly wasted if not employed upon them; so that their great value in the market is created from nothing except the minds and muscles that were otherwise useless, or worse than useless, to the public weal. And, from this other consideration, that while the fabrics of the vegetable and animal world go forthwith into consumption: those of coal and iron are together the chief of those stupendous agencies which are concerned in reproduction of values, and that without them the other artificial labor in the workshops of the race, water, either liquid or in vapor, would scarcely suffice for the services even of savage life.

I may not detain the House upon a theme so much fitter, and so well fitted withal, for a philosophical essay, even in sufficient detail to impress its prominent features and captivating beauty. I cannot venture upon the patience of an audience even for the purpose of arraying the points which I have made in their most effective order. I submit them for their suggestiveness to the minds of thoughtful men. To my mind, though they are but a few in the multitude of facts and principles from which they are selected, they yet sufficiently sustain the doctrine of protection to the industry, capital, and enterprise upon which our welfare now more than ever, at least more immediately and imperatively than ever, depends.

Permit me now to make a general application of my argument to its purpose by quoting the matured opinions of two of the most eminent living statesmen of France. Count de Morny, finance minister at the time the Anglo-French treaty of 1860 was under negotiation, said, "Protection is the route to free trade." This one sentence is a summary of all history in the matter of international commerce as it affects national welfare. Not a step has ever been gained by any nation toward true freedom of trade but by the system of protection which nurses productive industries into the maturity and independence which in due time dispenses with further guardianship. This maxim of the great practical statesman was uttered while the Cobden treaty was yet in debate. Eight years after its adoption, on the 13th of May, 1868, in the Legislative Assembly of France, M. Thiers, whose name alone is authority, as well in history and theory as in practical affairs, in an exhaustive argument upon the condition and prospects of the industrial interests of France, calls upon its Legislature and its Emperor to "Reserve the national market for the national labor." The prospect is that civilized Europe and all the rising nationalities among the British dependencies will more and more, as they are able, exclude British goods from their markets. And it is all the more necessary that we shall defend our labor from the accumulating force and the accumulating necessity that England will feel for deluging us with her fabrics, cheapened by the desperation to which her capitalists are driven.

Mr. PILE. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield me five minutes?

Mr. MORRELL. Certainly.

Mr. PILE. I ask permission to move an amendment to the second section by inserting after the word "from" the words "and after sixty days subsequent to;" so that it will read, "from and after sixty days to the time of the entry of such goods for warehousing."

Mr. MORRELL. I will allow that amendment to be offered.

Mr. PILE. Mr. Speaker, this bill should have gone either to the Committee on Commerce or to the Committee of Ways and Means. I do not see what jurisdiction the Committee on Manufactures have over the question of importation, or the method of regulating the warehousing and delivery of imported goods. It is a subject that has always been considered and passed upon by either the Committee of Ways and Means or the Committee on Commerce. If the bill had received an examination by either of those committees, who are supposed to be conversant with the subject, I do not know but I should have been in favor of it. But it is too important a bill to pass hurriedly, having only received the consideration of a committee that is not supposed to be as conversant with the subject as the other two committees that I have named.

One specific effect of this bill upon interior importers I wish to advert to. It is that which I seek to remedy by the amendment I have offered. The present system of importing requires an appraisement of goods to be made at the sea-board port where the original entry is made, so that a shipment of goods made to Cincinnati, Chicago, St. Louis, or any interior city must be warehoused. It is not a matter of option with the importer. His goods must be examined and the duties appraised, and in the majority of cases the examination requires that the goods should be sent to the warehouse in order that the package may be opened and examined. Now, once they get into the warehouse at New York or New Orleans, as we have had abundant experience at St. Louis, they remain there in spite of the efforts of the importer from one to four months. This bill, taken in connection with the present law on the statute-book would compel the importer to send his goods to the warehouse and keep them there contrary to his desire, unless he is willing to submit to black-mailing on the part of custom-house officers, who make excuses that they cannot get at them conveniently, and then charge him interest for the time his goods are thus detained. That is, you compel him to warehouse his goods, detain them by the action of your officers, black-mail him, and then charge him interest for all the time you are doing this.

This bill, in application to and effect upon the importers living in the interior cities, would be most unjust and unfair. In fact the importers in the cities which I have named are suffering now under so many burdens that unless they are released from some of those burdens the importing trade of the interior will be so crushed that it will go out of existence. This will not help the manufacturers, for the reason that our merchants will go to New York and Boston and buy of the wholesale dealers in imports and pay him a margin for his profits. That will be cheaper than to submit to the burdens of the present law, and will not help the manufacturers; but it will make richer the importers of the sea-board cities at the expense of the consumers in the interior and the interior merchants. This bill, in addition to all the hardships they are now laboring under in this trade, will impose upon them an interest of six per cent. upon their goods detained in warehouses against their will and when they are pressing to get them out.

Mr. MORRELL. Why need they put them in warehouses?

Mr. PILE. They cannot avoid it. Their goods must be examined and appraised, and for the purpose of that examination and appraisement and the opening of packages the goods must go into warehouses, and they cannot keep them out. It is not a voluntary matter with them. There is no provision of law by which goods can be removed at present from the original port of entry except after examination and appraisement of duties, and for the purpose of that examination they must be sent to a warehouse, and from that warehouse the importer cannot get them for months, and yet you propose to charge him interest for the time his goods are detained. I hope the amendment I have offered will be adopted if we are to act on this bill at this time.

Mr. MORRELL. I now yield for five minutes to my colleague from Philadelphia, [Mr. O'NEILL.]

Mr. O'NEILL. I do not think it is a matter of any importance to the interests of the country and the interests of commerce and trade to which committee this matter happened to have been referred. I have presented numerous petitions from the people of Philadelphia, asking for an entire abolishment of the warehousing system. Some of them went to the Committee of Ways and Means and some to the Committee on Manufactures; but when I look at the elaborate and most excellent report made by the chairman of the Committee on Manufactures, of course indorsed, I presume by the members of the committee, I think the House may congratulate itself and the country may congratulate itself upon the fact that the subject was referred to intelligent men who understood what they were doing. I do not pretend to say that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PILE] might not improve the bill, for there may be some hardship in requiring the penalty upon the duties at the rate of six per cent. interest per annum to be put at once on the warehoused goods. But I look upon the bill generally as beneficial to the interests of the country—the industrial interests of the country, because it is well known here, and especially to the chairman and the members of the Committee of Ways and Means, that American industry is damaged to a great extent every day and every year by permitting imported goods to remain in warehouses as long almost as the importer pleases. Under the existing law the importer can keep his goods, if for home consumption, in the warehouse for one year without the payment of an advance upon the duties, and either before that period expires, or within two years thereafter, if they are for exportation, he may withdraw them without the advance; but if they are for home consumption he must pay the penalty of ten per cent. upon the amount of the duty in addition.

My colleague, the chairman of the Committee on Manufactures, intending, I suppose, to do something to aid in breaking down this deluging of the country with foreign goods as against the industrial interests of our own people, has put this section in the bill requiring that the rate of six per cent. per annum shall be paid upon the duties for the length of time the goods remain in warehouse. I do not say that that is not altogether in the interest of our own manufacturers; but if it be in that interest let us help it. I am for a tariff to protect the American manufacturer, and I hope the House will show its good judgment and its desire to legislate for the manufacturing interest of the country by passing the bill reported by my colleague [Mr. MOORHEAD] from the Committee of Ways and Means. But if we can also do this much toward benefiting and encouraging our own home industry, let us do it by passing promptly the bill now under consideration. I am well aware that the whole of this warehousing system needs great change and alteration. There have been crying complaints against it. Petition after petition has come to Congress upon the subject, and I, for one, representing in part a city which is largely engaged in manufacturing, say I want to stand by our own manufacturers wherever and whenever I can, and for that reason I think the bill reported by the Committee on Manufactures should pass.

Mr. MORRELL. I now yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RAUM.]

Mr. RAUM. I desire to offer the following amendment to the bill under consideration, being additional sections, to come in after section two of this bill:

SEC. —. De it further enacted, That the duties on all imported goods remaining in custom-houses and warehouses upon the passage of this act, shall be paid within sixty days after the passage of this act. And the duties on all imported goods in transitu from ports of entry to ports of delivery at the date of the passage of this act, shall be paid within sixty days after such goods shall have reached the proper port of delivery: Provided, That any of said goods may be reexported without payment of duty if the person owning or controlling the same apply for such privilege within thirty days after the passage of this act.

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That hereafter the duties on all imported goods entered for consumption shall be paid within thirty days after such goods shall have arrived at their proper port of delivery: Provided, That the duties on goods shipped in bond from one port to another shall be paid within thirty days after such goods shall have reached the latter port: And provided further, That goods imported for reexportation may remain in custom-houses and warehouses as now provided by law.

Mr. MORRELL. I will allow a vote to be taken on the amendment.

Mr. RAUM. Mr. Speaker, I do not profess to have any great amount of knowledge upon the subject now before the House. But I have examined the statistics of the country for a great number of years back, and I find that, under the present warehouse system, about two fifths of the total importations of this country go into the bonded warehouses of this country; and that something like from forty to fifty million dollars worth of imported goods remain in these warehouses from month to month the year round. Another startling fact is that we are exporting from seventy-five to one hundred million dollars of precious metals to pay for those imported goods. Under the existing laws and regulations of the warehousing system, these goods can be piled up on the edge of the market and remain there for twelve months without paying any duties to the Government of the United States; and the manufacturers and owners of these foreign goods have perfect control of the market by throwing them upon the market whenever they can find a ready sale for them.

Now, I believe we never can resume specie payments in this country, that we never can have a proper and healthy system of finances until we can reduce the importation of foreign goods so as to retain in this country the products of our mines, which now amount to about seventy-five million dollars per annum. As long as we pour out of the country the entire product of our mines into the coffers of foreign manufacturers, it is my belief that we can never have a healthy financial condition in this country. Why, sir, we at this time have not more than ten per cent., we have not ten per cent., of precious metals in this country, in proportion to the amount of the public debt. The sum of $250,000,000 will cover all the precious metals in the United States. Our mines now produce about seventy-five million dollars per annum. Yet we are exporting not only every dollar we produce from the mines, but also $10,000,000, $15,000,000, ay, even $25,000,000 of the reserve in the country. Now, until we can break up this system, until we can produce in this country all the articles which are necessary for our own consumption, until we can retain in this country the products of our mines, we never can have a healthy system of finances in the United States. But suppose we can keep in the United States the products of our mines for ten or fifteen years, thereby accumulating $75,000,000 from year to year for ten years, and increase the amount of precious metals in this country in ten years to $1,000,000,000, we will have solved the great problem of our finances, and placed the financial condition of our country upon an enduring foundation.

Believing that some legislation should be adopted which would look to a reduction of the importation of foreign goods, I introduced a bill some weeks ago which is substantially the same as the amendment I have just offered to the bill now before the House. In that bill I proposed that all the duties which are now due upon the imported goods now remaining in the warehouses of the country shall be paid within sixty days; and that all duties levied upon goods hereafter imported shall be paid within thirty days after those goods are warehoused at the ports of entry or at the ports of delivery when they are shipped in bond. By this means we will certainly discourage the enormous importation of goods brought into our market, and the large drain of precious metals from the United States, amounting to seventy-five to one hundred million dollars a year continually.

Mr. MORRELL. I propose to call the previous question, but before doing so, I yield to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LYNCH.]

Mr. LYNCH. I propose to amend the bill by inserting after the word "merchandise," in line three, the words "of foreign manufacture." I understand that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORRELL] is willing to accept this amendment.

The SPEAKER. The bill having been reported from a committee, the gentleman reporting it cannot accept an amendment.

Mr. MORRELL. I am willing that the amendment shall be offered.

Mr. LYNCH. I also propose to add at the end of the first section the following proviso:

Provided, That unrefined sugar shall not be considered manufactured goods.

Mr. SCHENCK. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORRELL], who I believe has indicated his purpose to demand the previous question, whether he wishes to cut off a motion to refer this bill to the proper committee. It is in fact a little tariff bill, and as I understand, does not properly come from the Committee on Manufactures. It proposes to regulate the warehouse system, and belongs either to the Committee on Commerce, or to the Committee of Ways and Means. I should like an opportunity to state why the bill ought to be referred to one of these committees.

Mr. MORRELL. I have no desire, and I know the Committee on Manufactures have no desire, to interfere with the jurisdiction of any other committee. This matter was referred to us by the House, and has been considered and reported upon by our committee. If, however, the House sees proper to take the matter out of our hands and refer it to another committee it can do so.

Mr. SCHENCK. I hope the previous question will not be sustained, as I wish to submit a motion to refer, and upon that motion make some remarks.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORRELL] to yield to me for five minutes.

Mr. MORRELL. I will do so.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. Speaker, I was not aware that this bill was to come up for consideration this morning, and therefore I am not prepared to make any extended remarks upon it, even if I had time to do so. But I want to call the attention of members of the House to the fact that this is merely a bill to increase the duties on most imported goods about six per cent. in gold. It is a tariff bill in disguise, and it comes here from the Committee on Manufactures, when it should have been considered by the Committee of Ways and Means. I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that it increases the duties upon every pound of tea and every pound of coffee that goes into the poor man's hovel as well as into the rich man's palace. It not only does that, but it increases the duty upon every article of necessity that is used in this country. When those goods go into bonded warehouses, if our tariff is not high enough, why not readjust it in a proper way and increase the duties on these goods? Or if the warehouse system is corruptly conducted, why not abolish it or reorganize it in some form? The committee have made an elaborate report showing the defects of this system, but they do not produce a remedy for our consideration to cure these evils.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORRELL] says that goods are placed in bonded warehouses free of charge. That is not the fact. The very highest rates of storage are paid by these importers when they place their goods in warehouses, whether they are put in bonded warehouses of the United States or in the bonded warehouses under the control and jurisdiction of the custom-house officers at the various ports of entry. Now, I submit to the House that it is not fair to advance under this disguise the duties so as to increase five or six per cent., on an average, the rates upon every article imported into this country, most of which necessarily go into bonded warehouses, not alone the articles that come into competition with the American manufacturer, but on all those articles of luxury or of necessity not manufactured at all in this country. The bill provides that there shall be paid at the rate of six per cent. per annum upon the whole amount of duties imposed upon such goods, wares, or merchandise from the time of such entry, most of which from the necessities of commerce remain in warehouse from six to twelve months. A few days ago we spent several hours for the purpose of showing that the ship-building interests of this country were in a depressed condition.

Mr. PIKE. I suppose the Committee of Ways and Means are greatly troubled about that matter! They are just beginning to wake up.

Mr. ALLISON. Here is a proposition striking a direct blow at the commerce of the country in saying that a man who imports goods shall, at the moment of importation, declare whether they are for consumption or exportation. How can the importer tell whether the goods he imports to-day are to be consumed in the United States or reexported to a foreign country; he may find a market for them in South America or Mexico a year hence? Yet, sir, this proposition compels him on the moment he enters them at the custom-house to say whether they are for consumption or exportation, which will discourage the making up of assorted export cargoes in our ports of entry.

Mr. O'NEILL. I wish to ask whether these poor importers do not know when they are going to ship goods whether they are for consumption or for exportation to South America or Mexico?

Mr. ALLISON. They do not know where the best market may be. They may be required to make up an assorted cargo at Boston or New York, or at some other port of entry.

Mr. O'NEILL. Let me ask the gentleman another question.

Mr. ALLISON. I cannot yield further.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me this bill should have further consideration. I have great faith in the Committee on Manufactures. I know they have examined the subject with great care. I have read the report of the chairman of the committee with great interest. He develops some important facts; but, sir, I am not prepared, as one member of the House, to increase the duties on imports some six per cent. without at least further reflection. I think the duties are high enough now upon most goods whether for purposes of revenue or protection. Is not fifty to sixty per cent. upon iron enough? Is not seventy-five to one hundred and twenty-five per cent. enough on woollen goods?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MORRELL. I yield now to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move the bill be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. MORRELL. I yield to the chairman of the committee to make that motion, but I hope it will not prevail.

Mr. SCHENCK. Will the gentleman allow me a few minutes in which to state my reasons?

Mr. MORRELL. I will yield for three minutes.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Speaker, I have read with a great deal of interest the exceedingly able report of the chairman of the Committee on Manufactures, but his committee must allow me to say I think this bill is rather an ignoble conclusion to so full and able a report. I agree with the gentleman, the warehouse system is full of rottenness; and the examination we have made to a certain extent in our committee have enabled us to agree with him in such conclusions. But does he propose to remedy any of them? Not at all. He discovers the warehouse system is all wrong, but there is a little tariff bill in disguise introduced by way of reform. It amounts to no more or less than that. I humbly conceive this subject of tariff, whether it comes in the shape of imposts on goods entered and lying in the bonded warehouses, or in any other shape, belongs to the Committee of Ways and Means, and therefore I think this bill should go to that committee.

My friend from Philadelphia [Mr. O'NEILL] congratulates the House that, instead of having gone to the Committee of Ways and Means or to the Committee on Commerce, it has fallen into the hands of intelligent men who understand it. I will not take issue with him on that, but such as we are and such capacity as we have we should endeavor to give to the subjects which under the rules of the House belong to our committee. Now, sir, I have said this is a tariff bill, repeating what I said when I first called attention to it, and which was afterward confirmed by my colleague on the committee, [Mr. ALLISON.] It is an indirect mode, says the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. O'NEILL,] devised by the Committee on Manufactures for protection to be given to the manufactures of this country. I have no remarks to make at this time on the merits of the bill itself, only it should have the investigation of the committee to which it belongs. But I will say this, that it certainly presents a subject about which there may be a question on both sides. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PIKE] referred to one of the objections which may exist to this bill. It gives an advantage to the importers or merchants at the sea-board over those in the interior. The latter must necessarily be subjected by lapse of time to these additional charges from which the former, being at the sea-board, may entirely escape.

Again, there ought to be some consistency in our legislation. The other day the Committee of Ways and Means proposed to allow whisky to remain in bonded warehouses three months. The House extended the time to six months. The Senate, as we see by the published proceedings, have extended it to twelve months. But nobody thinks of charging interest while it remains there. I observe that whenever we come to the question about having protection to certain interests, gentlemen from Pennsylvania and elsewhere see things in a somewhat different light. I am merely speaking in the way of criticism, to show that the subject ought to have some further consideration.

Mr. MORRELL. I yield two minutes and a half to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RAUM.]

Mr. RAUM. Having great respect for the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means and for the committee generally, on the 5th of June last I had a bill which I had the honor to introduce referred to that committee, but I have never heard of their taking any action on the subject. I suppose the tax bill so engrossed their time that they were unable to consider it. Now, sir, I regard this as a question of great importance indeed, and worthy of the immediate consideration of the House; because it is a startling fact to announce to this country that we are now exporting specie at the rate of $100,000,000 per annum to pay for imported goods. I therefore affirm that it is our duty, before we leave this Hall, to pass some kind of an act that will discourage importation of foreign goods; and while I would not have ingrafted upon the bill this provision requiring the payment of six per cent. interest on duties, yet I think we can amend the bill and pass it in such a shape as will discourage the importation of foreign goods and enable us to retain the products of our mines in this country; because we never can have a resumption of specie payment and we never can have a reliable system of finance until we can keep our gold from being exported at the present enormous rate.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MORRELL. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The first question was on the motion of Mr. SCHENCK to refer the bill to the Committee of Ways and Means, and being put there were—ayes 48; noes 37; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. MORRELL and SCHENCK were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 54, noes 46.

So the bill was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. BENJAMIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. HOPKINS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. 1325) for the relief of Benjamin B. French, late Commissioner of Public Buildings;

An act (H. R. 445) for the relief of Timothy Lyden, of Parkersburg, West Virginia;

An act (H. R. 453) increasing the pension of Nancy Weeks, widow of Francis Weeks, an ensign in the revolutionary war; and

An act (H. R. 1069) for the relief of Charles B. Tanner, late first lieutenant sixty-ninth Pennsylvania volunteers.

Mr. HOLMAN, from the same committee, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. No. 436) for the relief of James Hooper; when the Speaker signed the same.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. MAYNARD. I ask permission to make a personal explanation in behalf of a portion of the Committee of Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman wish?

Mr. MAYNARD. Two minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MAYNARD. Members of the House will have seen lying upon their tables this morning a communication purporting to be from a correspondent of the Chicago Tribune of the date of April 25, 1868, touching the action of the sub-committee of Ways and Means on the tariff. A portion of that statement I will read:

"It is not published, but printed in this way: as fast as a sheet was revised, one of the members of the sub-committee transmitted a copy to the Manufacturers' Association, whose headquarters are at Philadelphia, for revision and approval, who proceeded to publish the sheets for the instruction only of the faithful. A similar course was adopted in reference to the Iron and Steel Association."

I desire simply to say, as a member of the sub-committee and speaking for the other members, that the correspondent, whoever he may have been, was misinformed entirely upon this matter. The action of the sub-committee had nothing in it which would justify such a representation as is here made.

HARBOR OF OSWEGO.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with the resolution of the House of the 9th ultimo, a report of the chief of engineers relative to the construction of wharves in the harbor of Oswego, New York; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

FREEDMEN'S AFFAIRS IN KENTUCKY, ETC.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with the resolution of the House of the 1st instant, the report of Brevet Major General Carlin for the last six months, relative to the condition of freedmen's affairs in Kentucky and Tennessee; which was referred to the Committee on Freedmen's Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIM OF E. M. DAVIS.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting papers pertaining to the claim of E. M. Davis, for alleged damages to his land while occupied and used as a military camp; which were referred to the Committee of Claims.

GOVERNMENT CONTRACTORS.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. No. 307) for the relief of certain Government contractors.

Mr. SPALDING and Mr. BENJAMIN objected.

TROOPS ON THE PLAINS.

Mr. BURLEIGH, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to inform this House what number of troops are stationed along the line of the Union Pacific railroad between Omaha, Nebraska, and Great Salt Lake City, including those at Fort Laramie and Fort Fetterman, and those along the line of the eastern division of said road; also those in the Territory of Dakota, and on the Missouri river, at and below Fort Benton; also the names and number of the different military posts and the number of troops stationed at each.

PORTAGE LAKE SHIP-CANAL.

Mr. JULIAN. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. No. 398) extending the Portage Lake and Lake Superior ship-canal to Keweenaw Bay, providing for the right of way, and making a grant of land to aid in the construction of said extension.

Mr. SPALDING. I object to taking up any more Senate bills out of their order.

EVENING SESSION.

Mr. BANKS. Before moving to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order, if there are many gentlemen who desire to debate the Alaska question, I will move that there be an evening session.

The SPEAKER. The chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union [Mr. GARFIELD] can tell how that is.

Mr. GARFIELD. There are more gentlemen whose names are down as desiring to speak than can speak this afternoon, but whether any of them desire to speak in the evening or not I cannot say. The debate may continue to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The Committee of Elections have given notice that to-morrow they intend to call up two contested-election cases from Missouri. They may postpone those cases.

Mr. GARFIELD. I cannot tell how many members wish to speak to-night.

Mr. BANKS. Then I ask that an order be made that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union shall take a recess from half past four o'clock until half past seven o'clock p. m.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

PURCHASE OF ALASKA.

Mr. BANKS, by unanimous consent, presented a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, inclosing a report of Captain J. W. White, commanding a revenue cutter in the Alaskan waters, dated May 26, 1868; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BANKS. I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The rules were accordingly suspended; and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. GARFIELD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being House bill No. 1096, making an appropriation of money to carry into effect the treaty with Russia of March 30, 1867.

Mr. HIGBY. I now yield five minutes of my time to my colleague, [Mr. AXTELL.]

Mr. AXTELL. Mr. Speaker, the question of the value of this purchase has been so fully considered, and will be further considered by others who are to occupy the floor on this question, that I will pass it by with but the single remark that the standard of value is very different for the nation and for the individual. The extinguishment of a foreign flag and a foreign title on this continent is of itself of immense value. The necessity that a great nation occupying a position upon a great ocean should have harbors for the protection of its commerce is a matter of value that cannot be overestimated in the question of national purposes. The Pacific States, more intimately acquainted with this territory than the Atlantic States can be, are unanimously in favor of this purchase. Her citizens are enterprising commercial men. And it is fair to presume that, had this purchase been as valueless as the opponents of this bill have represented, the men in the Pacific States would have forewarned the Government and raised their voices against the payment of this money. But I desire to say that there is no distinction of feeling upon the Pacific coast in relation to the value, necessity, and propriety of this purchase.

Now, while it may not be a legitimate argument, perhaps it might be well for the Republican party, as they are responsible for the action of this House, to consider that no political party can be sustained in the Pacific States that acts in opposition to the acquirement of this territory. I desire, however, to say one word in relation to the enlargement of the territory of the United States. I refer, simply to the purchase of foreign territory, of Louisiana, of Florida, and the acquisition of California. I desire to say that the Pacific States up to this time have not been territory contiguous to the main portion of the settled territory of the United States. The learned and very able gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SHELLBARGER,] who stated that great nations had fallen asunder from the possession of too much territory, dwelt particularly upon the fact that the traditional policy of the United States was to purchase and acquire only contiguous territory. But the Pacific States are several thousand miles distant from the rest of the country.

Now, I point with great pride to the patriotism of the people of the Pacific States, to their love for your flag, for their flag, for our flag, to their love for the Union, in which feeling they, though distant, have been as earnest as any others can be. In referring to the remarks of the learned gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHELLABARGER] I desire to refer to the fact that the greatest of modern nations, the most powerful now among the kingdoms of the world, gains her power and her greatness, in my judgment, from the territory which she owns and controls and governs, that is not contiguous to the mother country; by means of her foreign possessions, and the fact that her flag is on every sea, and her drum-beat can be heard from sun rise to sun rise all around the world. This shows that it is true that nations can achieve greatness by the possession of lands not contiguous to her own shores. I wish also to refer to the fact that if we would have our Government over the whole of North America, and we can acquire it by purchase instead of by war, we would act wisely and well and humanely by establishing the precedent in this case of acquiring territory by purchase rather than by conquest.

Mr. HIGBY. I will yield four or five minutes more to my colleague, if he desires it.

Mr. AXTELL. My colleague [Mr. HIGBY] is very kind in giving me any of his time in which to speak at all on this question. I desire only to finish the thought I was endeavoring to express.

The very learned and able gentleman who has the charge of this bill, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, [Mr. BAXES,] in speaking of the Pacific States and the Pacific ocean, has said what must have occurred to all who heard it as being not only very able and eloquent, but as announcing a truth which thrilled all hearers; a truth which, although lying on the surface, has attracted but little of the attention of the thinkers of our day. And that is that we have reached a point in the history of the world when the Pacific ocean is to be the great theater of the world's greatness from this time forward. I recollect that years ago, about the time of the acquisition of California, the attention of Congress was called, by eloquent men here, to the fact that the race had circled the world, and, making that circle, had come back to the shores of the Pacific, and that henceforth the theater of labor, the theater of improvement and conquest lay out there on the Pacific coast.

We acquire foothold there on the Pacific by treaty and by purchase. And allow me to say to this House that that ocean is a steam ocean. It has not the winds necessary to carry by sail the commerce of the world. It has that grandeur of distance and extent, requiring more rapid communication than by sailing vessels; and the race were not ready for that ocean until they had attained something like perfection in the use of machinery. That ocean is quiet. It is the steam ocean of the world. When we have, as we shall have in our time, three lines of railroad communication with the Pacific coast and a great ship-canal across the isthmus, we shall then find that the Pacific ocean is the great theater for the activity of our citizens; we shall then rejoice that we have extinguished, by purchase, any other national flag upon that coast; that we have given to our commerce harbors there; that we have opened up the means of holding and controlling, as it is our destiny to hold and control, not only all North America, but the great commerce of the Pacific.

Mr. Speaker, thanking my colleague [Mr. HIGBY] for the time he has so kindly granted me, I now return to him the floor.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I ask that by unanimous consent it be ordered that when the gentleman from California [Mr. HIGBY] shall conclude his remarks speeches on this subject be limited to thirty minutes.

Mr. SPALDING. I object.

Mr. HIGBY. Mr. Chairman, before referring to the merits of this question, I wish to say a few words with reference to an amendment which was presented a few days ago by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. ELIOT.] While with him and others in this House I am ready to express what we together understand as the power and right of this House with respect to questions of this kind, I do not feel willing to incorporate that expression in this bill, because I am satisfied that the Senate will never assent to the passage of the bill in that shape. But in a separate expression by this House I will join with the gentleman from Massachusetts and other gentlemen.

Mr. ELIOT. Will the gentleman yield to me for an inquiry?

Mr. HIGBY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ELIOT. I understand the gentleman to say that he thinks the principle involved in my amendment is correct?

Mr. HIGBY. I do not speak as to the precise form of the amendment; but in a speech which I made here on a former occasion I held precisely the same principle asserted in that amendment; but I also maintained that this case stood in a peculiar attitude so as to be beyond our reach.

Mr. ELIOT. Then, Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the gentleman this question: if the principle asserted in my amendment commends itself to his judgment, as of course it does if some time ago he made a speech in behalf of it, why should he object to asserting that principle in this bill simply because of an apprehension that the Senate may not think it wise to have such a declaration there?

Mr. HIGBY. Mr. Chairman, I have no apprehension whatever, because, according to the feeling and opinion of the great body of this House, the Senate took a step that they ought not to have taken. That is the view taken here; and the Senate is not going to take back its own doings.

Mr. ELIOT. My friend mistakes the amendment.

Mr. HIGBY. I cannot yield any further time for the discussion of that amendment.

Mr. ELIOT. My amendment applies to the future.

Mr. HIGBY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to notice two points with reference to the Pacific coast. One is the climatic condition; the other is a physical condition.

Mr. Chairman, before speaking of these two conditions, however, I will speak of another subject; and that is with reference to the treaty-making power. I have no doubt but it was intended by the framers of the Constitution that the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, should constitute the treaty-making power. But when we come to the question of appropriating money there is this involved, not as the right of this House to dictate what the President and the Senate may do, but this House can refuse, whatever may have been done, to make appropriation. If we believe any great principles have been violated, or the rights of the people put in jeopardy, the House will assume its responsibility if it intervenes. It takes upon itself the consequences when it assumes that position. If there be a treaty made with a foreign Power, as in this case, and the House intervenes, feeling it to be its duty to do so, then it must do so in the face of the fact that war may be the result. It must at the time feel it is better for this Government and better for the people of this country to have war than that a treaty of this kind should be consummated. That is the position this House must assume.

I know, sir, it has been argued here if this House should refuse to make this appropriation it is no cause of war between this Government and Russia. I beg to differ with the gentlemen who take that side of the question.

I say, sir, that all foreign nations have the right under the Constitution to take the word of the President and the Senate as to a proposition of this character. Under the law of nations they need not stop to inquire whether there has been consultation or not with this body as to whether the President and Senate had done wrong or not. If a treaty be made by the President and the Senate, and this House refuses to make appropriation to carry it out, then this House takes the risk of war. That would be the position assumed.

When the emergency shall be of sufficient magnitude to justify the House in such intervention, let it be taken promptly and firmly; and with equal step let the national defenses be so strengthened as to resist successfully any hostile attempt from without. Let us see for a moment. What may be the law of the land is not the law for the nations of the earth; but what is assented to as the law of nations is something separate and distinct. This Republic has a national character among the nations of the earth, and no position could be more humiliating for this nation than bickerings among the different branches of the Government; and by this House withholding money to carry out a treaty we should give occasion for war according to international law. But, sir, I leave this part of the subject.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are two conditions, one climatic and the other the physical features of the earth upon the Pacific coast. There is no gentleman within the hearing of my voice who has made a voyage from New York to San Francisco by way of Panama but will bear me witness to the truth of what I am about to say. When we have doubled the southernmost point of New Granada and take our course in a southwesterly direction on the Pacific we find a chain of mountains from that point until we get to San Francisco. I know of but one significant exception, and it is in the State of Tehuantepec, in the republic of Mexico, upon the isthmus, where the land is low and level for some twenty or thirty miles inland from the Pacific shore. With this exception it is a mountainous chain, and for most of the way it comes to the water's edge, and there is no man who would make a voyage upon that coast for the first time but would be impressed with the idea, without further information than what his eyes gave him, that there were no inducements held out to make any point upon the coast a dwelling-place. To the northern extremity of our territory on the Pacific this same mountain chain, bordering the ocean, continues. I have no doubt, sir, from the information I have received, that all along the British and Russian possessions it is nothing but a mountainous chain. There are high mountains, covered with ice and snow. Well, sir, where there are mountains there must be valleys. As you go along the coast of California you find precipitous mountains, but when you go beyond those mountains you find a valley stretching four hundred miles uninterrupted by mountains. This territory of Alaska may be the same; who can say it is not, and that valleys will be found in Alaska capable, under good tillage, of producing many articles of food for man in great abundance? I believe it will so prove on thorough exploration.

I do not know whether the people of the East yet believe what has been so often declared, that our winters on the Pacific coast are nearly as mild as our summers. And yet such is the fact. In my own little village, situated over fourteen hundred feet above the level of the ocean, I have seen a plant growing in the earth green through all the months from October to April. It is not always so; that is an exception; but yet such was the fact. I have seen the wild honeysuckle in bloom on the north bank of the Yuba, in latitude 39°, in the month of January, and I have seen other plants in blossom in the same month. These are facts, account for them as you will.

The prevailing winds on the Pacific coast for about six months in the year are north and northwest, embracing the entire summer. During the rest of the year the prevailing winds are south and southwest, including the winter season. Now, it is well known that when south winds prevail here in the East for several days in mid-winter, when we have deep snows and ice, the sun melts away the snow and ice until we have great freshets. Should the south winds prevail much longer the green grass would appear and vegetation would spring up; and should these continue through the winter you would have a summer climate instead of a winter one. Such is one of the causes which, together with the ocean currents, modifies the climate on the Pacific coast. With me it accounts for the moderate climate which is reported to exist in Alaska. It must be that the south winds have the effect to mollify the climate so as to make the mean temperature moderate in comparison to what it is on the Atlantic coast in the same latitude, more particularly in the interior where the ocean winds do not reach. The river Yukon, that empties into Behring sea in latitude 65°, which is navigable more than a thousand miles inland, is clear of ice by middle to 25th May, and from that time for some five months is navigable. Point me to a condition of things like that on the Atlantic side.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman name the authority from which he derives that information in regard to the river Yukon being navigable a thousand miles from its mouth? What civilized man has ever seen it?

Mr. BANKS. Lieutenant Pease.

Mr. HIGBY. I have it here. Major Kennicutt explored it, and died several hundred miles from the mouth of this river upon one of its banks, and Lieutenant Pease took his remains down the river in a small open boat, commencing his trip down the river in the latter part of May.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Pennsylvania. He ascended only some three or four hundred miles.

Mr. BANKS. Major Kennicutt died five hundred miles from the month, and his body was carried down by Lieutenant Pease, who himself had traveled inland through the whole of that country.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Pennsylvania. He did not undertake to say he traveled down the Yukon; his exploration was up the river about four or five hundred miles. That is all we have.

Mr. HIGBY. I find the gentleman from Pennsylvania is about as stubborn upon this matter as is the member from Wisconsin, [Mr. WASHBURN.] He is unwilling to derive any favorable information.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Pennsylvania. I want authority.

Mr. HIGBY. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WASHBURN] is entirely incredulous about the discovery of gold there. And yet, as early as 1858—I may as well digress here—we had a great hegira from California of about twenty-five thousand miners, who went up to the Frazer river in search of gold. At one time we feared the State would be nearly depopulated. These miners traveled some three or four hundred miles north in British Columbia, lying east and adjoining Alaska, adjoining the British territory, and there found gold. My own neighbors went there, and I get information from them.

On the river Stikine, which is the most southern rivers in Alaska, miners are now taking out gold. And yet gentlemen insist there is no gold to be found there.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Pennsylvania. I would ask the gentleman how much of the river Stikine is within this territory? Is there more than thirty miles of it?

Mr. HIGBY. Well, about thirty-five miles.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Pennsylvania. Has any of this gold been found within that distance?

Mr. HIGBY. Well, it would be unfortunate if there had been. But that is a very small point for a great man to dwell upon, and I consider him one of the greatest in the House.

I never knew him to dwell upon so small a point before. I have none the less respect for him for it, but I am a little surprised.

Mr. Chairman, I have dwelt, on a former occasion, on what I conceive to be the value of this country to our Government, and I propose now more particularly to answer some of the points that have been raised by gentlemen on the opposite side of this question. The member from Wisconsin, [Mr. WASHBURN,] who makes the most vigorous fight against this appropriation, has been reading authorities to the House. I have examined several of them, and I find that he has been very particular to select those points that bear most heavily against this purchase. I have known lawyers in a small way, before ignorant justices of the peace, to select certain portions of law to suit their cases, and if an intelligent lawyer is on the opposite side he is quite sure to discover the strategy of his opponent and to defeat his end and purpose.

Now, sir, the information that has been presented on this subject lies upon the desk of every member of this House, and the investigations and explorations that have been printed for the reading of members controvert every position that has been taken by the gentleman on this question. I do not feel disposed to take up the books and read them, for the reason that every member has them for his own examination and perusal. The gentleman was careful in all he read to the House to read only those portions that made against the country. He read to us from the report which comes to us with the authority of the Russian Government how barren the whole country is, but he did not read the further statement that there are no Russians there of any consequence, that there are nothing there but Indians, and that the Indians want no land system. And yet, sir, the Indians of that country are raising some of our vegetables, and from three to four hundred barrels of potatoes are shipped from the Island of Kodiak to Sitka every year; there is an evidence of the power of the soil to produce. Good potatoes are raised also at Prince of Wales Island. So says Mr. Pearce, whose letter I published in my former speech, and who was on that coast continuously for three years, and is pretty good authority. He also says that copper is found at the north end of the Prince of Wales Island. And yet the member from Wisconsin says that no evidence has been produced of the fact that minerals are found in this territory.

I had a letter a few days since from a gentleman of the name of Crosby, an old Nantucket whaler, who has passed eight summers off that coast in the whaling business, and he says that from the southern extremity of Oonalaska along the Behring sea north for three hundred miles, at any time along the coast they could stop the ship and in a few hours' time cover the deck with the finest cod he ever saw. That is new testimony. This gentleman was in command of one of the four-teen vessels which, just near the close of the war, the Shenandoah got among in Behring sea and destroyed every one of the ships except his. He says that this nation ought to own that country, that it will be of vast importance to us and a great acquisition for us.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not comment more at length upon this subject. I would inquire how much time I have left?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has thirteen minutes left.

Mr. HIGBY. I was entitled to an hour, I believe.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman was entitled to an hour; he yielded ten minutes to his colleague, [Mr. AXTELL,] and has fourteen minutes now left, speaking more accurately.

Mr. HIGBY. I supposed I had more time. However I will hurry on. My friend from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] made a speech here a few days ago. He is another gentleman than whom I respect none other more highly. But he is very warm and earnest when he comes to debate, and sometimes he may run ahead of facts, and must then review what he says and be careful what he prints. Here are two things which do not go very well in juxtaposition. This is what he says:

"And yet we stand here doubting whether we have the financial ability to expend a few thousand dollars for the purpose of giving uninterrupted navigation through two thousand miles, the grandest river on the globe, forming the boundary for twelve States of this Union, each of them large enough for an empire, a river having capacity enough to bear upon its bosom the commerce of many nations. Gentlemen who doubt our ability to do that are to-day ready to vote $10,000,000 to pay for the icebergs of Alaska."

"There are from fifty to seventy thousand Indians in Alaska, and from ten to twelve thousand white people of some kind."

Now, icebergs are very poor material on which to feed so many people. The three hundred days of rain each year of which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WASHBURN] spoke must come with lightning speed, and melt these icebergs in the twinkling of an eye.

Mr. PRICE. Will the gentleman point out any statement which I made and which is not correct?

Mr. HIGBY. The gentleman spoke of the sixty or seventy thousand people who live on these icebergs.

Mr. PRICE. I did not say they lived on icebergs. I will state what I said.

Mr. HIGBY. When I am summing up a case I never allow a witness to get up and explain his testimony.

Mr. PRICE. I do not wish to explain anything I have said. Take it as it is.

Mr. HIGBY. I let the witness do the swearing only, and then I do the talking. Mr. Chairman, I noticed when the river and harbor bill was under consideration he supported it, as did also the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. WASHBURN,] and I noticed another thing, that when the other day we passed a bill appropriating $10,000 for the botanical garden my friend from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] sat as calm as a summer morning and allowed that item to pass without his objection. Now, I think we could get along without a botanical garden, especially when the poor soldier has not got all his pay.

The distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHELLABARGER] made a most extraordinary speech the other day. He said that it was a historical fact that those ancient nations which were compact and solid had been the most enduring, while those which had the most extended territory lasted the least space of time. Now, I agree with the gentleman that that is true. But it must be recollected that they had not the great agents and civilizers of the present day, steamboats, railroads, and telegraphs. By means of the latter the Atlantic kisses the Pacific morning, noon, and night.

Now, will any gentleman tell us of the Pacific, of Oregon, California, Washington Territory, and the furthest extreme of our Republic, that our people have shown less loyalty to this Government in its trying hour of need than the people right here and near by? If any member of this House dare cite that this rebellion was in the extremity of this nation he cites that which is not the fact. Sir, right in sight of this Capitol is one State, not now represented in this Hall, which was engaged in a rebellion founded upon an institution that has gone out of existence.

Now, do not tell me that by extending west and north we can gain any territory that will weaken us. I tell you that it gives us strength. It was said of California that it had no valuable land. I was there three years before the people began to find out that their land was cultivable. They were all for gold, as the Russian fur companies have all been for furs. They did not look for anything else. When the people came to look around a little they found that farming would be as profitable as gold hunting, and that there were millions of acres of as good land as any in the world, and genial seasons to bring forth the productions. The same might be said of Washington Territory and of all that country.

When the American people get hold of a country there is something about them which quickens, vitalizes, and energizes it. No gold there? So it was said about California. And yet from six to eight hundred million dollars in the twenty years that Americans have held California have been exported from that State alone. Under Mexican rule it would have cut no figure in the history of the world. Under Russian rule, such as there can be upon a distant coast like that of Alaska, with an ocean and five thousand miles of wilderness intervening, Alaska has been useful only to a fur company, a company that does not desire that there shall be any improvements of the character I have indicated. Let American enterprise go there, and as if by electricity all that country will waken into life and possess value. I regret that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHELLABARGER] is not in his seat. I should hope that so fine an intellect and so fine spirited a man would review such an argument as he made here and find that he had labored under a very great mistake.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WASHBURN] questioned the truthfulness of the dispatch that General Halleck sent from the West with reference to the feelings of the people on the Pacific in regard to this acquisition. Notwithstanding the gentleman assumes here in this Hall to charge General Halleck and Professor Davidson with falsehood, I say to him, and all other members of the House, that there is no subject so vital to that people as this; and, sir, the whole population there, men, women, and children, without distinction of party, are in favor of this acquisition.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the little opposition which has been exhibited here to this proposition will melt away, and that the Republican side of this House will give us a solid front in favor of this appropriation, and let this question be disposed of. Let the American go to that country and follow the different pursuits of life with which he is familiar. Let him go and hunt for gold, copper, iron, coal. I venture the assertion that in less than one year's time, that within one season after this question is settled, there will be developments in that territory that will show to the American people its great value, and that the acquisition was one which this Government ought to make.

Mr. McCARTHY obtained the floor, and yielded three minutes to

Mr. PRICE, who said: Mr. Chairman, I am allowed three minutes to reply to my friend from California in reference to the comparative value of Alaska and the Mississippi valley.

Mr. HIGBY. I said nothing about the Mississippi valley.

Mr. PRICE. I only desire to reiterate what I said the other day, that while some members of this House have doubted and hesitated as to the propriety and financial policy of an appropriation by this Government of a few thousand dollars to remove the obstructions in the Mississippi river, the grandest river upon the globe, and inhabited by a loyal, intelligent, and energetic people, the same gentlemen who thus hesitate and object are ready to vote $10,000,000 out of the Treasury for the purchase of the icebergs of Alaska.

Now, sir, if there is anything incorrect, if there is anything in that statement not consistent with the strictest truth, then I ask any gentleman upon this floor to show where the inaccuracy is. I did not say that the people of Alaska lived upon ice and snow. If they did it would have been a more desirable country. I say now as I said then, that the inhabitants of that territory consisted of about sixty or seventy thousand Indians and some eight or ten thousand white men of some sort. I say now as I said then, that it would have been better for us to have voted this $7,200,000 for the purpose of removing obstructions in the Mississippi river, thus improving navigation and commerce, and enabling breadstuffs to be transported cheaply from the West to the seaboard, than to have purchased this remote and sterile territory of Alaska. In my judgment, looking at the acquisition of the territory of Alaska as I do, occupying the stand-point I do, it is better, instead of paying this money for Alaska, to expend it in opening up and improving the great channels of commerce in which all of our people are interested. I believe it is better to improve the country we have than to buy new territory we do not want.

Mr. McCARTHY. I desire, sir, to give a few reasons for opposing this appropriation for the payment of Alaska. I understand the treaty-making power of this country exists in the executive and the Senate branches, and while I concede that I have yet to convince myself that those two powers of the Government can override a coordinate branch. As a Representative in this House I am called upon to vote an appropriation for the payment of money to fulfill a treaty in which I have not been consulted, in which my power or judgment has been completely ignored.

I ask the question here whether these two branches of the Government, by an agreement with the head of a foreign Power, can override this House in its action and destroy our constitutional obligation? We are sent here to perform legislative acts, and one of these under the Constitution is to vote upon all the appropriations of money. I am compelled to ask what makes the necessity for this appropriation? admitting that these gentlemen composing the two branches of the Government had the power to make the treaty. What was the pressing necessity for carrying out the treaty at that time by taking possession of the territory? The whole difficulty of this question now rests with the Secretary of State, and it is impossible that an officer in this Government, simply a Cabinet officer, can put us in a false position with Russia or with other nations, by which under the law of nations we are compelled to pay money or go to war. It is not a question as to the fulfillment of a treaty, because I believe a majority of this House, no matter how they vote, agree with me that Baron Stoeckl and Secretary Seward forced this matter along and took possession of Alaska for the purpose of putting this House into the position in which it now stands, an apparent necessity to vote the money. How so? The Secretary of State said it was not the business of members of the House to discuss this question; that they had nothing to do but to vote the money; in other words, mere machines without responsibility.

I hear gentlemen say it puts us in a position of honor in regard to Russia, that Russia is a friendly Power. I ask this House where this friendship comes from? It comes from self-interest. She is the absorbing Power of the Eastern continent, and she recognizes us as the absorbing Power of the Western continent, and through friendship with us she desires to override and over-balance the Governments of Europe which lay between her and us. Look at the principles of the two Governments. Hers the one-man power, a despotism; ours a republican Government, a Government of the people. Can there be real friendship, can there be true interest here. Not at all; only that kind of interest upon which to depend is to depend upon a broken reed. We are not obliged to court, much less to buy, the friendship of Russia or any other Government. Let us be just to humanity and freedom, and ever the enemy of oppression and despotism. No man can look at Poland, poor, decapitated, wiped-out Poland, without remembering the struggles of her sons and daughters for national existence. No man can forget the persecutions of that people, now suffering persecutions that disgrace the Christian religion and civilization.

And here I am obliged to depart a little from my regular argument and ask, what use had Russia for this territory? Already she owned five sixths of the frozen territory of the eastern continent, more than she could use or make profitable. Her policy is absorption not of distant but of contiguous territory. She is rapidly adding to her possession, without justice or mercy, nation after nation lying contiguous. Napoleon said the time would come when all Europe would become Cossack or republican.

Look again at this matter. Russia had held possession of Alaska for a long period of time. It had never been profitable to her; it had always been a bill of expense. She was glad, therefore, of the opportunity to transfer it to another Power. It gave her no power or influence over the commerce of the Pacific ocean. No nation on the earth needed an addition to the number of her harbors and ports more than Russia herself for commercial and naval use; and yet she disposes of this vast extent of coast, this perfect Eldorado in imagination, for a pitiful sum, if only a hundredth part of what is said to be true.

It appears by some of the reports that every foot of the soil of Alaska is frozen from five to six feet in depth, and only during a few summer months, in some portion of the country on the coast, the soil thaws out to the depth of ten or fifteen inches, and bears some poor vegetation.

It also appears that few minerals had been discovered there up to the time of the purchase by this Government, and that no coal had been found suitable for supplying vessels. I believe that all these telegrams and newspaper items which have come to us within the last few weeks are canards to help on the passage of this bill. And I believe that as soon as this is completed you will see other purchases and additions coming into light. We see by the papers that Denmark is ready to accept Seward's proposition for the sale of St. Thomas. And when she has settled a little difficulty now under negotiation between herself and France she will sell us St. Croix. Then you will hear that Greenland and Iceland are in the market; and I know not where this acquisition of territory will stop.

Now, while I am in favor of an absorption of territory, I want that absorption to be contiguous, in accordance with the policy of Russia. We have now a thousand million acres of unoccupied land, far surpassing anything pictured by the vivid fancy of the chairman of the committee. In my own State we have from fifty to seventy-five miles square of land, and though we have a population of about four million that tract of land is almost entirely uninhabited. It is not frozen territory like Alaska. It has a heavy growth of forest, it contains numerous lakes and streams, and is capable of cultivation for some kinds of grain. Yet the people pass it by and seek more productive fields in other sections of the country.

Now, sir, I say the time has not come when we need Alaska; but that time may come when we shall have absorbed Canada and all the territory of Great Britain contiguous to our own. Then, and not till then, do we need Alaska. Then we can take it at a sum far less than $7,200,000. I have the assurance of a friend of the Secretary of State that Alaska could have been had for $5,000,000 at the time the treaty was made if the Secretary had shown a little Yankee shrewdness. Now, while I am not opposed to absorption when duty and necessity demands it, I am opposed to acquiring territory not contiguous, of little or no value, frozen and barren, utterly useless to Russia. It must be to us entailing the control and care of thousands of savage Indians under a great expense at a time when we cannot afford it, our burdens now being heavy and onerous.

We have got to settle the question of the power of this House over appropriations of money under treaties. Voting the money and protesting is mere child's play. Let us now establish a precedent that for all time will compel a recognition of our voice in the treaty-making power upon all questions when the Constitution demands it, and we shall have added security to the future welfare of our country.

Mr. LOAN. Mr. Chairman; that Alaska was created for some wise purpose I have just as little doubt as I have had since the rebellion of the necessity of the infernal regions. Without such a place one might, in view of events which have recently transpired in this Republic, well doubt the wisdom and providence of the Creator. The use and the necessity for such a place as the infernal regions we now fully comprehend, but in relation to Alaska our information is so limited that conjecture can assign no use for it unless it was to demonstrate the extent of folly to which those in authority are capable in the acquisition of useless territory. That it is an utterly barren waste, wholly incapable of supporting a population of civilized people, is substantially admitted by those who speak most earnestly in favor of its acquisition, and that it is entirely worthless for any useful purpose is not seriously denied.

It is true that we have had most glowing descriptions given us by some who favor this appropriation of the beautiful scenery of Alaska, of the salubrity of its climate, of the productiveness of its soil, of its azure skies and balmy breezes, of its boiling springs and brimstone vapors, of its vast mineral wealth, of its vast deposits of coal, iron, and copper; of its mines of cinnabar, silver, and gold, and of its brilliant diamonds of the largest size and purest water, lying around in the utmost profusion. And I acknowledge the pleasure derived from listening to these graphic descriptions drawn from the prolific imagination of some of our most gifted orators.

But everything that is pleasant to hear is not therefore necessarily accurate and truthful. Many of us have heard the pleasing stories of the Arabian Nights' Entertainment and of Gulliver's Travels, and of Baron Munchausen, and yet I doubt if the most zealous admirers of Alaska believe all these stories to be true, albeit there are none of them more improbable or unreasonable than are those told us of Alaska.

Alaska being the desolation that even its friends concede it to be, it may be well asked why we should appropriate $7,200,000 in gold to acquire it.

One enthusiastic gentleman, drawing on his memory for a poetical quotation, hastens to reply—

"No pent-up Utica contracts our powers,
The whole, the boundless continent is ours."

"Advance the flag to the frozen regions of the North, and extend the blessings of liberty and universal suffrage, without regard to race or color, sex or condition, to the utmost verge of the universe"—to all of which I most cordially say amen, if it is not to be done at our expense.

Another friend of this measure, and who, I believe, is also a great admirer of General Grant, and especially of his strategic movements in military operations, is greatly desirous of securing a position in Alaska as a flank movement against Great Britain, by means of which we will have British Columbia between the upper and nether millstone, and we will thereby be enabled to grind that country out of Great Britain. In this connection I would suggest to those who favor flank movements that it might also be very judicious to secure Greenland and Iceland as strategic points to operate against Great Britain; and I can assure my venerable friend from Pennsylvania that the boiling springs of Iceland are much larger and hotter than are those of Alaska. But a much more extended flank movement could be made against the British possessions in Australia, if we could secure a position on the Antarctic continent, say in the vicinity of Mount Erebus or of Mount Terror. I am unable to give any assurance as to the hot springs there; but I have no doubt the fires in the mountains will be perfectly satisfactory to all who explore them.

Returning to the upper and nether millstone argument, I desire to suggest that since the birth of this nation the success that others have met with in grinding territory out of the British Government has not been of that eminent character that ought to induce us to try that process on Great Britain. If I remember aright, we have had some contests with that Government on the subject of territory, and perhaps some of our friends from Maine could inform us of the extent of the territory we acquired, or lost, on account of disturbances on the Aroostook. And at a later date I remember something of a political war-cry of "54-40 or fight." We did not fight, and I would be glad to know from my grinding friend how much territory we acquired as a condition of peace. My recollection is that our boundary was dropped to 49°, and that instead of gaining we lost 6° 40' of territory on that occasion.

The fact is, experience has proved that as grinders of other nations we are not a success, and if we ever acquire British Columbia it will not be by the grinding process, but most likely we will buy it as we have done in the case of all our other acquisitions. We bought Louisiana and Florida, annexed Texas, and then assumed her debts for a greater amount than she was ever worth. We acquired New Mexico and California under a treaty of peace, by which we stipulated to pay for them all they were worth, and afterward we purchased Arizona and the Mesilla valley. We have never acquired any territory, so far as I am advised, by force, and in the present condition of this country I most earnestly protest against taking position in Alaska for the purpose of appropriating British Columbia by force. In former times the grinding process would have been objected to as a means of acquiring territory, because of its dishonesty; but in these latter days, in view of the modern practices, it is very possible that such ideas will be considered somewhat out of fashion and entitled to no consideration.

And there are some who urge as a reason why this appropriation should be made that it would be so humiliating to have our flag hauled down in Alaska. I ask such how came the flag there, and by what authority was it raised there? It is there without the lawful authority of this Government, and was placed there by a set of intriguing speculators as one of the means to induce Congress to make this appropriation. I will never consent to have the flag lowered in any place that justly owes its allegiance to this Government, but I am not willing to permit intriguing demagogues to traffic on the patriotic sentiment of our people, and to invoke their pride in the supremacy of their flag as a means to unjustly prize money out of their pockets. The Representatives of the people should teach all such "Jeremy Diddlers" a lesson that will forever put an end to all such confidence games.

Another class of gentlemen favor this appropriation for the sake of perpetuating the friendship of Russia. While it is our policy as well as our desire to maintain amicable relations with all Governments, I am sure the people of this Republic will never consent to buy the friendship of any nation. If Russia or any other nation can afford to break the bonds of friendship that now exist between us, however much we might regret it, we could never consent to buy their restoration with money. We stand the equal of any nation, and we will not accept the friendship of any on terms that imply our inferiority.

If Russia will ask us to give her the price of Alaska as a donation because she is in distress, and the gift would be accepted as a favor conferred, I should have no objection to make the gift, for the sum of money demanded is but a trifle to us; and I should be willing to oblige a friend with such a trifle, but when Russia comes in the character of a "Jeremy Diddler," claiming the fruits of the confidence game which he has been playing on some of our agents, who are either incapable or unwilling to protect the interest and the honor of our country and threatens us with his displeasure if we refuse our consent to the swindle, I respectfully ask to be excused from acceding to his unjust demands. And if the Russian Government can do without our friendship I think we can survive its displeasure.

The price named in this appropriation is not worth an hour's debate if that was all there was in it, but the questions incidental to it are of the very gravest character. If approved by this House it furnishes a precedent which establishes the right of the Executive, by and with the approval of two thirds of the Senate, to acquire territory and annex it to the Republic to any extent they please, and to pledge the credit of this Government for such sums of money as they please in payment therefor, without the consent of the Representatives of the people and against the will of the people. This I do not believe can be lawfully done, and it would be very impolitic and unwise for us by our action to give any countenance or support to such usurpation. In Governments precedents almost at once acquire the force of positive law, and all such usurpations of power should be promptly suppressed.

In yielding our assent to the usurpation of the Executive, and the Senate in recognizing their right to acquire territory and annex it to the Republic without the consent of Congress, we incur a still greater danger to the Republic in this: that a concession of the right to acquire and annex territory by treaty necessarily carries with it the right by a treaty to dispose of and transfer the territory of the United States—a doctrine subversive of the fundamental principles of the Government and one which the people of this country will not tolerate for a moment.

Returning again to Alaska, the acquisition of this inhospitable and barren waste would never add one dollar to the wealth of our country or furnish any homes to our people. To suppose that any one would willingly leave the mild climate and fruitful soil of the United States, with its newspapers and churches, its railroads and commerce, its civilization and refinement, to seek a home among the Aleutes in the regions of perpetual snow, is simply to suppose such person to be insane. Besides, we have territory largely in excess of any demand for it, and we are seeking to induce emigration from Europe by all means that we can command. We are seeking to establish agencies of emigration and are substantially offering premiums to induce emigrants to come and occupy our rich, productive, but unsettled lands. On the rich soils of the Mississippi valley, under the mild climate of the temperate zone, we have room for one hundred million souls without crowding. The iron mines of Missouri adjacent to inexhaustible coal-fields can furnish, at the lowest rates, all the iron the world will want for the next five hundred years. Then why talk of the iron of Alaska as an inducement for its purchase?

The copper mines of Lake Superior, of Missouri, Nevada, and of California are ample to meet all the demands of the Republic for the next one thousand years. "The Comstock lode" in Nevada has already furnished more than eighty million dollars of gold and silver bullion, and the price of Alaska applied to the construction of the Sutro tunnel would open to the mining enterprise of this country known deposits of silver and gold that would furnish more bullion to the wealth of the Republic than all other mines in the world produce. Why buy Alaska for the sake of its contingent mines that could, if they exist, only be worked in eternal snow and ice? As to the diamonds said to exist in Alaska, better can be picked up any day on the streams of California. These gems are known in the markets of the world as California diamonds—beautiful but inexpensive jewels.

Alaska is utterly worthless, and if it were otherwise we have no earthly use for it. Our people do not wish to emigrate there, and if they did we have no population to spare, but we have territory in excess of our wants. General Wilson, of the Land Office, in making the best plea he could for Alaska, says there are twelve million acres of land on which grass will grow. Suppose it is so; what does it amount to? It was but the other day the Senate ratified a treaty by which the United States gave to a citizen eight hundred thousand acres of the finest agricultural lands the sun ever shone upon; and now the Senate has under consideration another treaty by which it is proposed to give to a railroad company, said to be insolvent, nearly nine million acres more of similar lands, all situate in the flourishing State of Kansas—in the very heart of the Republic. Why the necessity of buying lands in the frozen regions of Alaska when we are almost daily giving away the best lands of the world? Let him answer who can.

But, as I said before, the purchase-money for Alaska is the smallest consideration connected with its purchase. If the purchase is consummated we must provide laws for its government; we will have to have a Governor and secretary, and other territorial officers; a territorial Legislature and judges of courts; a member in Congress, with his mileage, to look after the interest of the Territory; and we must have a coast survey and a geological survey and a mineralogical survey; we must have forts erected and soldiers sent there to guard our possessions; and we will require naval stations on that coast and harbors for our fishing fleet. The sum total of all of which will at first require us to draw from the pockets of our over-taxed constituents not more than twenty-five or fifty million dollars per annum. But when we have been there long enough to provoke a war with the Indians—and I see by the papers that it is said they are already showing signs of hostility—and our present managers of Indian wars on the plains have finished the business there, and have transferred themselves with their experience to those distant and new fields of operation, it is not unreasonable to suppose that they can very readily swell the costs of our possessions in Alaska to more than one hundred million dollars per annum.

And for what are we asked to incur this enormous annual expense? Not for any material benefit of our people—not for one dollar's return to the Treasury. One of our most eminent statesmen, and one of the most eloquent advocates of this purchase who has yet spoken in its favor, in a closely-printed double-column pamphlet of forty-eight pages, sums up as the strongest reasons for this purpose the following:

"An object of immediate practical interest will be the survey of the extended and indented coast by our own officers, bringing it all within the domain of science and assuring to navigation much-needed assistance, while the Republic is honored by a continuation of national charts, where execution vies with science, and the art of engraving is the beautiful handmaid. Associated with this survey, and scarcely inferior in value, will be the examination of the country by scientific explorers, so that its geological structure may become known with its various products, vegetable and mineral. But your best work and most important endowment will be the republican government, which, looking to a long future, you will organize, with schools free to all and with equal laws, before which every citizen will stand erect in the consciousness of manhood. Here will be a motive power, without which coal itself will be insufficient. Here will be a source of wealth more inexhaustible than any fisheries. Bestow such a government, and you will bestow what is better than all you can receive, whether quintals of fish, sands of gold, choicest fur, or most beautiful ivory."

Observe what our country is to gain by the acquisition of this territory. The privilege of making a "survey of the extended and indented coast by our own officers, bringing it all within the domain of science and assuring to navigation much needed assistance." Who wishes to navigate those inhospitable regions? "While the Republic is honored"—mark the words—is honored at a cost of at least $100,000,000 per annum "by a continuation of national charts, where execution vies with science and the art of engraving is the beautiful handmaid;" and then we will also acquire the right to make an "examination of the country by scientific explorers, so that its geological structure may become known with its various products, vegetable and mineral."

Why not wait to make such examinations until something is known of these matters in Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, Nevada,

Idaho, Montana, and Dakota. There within our own territory are ample fields for our explorers for the next one thousand years. But a stronger reason advanced by this advocate of Alaska is the "republican government, which, looking to a long future, will be organized" there, "with schools free to all." Would it not be just as well to wait for the establishment of free schools in Alaska for the Aleutes and Esquimaux until we have provided such institutions at home for the benefit of the children of the Republic? There is at present no necessity for us to purchase at great expense the frozen regions of Alaska for the humane purpose of establishing free schools there. Ample opportunity for our benevolence in that direction sufficient to exhaust our present ability meets us at every step.

[Here the hammer fell.]

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Here the committee rose informally, and the Speaker having resumed the chair,

Mr. HOPKINS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 366) to incorporate the National Hotel Company of Washington city;

An act (H. R. No. 869) prescribing an oath of office to be taken by persons from whom legal disabilities shall have been removed;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 324) to extend the time for the completion of the West Wisconsin railroad; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 154) in relation to the settlement of the accounts of certain officers and agents who have disbursed public money under the direction of the chief of engineers.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was presented by his Private Secretary, Mr. W. G. MOORE, who also announced that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

On July 3, 1868,

An act (H. R. No. 347) for holding terms of the district court of the United States for the southern district of Illinois at the city of Cairo in said State;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 312) relative to the pay of the Assistant Librarian of the House;

An act (H. R. No. 411) for the relief of Almira Wyeth;

An act (H. R. No. 523) granting a pension to James S. Todd;

An act (H. R. No. 671) granting a pension to the widow of Henry Keneday;

An act (H. R. No. 775) granting a pension to Rebecca Jane Kinsel;

An act (H. R. No. 780) for the relief of Martha M. Jones, administratrix of Samuel T. Jones;

An act (H. R. No. 1129) for the relief of the widow and children of Colonel James A. Mulligan, deceased; and

An act (H. R. No. 236) granting a pension to John Q. A. Keck, late a private in the third Missouri cavalry.

On July 6, 1868,

An act (H. R. No. 1027) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Black river in Lorain county, Ohio; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 218) to correct an act entitled "An act for the relief of certain exporters of rum."

On July 7, 1868,

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 321) in relation to the erection of a bridge in Boston harbor;

An act (H. R. No. 503) for the relief of William B. Todd;

An act (H. R. No. 502) to incorporate the congregation of the First Presbyterian Church of Washington; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 96) for the relief of John Sedgwick, collector of internal revenue, third district, California.

EVENING SESSION DISPENSED WITH.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that there is no member who desires to speak at the night session this evening, but, if the session can be extended until half-past five o'clock, probably all those who desire to speak to-day on this question can make their speeches before that time. If there is no objection, the order for a night session will be dispensed with, and the committee will remain in session until such time as they see fit to rise. The Chair hears no objection, and the evening session will be dispensed with.

PURCHASE OF ALASKA.

The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union then resumed its session.

Mr. SPALDING. Mr. Chairman, I had an opportunity some months ago of giving to the House and the country my views in regard to the law which governs cases of this kind under the Constitution of the United States. I agree with the minority of the committee most fully in their opinion that this House has a constitutional right to judge in regard to the expediency of any treaty which brings into action any constitutional power that is devolved upon Congress, as the power of appropriating money is one confessedly.

I need say nothing further upon that branch of the subject except to say that the resolution which I now read and a copy of which I once introduced for the action of this House, and which is now in fact in Committee of the Whole for consideration, I should be glad to see adopted here by this Congress:

That when a treaty stipulates regulations on any subject submitted by the Constitution to Congress, it must depend for its execution as to such stipulations on a law or laws to be passed by Congress, and that it is the constitutional right and duty of the House of Representatives in all such cases to deliberate on the expediency or inexpediency of carrying such treaty into effect, and to determine and act thereon as in their judgment may be most conducive to the public good.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment to ask him a question?

Mr. SPALDING. No, sir; not for a moment. Now, sir, in the face of that admission, which I give to the gentleman to its fullest extent, I say that I am prepared to vote for the appropriation of $7,200,000 to pay for the acquisition of the Russian empire in America. I should be prepared to do so, sir, if this question was now in its inception. If we were just now negotiating a treaty of that sort, I would be prepared to say that even under all the present embarrassments of our Treasury I would vote the appropriation of $7,200,000 to acquire a property so valuable to our nation as I believe Alaska to be.

Notwithstanding all the sneers that have been cast on this country, I maintain that if that property were now susceptible of being turned into an article of merchandise, individuals would take it off our hands and pay us two or three million dollars for the bargain. I believe that if the Government once paid for this country, and could give a lease of it for twenty-five years to individuals to go and take from it the profits that might be derived from its minerals, from its forests, from its furs, and from its fisheries, they would not only pay to us the purchase-money and millions more, but would pay us interest on the purchase-money from year to year. I have no question of that. But I say again that, were the Russian possessions in America made up of icebergs, and those icebergs covered with walrus, I would still give the purchase price of that country under present circumstances; for I think I can show that the honor and dignity of this great nation are now involved in carrying out this treaty by paying the purchase price.

Sir, last November the honorable member from Wisconsin [Mr. WASHBURN] introduced into this House a resolution of warning to our negotiators against making any more treaties of acquisition which should call for appropriations from the Treasury of the United States in order to carry them into effect, and his resolution may be regarded as a very proper one. It says:

"That in the present financial condition of the country any further purchases of territory are inexpedient, and this House will hold itself under no obligation to vote money to pay for any such purchases unless there is greater present necessity for the same than now exists."

But mark what my honorable friend said further to us, the members of the House, upon that occasion:

"Mr. Speaker, I do not intend that resolution to apply to the purchase of Walrusia. That is something that has already transpired and it may be that this House will feel itself under obligations to sanction what has been done there."

True, true! The promptings of the gentleman's own heart at that moment told him that he could not remonstrate against carrying into effect the treaty made for the acquisition of what he was pleased to term "Walrusia," for, Mr. Chairman, we had then negotiated fairly for the purchase; we had ratified the treaty; we had exchanged ratifications with the Russian Government; and we had sent our officials with the flag of the United States to take manual possession of the property, and that without one single note of remonstrance on the part of the Congress of the United States or any citizen of the United States.

And now let me ask, we being in actual possession of this extensive country, a region equal to about one fifth of the whole empire of the United States, having taken that possession from the emperor of the Russias through his accredited agents, are we now, at this late period, to turn on our heel and say that we will not pay the purchase money?

Mr. Chairman, after answering the argument which fell from one of my esteemed colleagues [Mr. SHELLABARGER] upon this subject, I shall give to the House an example which has really called me to my feet on this occasion, an example of legislation which we ought to respect and to which we ought to adhere.

My colleague said that we were embarking in a new political enterprise, that we were endeavoring to acquire territory where there is no contiguity of territory with our own possessions, that we were acquiring foreign possessions. Sir, as an American citizen, and a republican at that, I deny that any territory upon this western continent is to be deemed foreign to the Government of the United States when it seeks to extend its limits. I believe that if anything under the heavens be fated, it is that the American flag shall wave over every foot of this American continent in course of time. This proud Republic will not culminate until she rules the whole American continent, and all the isles contiguous thereunto.

Mr. PIKE. Including South America.

Mr. SPALDING. Including South America, by all means. Now, sir, is there no contiguity between our possessions and the possessions of Russia in America? There would have been contiguity if we had not foolishly conceded to Great Britain the right to interpose between the parallel of 49° and the parallel of 54° 40'. I recollect very well when I was advocating the election of a certain statesman to the presidential chair, our rallying cry was, "fifty-four forty or fight." But the line "fifty-four forty" was abandoned, and we relinquished to Great Britain a great share of intervening territory in these six parallels of latitude. However, there is now almost a continuous line, for we are told by the learned chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs [Mr. BANKS] that for about three hundred miles on the Pacific coast there is a narrow strip of territory on the ocean which belonged to Russia, and which this treaty conveys to the United States, bringing down the continuity about half way through these six parallels of latitude.

Therefore the principle is not stretched very much, even if it be, as contended for by my colleague, [Mr. SHELLABARGER], that there is no contiguity between the territory of the United States and Alaska or Russian America.

I wish to say to this committee now, that after we have fairly negotiated a treaty with Russia, after that treaty has been ratified by the respective Powers, after ratifications have been exchanged between the high contracting parties, and more especially after we have sent our official agents to receive manual possession of the territory itself, and still hold possession of it without any remonstrance, if we refuse to pay the purchase money we put ourselves in the same position that Louis Philippe was in when he came very near inciting a contest between the United States and France, by reason of a non-compliance with a treaty made at Paris in 1831.

During the consulate and empire of Napoleon aggressions had been made upon the commerce of the United States to that extent that our claims upon the French Government had amounted to millions of money. For a long series of years, for a quarter of a century, perhaps, our claims were unheeded. But during the reign of Louis Philippe, and during the administration of Andrew Jackson, a treaty was negotiated at Paris by which the French Government agreed to liquidate these claims for spoliation upon American commerce by paying to our Government the sum of 25,000,000 francs. This sum was to be paid in annual installments. The first installment became due and no money was paid; no appropriation of money was made by the French Chamber of Deputies. The second installment became due, and the third, and still no money was paid.

Finally the ire of Old Hickory was aroused, and he communicated, in a message to Congress, in December, 1834, his ultimatum upon the subject. He said that the treaty having been fairly negotiated, having been ratified by the respective contracting Powers, and the ratifications having been duly exchanged, it was the business of the French Government to make appropriations to pay the amount which they had agreed to pay us under that treaty. He said it became equivalent to a debt due to us by that country; and if it should not be paid within a reasonable time, our first resort under the law of nations would be to make reprisals upon the French commerce to make ourselves good in that amount of money; and if the French did not like the reprisals it lay with them to resort to war; but the United States, whether there came war or peace, was prepared to meet the issue, and the treaty must be complied with. And, sir, the House of Representatives at that time passed by a large majority a resolution sustaining that patriotic President, and insisting that by every principle of law the French Government was bound to pay the money under that treaty, or else we had the right to make reprisals upon the property of its subjects.

Mr. BANKS. That resolution was passed by a unanimous vote.

Mr. SPALDING. Now, sir, confessedly the treaty-making power of France was with the king; in accordance with the French constitution the king had the sole power of making treaties. He made and ratified that treaty on the part of France; our Government ratified the treaty on the part of the United States, and the ratifications were exchanged. It remained with the French Chamber of Deputies, and with that Chamber alone, to make appropriations of money; and they, assuming that the treaty was inexpedient and not proper to be carried into effect, refused to make the necessary appropriation. Now, how does that case differ from that of the American Congress at this hour?

Mr. HIGBY. I would like to ask the gentleman whether the House of Representatives in that instance objected to the exercise of the treaty-making power by the king without the concurrence of the Chamber of Deputies?

Mr. SPALDING. Not at all.

Mr. HIGBY. The principle was in our favor then?

Mr. SPALDING. Of course it was.

Mr. PIKE. Let me suggest that before the treaty was made there was a subsisting debt, the non-payment of which might have been made by us a cause of war prior to the treaty.

Mr. SPALDING. Yes, sir; I understand that kind of reasoning. But the French Chamber of Deputies did not admit the existence of the debt; they said there was no subsisting debt.

Mr. PIKE. We said there was.

Mr. SPALDING. They said that the negotiator on the part of France had improperly agreed to the payment of that sum of money, and that they would not make the appropriation. So that the question turned after all upon the terms of the treaty; and it was in virtue of the treaty that President Jackson and Congress were on the point of authorizing reprisals upon French commerce when Louis Philippe sent over here a minister to say that if we would wait a while he would endeavor to bring the Chamber of Deputies to terms; and they were brought to terms.

In view of this example which has been left on record by our American Congress and by our most patriotic American President, how can we at this late hour turn upon our heel and say to the Emperor of Russia, who has been our friend during at least one half a century, "Although this treaty has been fairly negotiated and fairly ratified, although we have taken possession of the territory six months after the treaty was negotiated, and with full knowledge of everything that is now set up by the House of Representatives in opposition to the fulfillment of the treaty, no protest or remonstrance being made by them—after erecting in that country our national standard and planting there our institutions, we now say we will not pay the money."

Why, Mr. Chairman, I have not long to stay in the Congress of the United States; within a few short months I shall go out of it; and I shall do so with pride if the character of this House should then be as untarnished as I believe it to be at this moment; but if I am obliged to go out of it drooping my head under a sense of national dishonor and national disgrace brought upon our great Republic by the action of this House, I shall wish I had never been a member at all. I have no idea my constituents would for one moment—saying nothing about parties, irrespective of parties—I say my intelligent constituents would hold me in contempt if I should refuse to vote this appropriation of $7,200,000 to carry out this treaty made in good faith with the Emperor of all the Russias. I cannot believe this committee will agree to any such movement. I have too much faith in the virtue, patriotism, and good faith of the House. Sir, I have done.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, addressed the committee. [His remarks will appear in the Appendix.]

Mr. BANKS. I object to the amendment as not in order. The bill is to execute a treaty, and the amendment is for an entirely different purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order on the ground that the bill is in its terms to carry into effect the treaty, to fulfil the stipulations of the sixth article thereof. The sixth article of the treaty requires the payment of $7,200,000. The Chair regards the question as not divisible, and no amendment to reduce the amount is germane. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I propose to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. RAUM. At this time?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Yes, at this time. This is like any other appropriation bill, and I take an appeal.

Mr. BANKS. I desire to say that if this is an appropriation bill that is before the committee, the amendment cannot come in because it is not authorized by law. No amendment can be offered to an appropriation bill that is not authorized by law, and therefore upon that ground which my colleague states, his amendment is clearly out of order.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. An appropriation can be limited in any way the House chooses.

Mr. BANKS. I call the attention of the Chair to the rule of the House that no amendment can be made to an appropriation bill that is not for a purpose authorized by law. This claim may be just; I do not assail its justice; but the payment of it is not authorized by any existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already ruled the amendment out of order, and the subject is not debatable. If the gentleman takes an appeal, the Chair will submit the question to the committee.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I should like to hear the amendment reported.

The Clerk read the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has decided that this amendment is not germane to the bill, and in addition to that it is an appropriation for which there is no law. From this decision the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] appeals, and the question is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?"

The question was put; and there were—ayes 18, noes 18; no quorum voting.

Mr. BANKS. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. MAYNARD. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAUM] desires to speak this evening, and I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will not break up the committee.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. If it is understood that there shall be a vote on the appeal when there is a quorum here, I shall be satisfied.

The CHAIRMAN. The appeal will be considered as pending to be voted on hereafter.

Mr. BANKS. Then I withdraw the motion that the committee rise.

Mr. RAUM. Mr. Chairman, at this late hour of a hot day, I can scarcely hope to have the attention of the committee.

Mr. HIGBY. If the gentleman will yield, I will move that the committee rise.

Mr. RAUM. There is to be no discussion on this bill to-morrow.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there is no probability of any further speaking on this subject until the time designated by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] when he proposes to call for the vote, except this evening, and the Chair does not know of any gentleman, except the gentleman from Illinois, who desires to speak.

Mr. RAUM. Mr. Chairman, if I can have the floor for a short time I will endeavor to present the views I entertain upon this very important question, which has been discussed with so much learning and so much ability by those who have preceded me. When I find myself differing with gentlemen of such great learning as the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] who has just taken his seat, the honorable gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SHELLABARGER,] who addressed the committee on Friday, and the other learned gentlemen who have addressed the committee on this very grave subject, I feel called upon to pause and to give the subject careful consideration before I make up my mind upon the legal questions involved. I approached the examination of this subject with a feeling averse to the purchase of Alaska; but, sir, my investigations have led me to the conclusion that good faith demands that the treaty for the purchase of that extensive territory shall be consummated by the passage of the bill now under consideration. The honorable gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] and the honorable gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHELLABARGER] have announced the doctrine that this treaty, because it provides for the payment of a sum of money, is not binding upon the United States until the action of this House is had upon the subject; and proceeding upon this ground, and adopting the minority report of the committee, they conclude that the President and Senate have made a bad bargain; and, therefore, the people of the United States should not ratify the treaty.

I propose very briefly to examine the question first stated, in reference to whether or not this treaty is binding upon the good faith of the people of the United States for its execution. In doing so, it will be necessary to go back and examine the original grounds upon which this treaty-making power rests, and see whether or not we can ascertain what was the understanding of those who made the Constitution at the time this treaty-making power was delegated to the President and the Senate. As a power to be executed by some portion of the Government, it is no new one. It is a power as old as organized government itself. It is a power which was recognized by all the great nations of the earth, at the time the Constitution of the United States was made by the wise men of 1776 and 1787. In framing a system of Government it was necessary to delegate the treaty-making power to some portion of the Government, and in conferring this treaty-making power upon the President, in conjunction with the Senate, the framers of the Constitution were guided by the precedent which they found in the constitution of England, by which the king was invested with the treaty-making power of that great nation. With us the treaty-making power must be exercised in pursuance of the Constitution. And my reading of that instrument is that the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, is authorized to exercise the treaty-making power. In Great Britain the sovereign has the absolute and unlimited power of making treaties for that country. A treaty made and executed by the queen of England binds not only all the subjects of the realm, but it binds the House of Commons and the House of Lords, and that, too, in the teeth of the fact that no appropriation of money can be made except by act of Parliament. Now, if this is the case with reference to the treaty-making power in England—and I presume that no one who is acquainted with that subject will gainsay it for a moment—I demand to know why it is, when that power is conferred upon the President of the United States, who, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, is to exercise it, it is not an absolute power in respect to proper subjects of the treaty-making power?

Mr. BOUTWELL. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. RAUM. Certainly.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Without expressing any opinion upon the propriety of this matter, I will state that it seems to me very clear that under the Constitution this treaty-making power is necessarily subject to this limitation: a treaty made by the President and Senate, which contemplates the appropriation of money, is not a treaty within the meaning of the Constitution until the appropriation of money has been made; and the Constitution being public law known to all mankind, if they deal with us they must take notice that under the Constitution no money can be drawn from the Treasury of the United States except by act of Congress, of which Congress the House of Representatives is a part; and the exercise of that power by the House must, in the nature of the case, be an exercise of the judgment of that House.

Mr. BANKS. It was exactly upon that ground that we threatened to make war upon France.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Very well; that did not change our Constitution.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAUM] allow me a moment at this point?

Mr. RAUM. Certainly.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. In this country revenue can be raised only by authority of law; by an act of Congress. In England the sovereign has sources of revenue separate from and independent of the action of Parliament. So that in that country the sovereign has money to appropriate which the President of this country does not have.

Mr. RAUM. I know upon what ground this supposed limitation rests. But I state to the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] and the honorable gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] that they lay down a principle behind which they wish to take shelter, which I say to them they must follow to its logical and legitimate conclusion. The power to appropriate money is no more sacred in this country than the power to make any other law which the Congress of the United States may in its discretion make.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. To raise money.

Mr. RAUM. Or to raise money; each requires an act of legislation. And if gentlemen object on the ground that a treaty providing for the payment of money cannot be executed until the House of Representatives agree to it, they must go forward to the legitimate conclusion of that proposition, and assume the inevitable consequence of their position, and conclude at once that if any act of legislation is required to enforce a treaty, the treaty cannot be binding upon the nation until the necessary legislation is first adopted.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman allow me to say a word to correct a misapprehension?

Mr. RAUM. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Pennsylvania. I understand the gentleman to say that in England the treaty-making power is vested entirely in the Crown.

Mr. RAUM. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Pennsylvania. It was conceded in the debate in Congress in 1796 upon Jay's treaty that the uniform usage in England was to submit all treaties, at least all treaties of this description, to Parliament, and that the final approval of all such treaties belonged to the jurisdiction of that body. More than that, I think it is unquestioned that, under the law of nations, as well understood by all the publicists, even an absolute monarch, so called, is not bound by a treaty which is not in accordance with the fundamental law of his empire.

Mr. BANKS. Let me say that no such doctrine as that stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania was conceded in the debate of 1796. On the contrary, it was denied absolutely; and it is not true of the English Government or the English Parliament in any sense whatever.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Pennsylvania. I think the debates will show that it was not questioned that such was the law.

Mr. RAUM. Mr. Speaker, the reading of the law of England by the gentleman from Pennsylvania does not accord with my reading of it. I understand that in the Crown of England is vested the absolute power to make treaties which bind all the people of the United Kingdom, including both Houses of Parliament. And, sir, what is the history of the exercise of the treaty-making power in England? Why, sir, divers treaties have been made by the British Crown; and the legislative branch of the Government always conforms its legislation to the treaties which have been thus made.

Then, sir, I lay it down as the law of the case, that under the laws of England, the sovereign of that kingdom has the unconditional and unlimited power of making treaties to bind all the people of the United Kingdom, including both Houses of Parliament. Such was the treaty-making power to which our British ancestors were accustomed; and it was in view of such exercise of that power under the British Crown that the treaty-making power was conferred upon the President of the United States by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Refer to the debates of the convention that framed the Constitution; refer to the Federalist, in which the most learned governmental writers of that day expounded the Constitution, and it will be found that they all concur in the opinion that it is for the President and the Senate to make treaties, and that all the people, including both Houses of Congress, are bound thereby, if the treaty is within the scope of the treaty-making power under the Constitution. And I lay it down as the law of this country, that wherever a treaty is made by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, if the treaty is within the scope of the treaty-making power under the Constitution, all the people of the United States are bound thereby, including the House of Representatives and the Senate.

But gentlemen say that it is the business of the House of Representatives particularly to originate the laws necessary to raise revenue and to appropriate money, &c. Conceding that to be true (and I understand it to be the law of the case) it is no limitation upon the exercise of the treaty-making power? What is the treaty-making power? It is the power conferred upon a branch of the Government for the purpose of making contracts with foreign countries; and the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, has the right to make a contract with a foreign nation to bind all the people of the United States, including both Houses of Congress.

I say this because the Constitution of my country says it; because the Constitution has conferred upon the President and the Senate a well-known power to be exercised without the interference of other branches of the Government.

But gentlemen have said that when there is presented to the House of Representatives a treaty which requires an appropriation of money, the House has the right to determine whether or not the treaty shall be executed. I concede that; there is no question about the truth of the proposition. The Congress of the United States has entire and absolute control over the appropriation of money for all purposes. Why, sir, suppose you pass a law authorizing any particular officer of the Government to make a contract for the purchase of commissary or quartermaster stores, to be paid for by subsequent appropriations of money; when that question comes before the House of Representatives you may or may not appropriate the money; you can do just as you please about it; but will any man pretend to say that a debt thus created under the sanctions of law would not be a subsisting claim against the Government, a just demand, which should be paid; and that the good faith of the nation would be bound to appropriate the money for the payment of such a claim? So it is in a case of this kind.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will yield to me for a moment, I desire to show that in what I stated awhile ago, though so strongly contradicted by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS,] I was not mistaken. I refer now to a speech of Mr. Gallatin, in the debates to be found on page 470 of the Annals of Congress, of 1795-96. He read a quotation from Blackstone, page 257, volume 1, to show that the power of treaty making in England is as extensively vested in the king as it possibly can be said to be here in our Executive. He then proceeded to show the operation of this limitation of the treaty-making power in England by the practice of Parliament. He says:

"It was always considered as discretionary with Parliament to grant money to carry treaties into effect, or not, and to repeal or not to repeal laws that interfere with them."

Again, on the next page, he says:

"On the same principle the King of Great Britain, when he mentioned the American treaty, promised to lay it before them in proper season, that they might judge of the propriety of enacting the necessary provisions to carry it into effect."

"It remains to be examined (said Mr. Gallatin) whether we are to be in a worse situation than Great Britain; whether the House of Representatives of the United States, the substantial and immediate Representatives of the American people, shall be ranked below the British House of Commons; whether the legislative power shall be swallowed up by the treaty-making authority as contended for here, though never claimed even in Great Britain."

I undertake to say, from my recollection of this debate, that it was conceded the practice was as I have stated it.

Mr. RAUM. In answer to the gentleman allow me to quote from an authority found in Story on the Constitution; and I wish to be brief in these quotations:

"The king of Great Britain is the sole and absolute representative of the nation in all foreign transactions. He can, of his own accord, make treaties of peace, commerce, alliance, and of every other description."

"Every jurist of that kingdom, and every other man acquainted with its constitution, knows, as an established fact, that the prerogative of making treaties exists in the Crown in its utmost plenitude; and that the compacts entered into by the royal authority have the most complete legal validity and perfection, independent of any other section. The Parliament, it is true, is sometimes seen employing itself in altering the existing laws to conform them to the stipulations in a new treaty; and this may have possibly given birth to the imagination, that its co-operation was necessary to the obligatory efficacy of the treaty. But this parliamentary interposition proceeds from a different cause; from the necessity of adjusting a most artificial and intricate system of revenue and commercial laws to the changes made in them by the operation of the treaty; and of adopting new provisions and precautions to the new state of things, to keep the machine from running into disorder." "The one can perform along what the other can only do with the concurrence of a branch of the Legislature."

That is precisely the condition of affairs in this country. While it is true the British Crown possesses absolute and unrestricted power to make treaties for Great Britain, the President of the United States can only make a treaty by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. What, Mr. Chairman, is the binding efficacy of a treaty? This subject is most exhaustively discussed in the Federalist. And Mr. Hamilton there says that the only sanction at best for the execution of a treaty is the good faith of the country.

Now, sir, when I come to look at this treaty made by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, I come to the conclusion that honor and good faith demand at the hands of the United States that the treaty should be executed in the spirit in which it was entered into.

Coming to the question as to the power of the House of Representatives to determine the propriety of executing the treaty, for it is nothing more nor less than executing it, why, sir, they have to exercise such a discretion in respect to this subject that they would in reference to any other subject involving the question of peace or war with a foreign country. If the House of Representatives has the power by any provision of the Constitution to nullify a treaty it can only be through the exercise of those powers which are conferred upon Congress in the Constitution. Under the Constitution Congress has the absolute power of making war; and if a treaty is made requiring an appropriation of money to execute it, and the Congress of the United States, in the examination of the subject, should come to the conclusion that it would be better for this country that we should break off our friendly relations with the foreign nation with whom the treaty was made rather than to appropriate the necessary money to carry out the treaty, as a matter of course, exercising the high prerogative of the people of the United States, they would have the control over the subject, and might say, "We will not carry out this treaty; we prefer to have your displeasure, and to risk the consequences; and you must either peacefully rescind the contract, or, if you choose, settle the question by an appeal to arms."

Mr. Chairman, by reference to the Journal of the Federal Convention you will see that our forefathers, when they came to frame the Constitution of the United States, discussed this whole subject of the treaty-making power, and after a most exhaustive debate they came to the conclusion that they would confer that power upon the President, to be exercised by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. On the 7th of September, 1787, a proposition was made to amend the second section of the second article of the Constitution, which devolved upon the President and Senate the treaty-making power, so that the House of Representatives should have a voice in the making of treaties. It was proposed to confer upon the House of Representatives the authority to join the Senate in ratifying treaties, but that proposition was voted down by a large majority.

Now, sir, I undertake to say that the treaty-making power, conferred as it is by the Constitution upon the President and the Senate, is a power which is to be exercised to the exclusion of all interference by the House of Representatives. And when this House shall undertake to say that a contract made by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, is not binding upon the people of the United States until it is confirmed by the House of Representatives, I say that it will be doing violence to the landmarks of the Constitution, and to all the memories which cluster around the adoption of that sacred instrument.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Pennsylvania. A single question. Suppose the contract imported a declaration of war, or involved it by an alliance offensive and defensive; what then?

Mr. RAUM. I have an answer for the gentleman from the Constitution itself. The Constitution devolves upon Congress the war-making power, and a treaty cannot be entered into so as to absorb the powers which are delegated to the Congress of the United States. The President and Senate cannot make war; that power is conferred upon the Congress of the United States.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Pennsylvania. Then am I to understand the gentleman as admitting that in those cases where Congress has power expressly conferred upon it its jurisdiction remains untouched, anything in the treaty made by the President and the Senate to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. RAUM. I answer the gentleman by saying that the powers which are delegated absolutely to the Congress of the United States cannot be executed by means of a treaty. But that is not the question before the House. The question is whether or not a contract made by the President and the Senate shall bind the people of this country when it is made in good faith? Not whether the House of Representatives may refuse to execute a treaty. But is a treaty made in good faith, and which is within the scope of the Constitution, binding upon the people. I affirm that a contract thus fairly and constitutionally made is binding upon the good faith of this nation without the approval of the House of Representatives.

Mr. Chairman, from the examination I have given this subject I have come to the conclusion that cases may arise where it would be the duty of Congress to refuse to execute a treaty; and to refuse to execute is all it can do. Congress does not ratify a treaty; it has only to execute the contract. If a treaty, although valid as being within the scope of the treaty-making power, was to devolve certain enormous consequences upon the country, such as would prove ruinous or dangerous to execute it, I, as one of the Representatives of this great people, would not hesitate to assume the responsibility of refusing to execute it, and to say to the foreign country, "You must not insist upon its execution; if you do we will go to war with you if need be rather than execute it."

But, sir, what shall we say of a treaty made in due form of law under all the sanctions of the Constitution, and within the unequivocal scope of the treaty-making power, when it is within the reasonable power of the people of the United States to execute it, when it does not devolve upon them the performance of any extraordinary duty or threaten any danger whatsoever? What shall we say when the Representatives of the people rise up in their places and declare that they will not carry out in good faith a treaty which the country is able to execute without doing any violence to its interests? Sir, as for me, I stand here ready to assist in carrying out such a treaty. I believe we can carry out this treaty not only without injury to this country, but with positive good. I believe in so doing we will aggregate to ourselves a great territory which will be a benefit to us. We will secure that distant territory which we are destined to have, and which will be of vast importance to us after the construction of our great thoroughfares penetrating to the Pacific coast.

Mr. PRICE. I would like to ask the gentleman a question if it will not embarrass him.

Mr. RAUM. I yield for a question.

Mr. PRICE. I understand the gentleman from Illinois to admit that occasions might arise under the treaty-making power, and under the Constitution as it exists, where the Representatives of the people would be not only fully justified, but it would be their duty to refuse to appropriate money.

Mr. RAUM. Refuse to execute the treaty; I do not stop at money. I refer to the performance of any legislative act.

Mr. PRICE. I understand, then, that that is the opinion of the gentleman.

Mr. RAUM. Yes, sir.

Mr. BANKS. That is what we all mean.

Mr. PRICE. That is the correct doctrine.

The question, then, is whether this is one of those occasions. I think it is; other gentlemen think that it is not.

Mr. BANKS. The theory of the gentleman from Iowa is that the treaty-making power may make any treaty provided it is not sent to this House. They may surrender the Constitution and the Government in any form provided they do not ask our concurrence. That is his theory.

Mr. PRICE. I do not hold any such theory. I see no common sense, no justice, no law in it. I have not held such a doctrine, and I hope I never shall.

Mr. RAUM. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman from Iowa I will say that the Congress of the United States holds within its hands the power to abrogate any treaty which may be executed in due form of law under the Constitution, and to assume for the people of the United States the whole responsibility which may result from an act of that kind. Not only may they refuse to execute a treaty which requires legislation, but they may abrogate all treaties which have been executed by legislation, or which by their terms do not require legislation for their execution. The Congress of the United States being the law-making power, and holding the sovereignty of the nation in its hands, has the power and the right, in exercising the sovereign will of this nation, to abrogate treaties or to execute treaties according to its sound discretion. That is my doctrine. The power to make treaties, the power to make contracts, and make them binding, is devolved upon the President and the Senate. It is for them to say whether or not they will make contracts. It is for us to say whether or not we will execute the contracts. That is the distinction.

Now, go through all the authorities. Go back to the time when this subject first sprang up in the House of Representatives, when the first treaty was made with Great Britain, and when an opposition House called upon General Washington, then President, to send down for their scrutiny all the instructions which had been given to our minister, for the purpose of making the treaty with Great Britain, and when they poised the subject in their minds whether or not they would execute the treaty what did General Washington say? He had assisted in framing the Constitution; he was recognized as one of the wise men of that day, who understood and expounded the Constitution as intelligently as any other person. He told the House of Representatives that the treaty which had been executed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, was binding upon the people of the United States, and that as it contained a statement of all the subjects of legislation necessary for the information of the House, he refused to comply with the request. What was the result on that occasion? Why, sir, the House acquiesced in the principle of that message of General Washington, and they passed a resolution declaring that they had no power to interfere in the making of a treaty, but they asserted the right just as I have asserted it here to-day, the right of the House of Representatives, whenever stipulations are made on subjects committed by the Constitution to Congress, to deliberate on the expediency of carrying them into effect. That is all there was of it, and the House of Representatives passed the necessary resolutions to carry the treaty into effect.

We are here to-day deliberating upon the expediency of carrying into effect the treaty with the emperor of all the Russias for the purchase of Alaska. Can we pay the money? Have we got it? We have it in the Treasury. We are able to pay it. We have the money at hand. It will be no extraordinary burden to the people of the United States to pay it. It will be no more than twenty cents apiece. We can pay it without injury to the people of the United States. Good faith requires that we should pay the money. Shall we refuse to do so? Shall we issue orders to that little handful of men, who to-day are standing around the stars and stripes up at Sitka, and tell them to haul down the old flag and return to California, that the people of the United States have taken a step backward, and have refused to execute a treaty entered into in good faith with the emperor of Russia, and which we can execute without inflicting any wrong upon the people of the United States, and in executing which we can carry out the great doctrine of expansion which animates the heart and mind of every American citizen. For one, sir, I say no, no, no. Mr. Chairman, if the United States has a traditional policy, a policy to which the people of the United States are attached, it is that of acquiring territory. I cannot express the doctrine in as apt terms as did the venerable gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SPALDING;] but I believe that in the lifetime of these boys who are acting as pages here to-day, the American flag will wave in triumph over the undivided territory of North America. I do not know so much about South America; but, so far as I am concerned, I am ready to see all of North America, from the North pole down to the Isthmus of Darien, under the sway of the United States of America.

And, Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to see the legitimate expansion of the United States retarded by the adoption of the dangerous and unwarrantable doctrine urged upon the consideration of the House. I do not wish to see the good name of this Republic tarnished by the adoption of a theory in respect to the treaty-making power not justified by a fair construction of the Constitution. I will never agree, and I trust that this House will never agree, that the binding efficacy of a treaty shall depend upon the conclusions of a body of men who, according to the laws of the country making such treaty, can take no part in agreeing upon its terms.

Sir, the United States as a nation is now in its infancy, our commercial relations are extending and becoming more and more important every year. The time is not far distant when we will be the leading commercial nation of earth. Let us not set a bad example in respect to the obligation of treaties; let us say to all the nations of the world that we execute in good faith treaties entered into by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Our citizens have claims against Great Britain which we regard as just, and the payment of which our minister has been urging for some time. Suppose, sir, that her Britannic Majesty Queen Victoria should conclude a treaty with this country, agreeing to pay a certain sum of money in settlement of the Alabama claims; and suppose further, sir, that the British Parliament should refuse to appropriate the necessary money to execute the treaty, is there a gentleman on this floor who would not regard such refusal as a violation of good faith, and would we not point to the British constitution and say that the treaty-making power is vested in the sovereign without limitation, and that an execution of the treaty upon the part of the British Government was necessary for the continuance of friendly relations between the two countries?

Such, sir, must be the inevitable result of a refusal upon our part to execute this Russian treaty. Refuse to execute it, and Russia will turn from us with scorn and contempt, and all Europe will scoff at the perfidious conduct of the western Republic.

Mr. Chairman, we cannot afford to barter away our national honor by a refusal to execute this treaty. The honorable gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] among other grounds of objection to the passage of this bill, insists that it is inexpedient to receive as citizens of the United States the few Russian citizens who inhabit Alaska. He seems to fear the extension of the suffrage to that people. Mr. Chairman, I must confess my surprise at hearing this sentiment come from the gentleman from Massachusetts. I thought that he was fully committed to the propriety and justice of the doctrine of the Declaration of Independence, that Governments derived their just powers from the consent of the governed; I supposed that he was fully imbued with the idea of the justice of extending the right of suffrage. For myself, sir, I see no cause of alarm in making American citizens of the forty or fifty thousand Russians now inhabiting Alaska, and of admitting them to the right of suffrage whenever Congress shall see fit to do so in the organization of a territorial government there.

Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to detain the committee much longer, but there is one point to which I wish to call attention, and that is the vast importance of acquiring a strong foothold along the whole Pacific coast with a view to aggregating the whole of the rich trade of the East, which will, with wise legislation, necessarily fall into our hands. That trade has been the prize of commerce for three thousand years. Solomon and those under his crown grew rich by that eastern trade. Jerusalem and Palmyra were made great cities by the eastern trade. So with Alexandria and Thebes; and at last it swung around Cape Horn to London, which is now the great distributing point for this trade, and which, per consequence, has grown to be the financial center of the world. Manifest destiny has pointed out a new route for this trade across the continent of America. There is no question about that. The trade of India alone is about five hundred million dollars. The trade of China has increased within the last six or eight years from $80,000,000 to $300,000,000. The trade of Japan is immense. We are now entering into new relations with that distant country. Five hundred million people live there, five hundred million producing population, who are to pour the wealth of their trade upon the Pacific coast of the United States, and across the continent of America, to be distributed at New York, Philadelphia, Boston, New Orleans, and other points on the seaboard, to the distant points across the Atlantic. Sir, within the lifetime of our young men, within the next fifteen or twenty years, I venture the prediction the total trade of that eastern country with the United States will reach $2,000,000,000. It is capable of indefinite expansion. Shall we reach forth our hand and grasp that rich trade which has made opulent every nation that has controlled it?

I say that Alaska from 54° 40' to the frozen regions gives us a valuable portion of the Pacific coast. The 5° 40' now owned by Great Britain will drop into our hands like a ripe pear. Then looking down southwest we behold that Mexico has a long line of coast; it, too, must belong to us. And, sir, I believe that by constitutional and peaceful means within twenty years Mexico will form a part of our glorious Republic, and that from five to seven new States will there be added to the Union; and then, sir, our coast line will extend from the Isthmus to the frozen regions of the North.

We will want railroads. We are now building one to the Pacific, and are pluming ourselves upon the tremendous undertaking. What would our trade in the West do to-day with one railroad? The roads from Baltimore, from Philadelphia, from New York, and from Boston westward are no more necessary now than an equal number of lines of railroad to the Pacific will be at a very early period. We must have more than one Pacific railroad. We must have a northern Pacific railroad. We must have the Kansas Pacific railroad. And we must have the International Pacific railroad provided for in House bill No. 847, from Cairo southwest through Missouri, Arkansas, and Texas, striking Mexico on the Rio Grande, and reaching the Pacific coast at San Blas or Mazatlan. The construction of all these railroads will aid in the aggrandizement of this great Republic by possessing the trade which must inevitably be developed on the Pacific ocean. And now, sir, in view of the existence of the law governing the treaty-making power as I have presented it, in view of the fact that good faith requires us to execute this treaty, and in view of the great law of expansion which must control the destiny of this country, I am ready to cast my vote for this bill to consummate the purchase of Alaska.

Mr. BANKS. I want to read a single extract from the document on Russian America, which was printed by order of the House, in reference to Major Kennicutt's passage through this country:

"In consequence of this suggestion he ultimately undertook, eight years since, his first trip by Lakes Superior, Winnipeg, Athabasca, and Great Slave lake down to Fort Simpson, where he spent the first winter; thence down the Mackenzie to the tide waters of its deltas; thence up the Pearl river to Fort McPherson; thence over the Porcupine mountains, the northern termination of the Rocky mountains, to the Porcupine river, and down to its junction with the Yukon, on the one hundred and forty-seventh degree of west longitude, where the British fur company have a large post over a degree on Russian territory."

There he died, and his dead body was carried down to Behring strait.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is mistaken; it was on a different expedition.

Mr. BANKS. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Pennsylvania. I did not dispute the fact that he had been as far as the junction of the Yukon and the Porcupine, but that the territory between the junction of those two rivers and New Labrador, a distance of one thousand miles, was unexplored.

Mr. BANKS. It has been explored, but Major Kennicutt died before making his report. If he had lived he would have given us invaluable testimony of this territory.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Pennsylvania. I say that the country was never explored, and we have never had any report of it.

Mr. BANKS. There was no report, because Major Kennicutt died before he could make it. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to; and the committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARFIELD reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the special order under consideration, being House bill No. 1096, making an appropriation of money to carry into effect the treaty with Russia of March 30, 1867, and had come to no resolution thereon.

REMOVAL OF DISABILITIES.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I report back from the Committee on Reconstruction a bill (H. R. No. 1355) for the removal of certain disabilities from the persons therein named. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at five o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITION.

The following petition was presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committee:

By Mr. GARFIELD: The petition of Charles E. Broyles, of Dalton, Georgia, for the removal of political disabilities.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, July 8, 1868.

Prayer by Rev. E. H. GRAY, D. D.

On motion of Mr. CONNESS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of the Interior communicating a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in relation to the appropriation for subsisting the Navajo Indians on the Bosque Redondo reservation, New Mexico; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate a report of the National Academy of Science, in conformity with the requirements of the act of incorporation, approved March 4, 1863, showing the operations of the National Academy of Science during the past year; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WILSON presented the petition of Nancy Smith, widow of Benjamin Holden Smith, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CATTELL presented a petition of citizens of New Jersey, praying an extension of the provisions of the thirty-third section of the bankrupt law; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FOWLER presented a petition of Robert Wilson, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion of Mr. CORBETT, it was—Ordered, That the petition of Henry Failing be referred to the Committee on Claims.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that he was directed to inform the Senate that in communicating the action of the House on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 606) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1869, amendment No. 223 was erroneously announced as having been agreed to, the same not having been agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HOWARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 550) providing for the sale of a portion of the Fort Gratiot military reservation, in St. Clair county, in the State of Michigan, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1354) to provide for the issue of arms for the use of the militia, reported it without amendment.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 571) to provide for the more economical administration of the government of the several Territories of the United States, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 306) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to remit the duties on certain articles contributed to the National Association of American Sharpshooters, reported it without amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 293) to regulate and limit the admiralty jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States in certain cases, to report it back with the expression of the opinion that it ought not to pass. It appears to the committee that the principles of maritime law that now prevail are the appropriate ones for the administration of justice, and this bill would be no improvement. I move its indefinite postponement to get it off the Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the following bills, reported them without amendment:

A bill (H. R. No. 218) granting a pension of seventeen dollars per month to David Dubigg, of Lynden, Vermont, father of late First Lieutenant Dennis Duhigg, of company M, first regiment Vermont artillery;

A bill (H. R. No. 258) granting a pension to George Truax, late a private in company H, first regiment Virginia volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 1164) granting a pension to Margaret Davis;

A bill (H. R. No. 1105) granting a pension to Elizabeth Cassidy;

A bill (H. R. No. 1166) granting a pension to Louisa M. Williston;

A bill (H. R. No. 1167) granting a pension to Esther Graves;

A bill (H. R. No. 1168) granting a pension to Frederic Denning;

A bill (H. R. No. 1169) granting a pension to Joseph B. Rodden;

A bill (H. R. No. 1170) granting a pension to Eliza M. Matthews;

A bill (H. R. No. 1171) granting a pension to William F. Nelson;

A bill (H. R. No. 1172) granting a pension to Lucinda J. Letcher;

A bill (H. R. No. 1173) granting a pension to Julia A. Barton;

A bill (H. R. No. 1174) granting a pension to Julia Carroll;

A bill (H. R. No. 1175) granting a pension to Cornelia Peaslee;

A bill (H. R. No. 1176) granting a pension to Mary Cover, widow of Samuel Cover, deceased, late a private in company G, of the fifty-sixth regiment of Pennsylvania volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 1177) granting a pension to Malinda Ferguson, widow of James Ferguson, late a private in company C, of the first regiment of Kentucky cavalry; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1178) granting a pension to Mary Merchant, mother of Timothy H. Pittsford, deceased, late a private in company G, of the first United States veteran engineer corps.

Mr. TRUMBULL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1206) to restore to certain parties their rights under the laws and treaties of the United States, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred a resolution as to the propriety of a law to authorize Indians to testify in certain cases, have instructed me to report it back and ask to be discharged from its further consideration, on the ground that the committee are of opinion that the Indians have a right to testify under the law as it stands and no statute is necessary on that subject.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 90) to authorize and require the administration of oaths in certain cases, and to punish perjury in connection therewith, recommend its indefinite postponement, being of opinion that the laws already authorize the chairmen of committees, both standing and special committees, to administer oaths. There is no necessity for the bill.

The motion to postpone indefinitely was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1194) to provide for the inauguration of State officers in Arkansas, North Carolina, South Carolina, Louisiana, Georgia, and Alabama, and for the meeting of the Legislatures of said States, direct me to report it back and recommend its indefinite postponement, the subject having been acted on.

The bill was indefinitely postponed.

Mr. TRUMBULL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the memorial of the National Board of Trade, praying the passage of an act to incorporate said National Board of Trade, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of W. S. Chipley, praying the release of his son, William Dudley Chipley, imprisoned by order of the military authorities in Georgia, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 576) relating to the district courts of Utah Territory, reported it with an amendment.

F. N. BLAKE.

Mr. POMEROY. If there is no further morning business, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1156. It is a private bill, and it will take but a moment of time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read by its title.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (H. R. No. 1156) authorizing the Commissioner of the General Land Office to issue a patent to F. N. Blake for one hundred and sixty acres of land in Kansas."

Mr. POMEROY. The facts are all set out in the preamble of the bill. Let the bill be read at length.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. The preamble recites that military bounty land warrant No. 82578 for one hundred and sixty acres was issued under the act of March 3, 1855, in the name of Betsey Foster, and by her sold and assigned to F. N. Blake, and thereafter lost by Blake; that Blake proved the loss and ownership of the warrant to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Pensions, and obtained the issue of a duplicate warrant and has located the same on the northeast quarter of section twenty-five, in township six south, of range one east, in the State of Kansas. The bill, therefore, directs the Commissioner of the General Land Office to cause a patent for the land to be issued to F. N. Blake, as if the duplicate land warrant had been assigned to him by the warrantee.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROCK ISLAND BRIDGE.

Mr. HARLAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 201.

The motion was agreed to; and the consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 201) in relation to the Rock Island bridge was resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the pending question being on the amendment reported by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to insert as an additional section:

SEC. 3. And be it further resolved, That any bridge built under the provisions of this resolution shall be constructed so as to conform to the requirements of section two of an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of certain bridges, and to establish them as post roads," approved July 25, 1866.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. MORTON. As this measure is a new one to me, I should like to have some one explain how it is that the Government of the United States is building this bridge. I do not know anything about it. I suppose there is some good reason for it.

Mr. HARLAN. When this question was up before I attempted to explain it. The Government has been building, and is still constructing, large works for an arsenal and armory on Rock Island, lying in the Mississippi river between the town of Rock Island, in Illinois, and the town of Davenport, in Iowa, and it is necessary to have a connection with each shore. This resolution provides for a bridge across the channel between the island and Illinois to be constructed entirely by the railroad company, and for a bridge between the island and the Iowa shore to be constructed jointly by the Government and the railroad company. The railroad company now have a structure across the river at that point which, it is insisted by the river men above and below, to some extent interferes with navigation, and it is thought desirable to have it torn out, and perhaps it ought to be torn out; and yet it answers all the purposes of the railroad for passing their trains. This bridge is intended to accommodate both a wagon-road and the railroad. It is provided that part of the expense shall be borne by the Government and part by the railroad company, and in that case the old bridge is to be torn out, and in that way remove what is regarded as an obstruction of navigation. The people of St. Louis are very anxious to have it done, and all the people above on the river, in Iowa, Illinois, Wisconsin, and Minnesota, are very anxious to have it done.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. This is a resolution that ought not to be considered in the morning hour. If it is to pass I desire to occupy more time than there is now left, for I mean to fully expose the entire character of this measure. We have made liberal appropriations for Rock Island. I do not object to the appropriations for the establishment of an arsenal and armory at Rock Island. But here is a proposition, brought forward in the first instance in an appropriation bill some years ago, making an appropriation of barely $200,000 for building a bridge from Rock Island to the Iowa shore, and of that sum the railroad company was to pay one half, and one half of the expense of keeping the bridge in repair was also to be paid by the railroad company. Subsequently, or at some time, a report was made making estimates for this bridge, and the estimates were, as I have been informed, $1,200,000. Now, without stating a word as to the amount of appropriation needed, a new proposition comes in here that the bridge shall be built not to exceed the estimate of the cost, which is, as I believe, $1,200,000. We have appropriated and paid out something like three hundred thousand dollars to extinguish the private rights upon this island. We then paid $100,000 in order to acquire possession of some water-power upon the island. We have appropriated six or seven hundred thousand dollars to establish the arsenal and armory. I understand that it is the purpose here to have an establishment for which at least we have at present no use, that shall cost $20,000,000, which is to exceed anything in the known world for its extent, magnificence, and beauty. But that is not the question that is under consideration here.

Why should the United States be called upon to build a bridge here at all? The facilities needed for reaching the Illinois shore are very small and inexpensive. We paid for one bridge, reaching to the Illinois shore, the amount of $11,000. That has been swept away, but it could be replaced at a very small expense compared with this on the grand scale of a million or twelve hundred thousand dollars.

But this bill which it is proposed to pass in the morning hour as an example of the policy of this Congress on the subject of internal improvements, proposes not only to build a bridge at that expense, but to take upon itself the responsibility of tearing down another, of abating it as a nuisance, and thereby rendering the United States Government liable for at least from five to eight hundred thousand dollars more.

And why should this be done? Is there any more reason why the United States should build a railroad bridge here for a private corporation than there would be at Troy? We have an arsenal opposite Troy, the Watervliet arsenal, and there is a railroad that crosses the Hudson to West Troy, where the arsenal is located.

If the Senators from New York were to come forward here and ask us to build a bridge there that would accommodate not only the great Central railroad from Troy to Schenectady, but passenger and foot travel, would the Senate listen to it for a moment? Take the case of Massachusetts. You have an armory and arsenal at Springfield, and the Massachusetts Western railroad has a bridge crossing at Springfield. Suppose the people of West Springfield should ask to have a bridge built there by Congress, for the use of the railroad and for accommodation of public travel, would the Senate of the United States listen to it for a single moment? And yet in both the cases I have mentioned there is as much reason why the United States should embark in this extraordinary enterprise as there is at Rock Island. I do not think our present revenues warrant any such expenditures.

Mr. MORTON. I should like to ask my friend from Vermont one question. If the Government of the United States authorized the building of a bridge at Rock Island which turned out to be an obstruction to navigation and a nuisance, is it under any legal obligations to build another one in its place, if it assumes the responsibility of pulling down this nuisance?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I have no question in relation to the equity of the claim the railroad company would have if we should go and destroy their property. If the courts, which have been appealed to, refuse to declare the bridge a nuisance, what attitude would the United States be in going forward and authorizing the War Department to abate and destroy it without any examination and without any ceremony?

But, Mr. President, this is a bill that ought to receive the careful scrutiny of Congress. It is time that we adopted some policy and adhered to it, a policy that we are willing to stand by, in relation to internal improvements. I am unwilling myself to vote for an appropriation of this extravagant character, which is for the benefit mainly of a private corporation, and so far as the interests of the United States are concerned they do not amount to a fraction of the whole case.

Mr. MORTON. There is a somewhat important lesson to be learned from this bill. The United States authorized the construction of a bridge at Rock Island, which turned out to be a serious obstruction to navigation.

Mr. RAMSEY. The Senator from Indiana is misinformed. The United States never authorized the construction of the old bridge. It was built there in virtue of laws of Illinois and Iowa.

Mr. MORTON. I may be mistaken about that, but the bridge turns out to be an obstruction to navigation. The Government resolves to pull it down, and may, therefore—I will not deny it—be under some obligation to bear some portion of the expense of building another bridge. I simply want to refer to this to show the importance of not allowing any more bridges to be built over these rivers, and especially the Ohio river, that the Government may afterward be called upon to pull down and then to rebuild at its own expense. I say there are bridges now authorized to be built over the Ohio river and applications pending here to build others over that river, which the Government will be called upon to pull down and afterward to rebuild at its own expense.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I move to strike out the second section.

Mr. HARLAN. I hope that will not be done.

The section proposed to be stricken out was read, as follows:

SEC. 2. And be it further resolved, That in case the Rock Island and Pacific Railroad Company shall neglect or fail, for sixty days after the passage of this resolution, to make and guaranty the agreement specified in the act of appropriation aforesaid, approved March 2, 1867, then the Secretary of War shall be, and is hereby, authorized and required to direct the removal of the existing bridge and to direct the construction of the bridge aforesaid, and expend the money appropriated for that purpose in said act; and the said Rock Island and Pacific Railroad Company shall not have, acquire, or enjoy any right of way or privilege thereon, or the use of said bridge, until the agreement aforesaid shall be made and guaranteed according to the terms and conditions of said act of appropriation. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent with these resolutions are hereby repealed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I ask for the yeas and nays on this amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I merely desire to have the Senate notice that this section is the one which authorizes and requires the Secretary of War to tear down the existing railroad bridge there.

Mr. HARLAN. I do not understand the logic of the Senator from Vermont. He first tells the Senate that this measure is in the interest of a corporation, and then moves to strike out that feature of it which is unfavorable to the corporation to enable them to keep their present structure and defeat the whole enterprise, for of course if that is stricken out the company will have no inducement to conclude the contract which the first section provides for.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. My logic is that I desire to kill the bill. If I can kill one part of it at one blow I desire to do it, and with another blow the rest of the bill. If we are to be involved in an expenditure here of $1,800,000 I desire to strike off $600,000 if I possibly can.

Mr. HARLAN. I am gratified at the last announcement of the Senator. He says the purpose of this amendment is to destroy the joint resolution. I hope, therefore, that those who are friendly to this measure will understand it in the light in which the Senator has last presented it.

I wish to correct another statement made by the Senator, also, in his former speech, and that was that after an appropriation of $200,000 had been made an investigation had been had and a report of commissioners. If I understand the history of this transaction correctly—I was not in the Senate at the time, however—a commission was appointed under the direction of the War Department and made a report, and in pursuance of that report an appropriation of $200,000 was made. I ought to say here that I think the Secretary of War originally approved the proposition, and the present Secretary of War also approves it in a letter which I have in my hand.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not know that I have any opposition to this resolution, but I rise simply, as the yeas and nays are called, to understand if I can what the question really is. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa, who has charge of this resolution, by what authority this bridge has been constructed?

Mr. HARLAN. I think under a law of the State of Illinois, and perhaps a similar law enacted by the Legislature of Iowa.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Has it ever been adjudged a nuisance or obstruction to navigation?

Mr. HARLAN. Litigation has been in progress for a number of years, eight or ten years, I think, on that subject. It never has been removed. It has not been removed in pursuance of any decree of any court. I do not remember the history of the litigation on the subject; but it has been in the courts for a long series of years, and is regarded as a nuisance by those engaged in navigating the river. It is an obstruction to some extent, I have no doubt; perhaps a serious obstruction.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. One question further. Do we understand that this is a direction to the Secretary of War in a certain contingency to remove the bridge?

Mr. HARLAN. Yes, sir, I so interpret the resolution, that in case the company does not comply with the contract the Secretary of War shall have authority to tear down the bridge that is now regarded as a nuisance. But I ought to state, for the information of the Senator and of the Senate, that this resolution was drawn up in the War Department in pursuance of an understanding entered into between the railroad company and the War Department. So I do not apprehend that there will be any difficulty on that subject whatever. I do not suppose that the necessity will arise for tearing down the old bridge by the War Department.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Then it is to enforce the conditions of a certain contract by which the company undertake to do that particular thing?

Mr. HARLAN. That we may have the history of the whole affair, I ask leave to read the original law, to be found on page 485 of the fourteenth volume of the Statutes-at-Large:

"For the erection of a bridge at Rock Island, Illinois, as recommended by the chief of ordnance, $200,000: Provided, That the ownership of said bridge shall be and remain in the United States, and the Rock Island and Pacific Railroad Company shall have the right of way over said bridge for all purposes of transit across the island and river, upon the condition that the said company shall, before any money is expended by the Government, agree to pay and shall secure to the United States, first, half the cost of said bridge; and second, half the expenses of keeping said bridge in repair, and upon guarantying said conditions to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War by contract or otherwise the said company shall have the free use of said bridge for purposes of transit, but without any claim to ownership thereof."

In attempting to carry out that understanding, as provided for in this law, I have been informed that a legal difficulty was interposed. The Attorney General thought the company had not, perhaps, the right to bind the stockholders. It is thought that that difficulty is remedied by this resolution; that if this resolution becomes a law carrying out the original understanding it will be effective, and that the new structure will be erected.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Allow me to ask the Senator, then, whether the difficulty which leads Congress to interpose is, that the company does not perform its conditions, or that it has built a structure which obstructs navigation?

Mr. HARLAN. The existing bridge was built a number of years ago. Of course the fact that that old structure does, to some extent, obstruct navigation was the primary reason for making this appropriation in the law of 1867, in order that a bridge may be constructed below at a point on the island where it is supposed it will not interfere materially with navigation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment striking out the second section, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 12, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Conkling, Edmunds, Ferry, Fessenden, McCreery, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Patterson of New Hampshire, Sherman, and Van Winkle—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Cattell, Chandler, Cole, Conness, Cragin, Davis, Drake, Harlan, Howard, McDonald, Morgan, Osborn, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Stewart, Sumner, Tipton, Trumbull, Vickers, Wade, Welch, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—24.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Cameron, Corbett, Dixon, Doolittle, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Henderson, Hendricks, Howe, Johnson, Morton, Norton, Nye, Patterson of Tennessee, Rice, Ross, Saulsbury, Sprague, Thayer, and Willey—22.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CORBETT. I desire to inquire what is the estimate made by the commissioners of the cost of the bridge? I see it is referred to in the first section of the resolution.

Mr. HARLAN. I regret very much that I have not had an opportunity to lay my hands upon the report of the commissioners appointed by the War Department to examine this question originally; but I have been told that the estimates were about a million dollars for the whole structure. The Senator from Vermont says $1,200,000. But I do not consider that question material. Congress decided two years ago to put up this bridge according to this plan. That question therefore has been settled, as it seems to me, and now this is merely a remedial act to enable the War Department to carry into effect what Congress heretofore has determined on. The law originally was passed when I was not a member of the body, under the guide and auspices of other Senators, and I should regret very much if the Senate should now turn its back on the State when it is differently represented.

Mr. CORBETT. I understood the Senator from Vermont to say that it would be about one million eight hundred thousand dollars. That was the reason why I made the inquiry. I thought that the Senator who has this matter in charge ought to know what the estimate of the commissioners was, and give information to the Senate on that question. I think the gentleman who has it in charge ought to be able to inform the Senate of the estimated cost of the bridge.

Mr. HARLAN. The Senator's criticism would be perfectly just if it were an original proposition; but Congress heretofore has passed a law directing this bridge to be constructed, and made an appropriation of $200,000 to prosecute the work. That law, as it turns out, is somewhat defective, and this is intended merely to remedy that defect. Congress has, therefore, originally decided the main question, that it is a proper thing to be done, and has made an appropriation for that purpose. I do not ask for any additional appropriation.

Mr. CORBETT. I understand that by the former law the company was to pay half the cost of the bridge; but this resolution provides that in case they do not the Government is to proceed to build the bridge, does it not?

Mr. HARLAN. Yes; but the Senator will perceive that if the old structure is torn down by the order of the Secretary of War, the railroad company not agreeing to pay half the cost of the bridge, they will have to build a new bridge for themselves, which makes it perfectly obvious that they will close in with the proposition.

Mr. WILSON. I think the main question before us is, Why it is necessary for the Government to build this bridge at all? I should like to have that considered.

Mr. HARLAN. I have the same answer for the Senator from Massachusetts that I have just given to the Senator from Oregon. That would have been pertinent two years ago, when the original proposition was before Congress; but the same reasons that then induced Congress to make the appropriation and direct the structure to be erected, I suppose, still exist; in fact I know they do. In the opinion of the War Department the bridge ought to be built for the convenience of the Government, there being a vast amount of property on Rock Island where the principal depot of arms and the manufacture of arms for the entire Northwest is to be erected. A vast amount of money, the Senator from Vermont says, has already been appropriated and expended in Government works upon that island—not for the State of Illinois or Iowa, as the Senator intimated, as I thought unjustly, but for the Government itself, to promote the interests of the people of the United States, in order that there might be proper depots and manufactories for arms for the people of the United States at a convenient point for use when any emergency may arise requiring it. I have a letter here from the present Secretary of War approving and recommending the carrying into effect of the original proposition.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am really somewhat surprised at the opposition that is elicited to this measure in the Senate, particularly by older members of the Senate. I was astonished at the motion of the Senator from Vermont, to strike out the second section of this bill which authorized the Secretary of War, in case the railroad company did not carry out their contract with the Government, to remove the bridge that is now there. He talks about damages. The Mississippi river is a highway by treaty and several acts of Congress, and the United States has a right, at any time, to remove any obstructions in that river without paying any damages to anybody; and we would have the authority to remove this Rock Island bridge. It has never been declared a nuisance by any court. There have been various lawsuits in regard to damage to property in passing up and down the river.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has there ever been an act making it a post route?

Mr. TRUMBULL. No, sir; there have been various attempts to do that, but that has not been accomplished. The proposition now, to build a bridge, is not for the benefit of the railroad company. This bridge is recommended by the engineer officers of the Government of the United States, and approved by the Secretary of War for the convenience of the army and arsenal established upon the island of Rock Island. The Senator from Massachusetts does not know why there should be any bridge, why there is a necessity for any at all. The Senator from Iowa replies to that that that was settled two years ago. We discussed it two years ago, and appropriated $200,000 to commence this work. I suppose I might say to the Senator from Massachusetts, where is the necessity of the armory at Springfield, Massachusetts? Why are we appropriating $1,000,000 every year there? Probably there is no necessity for it; we might as well abolish it.

Mr. WILSON. I have no objection.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator says he has no objection. Well, I have an objection. I would not vote for abolishing it. I think we have need for a manufactory of arms at Springfield; and that we must have arms in case of war. I know how this country suffered, and particularly the West, for the want of arms when the recent rebellion broke out; I know that there was not an arsenal with arms in it from the Atlantic to the Rocky mountains, on the line of the northern States.

Mr. FESSENDEN. My friend talks about that, but that is a settled matter. I ask him to confine himself to the reasons showing the necessity for this bridge.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have stated that the engineer department say that a bridge is necessary. They recommend the construction of a bridge. The island of Rock Island, as the Senate knows, is separated from the main land by water, and there must be some means of access to it; and the engineers say that a bridge is necessary, and they have recommended it. In the construction of that bridge it is thought desirable and economical to the Government to bring in this railroad company and make them pay half the expense. I am informed that the engineers estimate the expense of the bridge at $1,000,000; and the railroad company have entered into a contract to pay one half of the expense of that construction, so that it will cost the Government of the United States $500,000 and the railroad company $500,000.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. The Senator does not state that precisely as the Senator from Iowa does. The latter Senator says he does not want the second section stricken out, so as to compel them to do it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. They have already come to that understanding; and this bill, it has been stated to the Senator from Vermont by the Senator from Iowa certainly once, and I think twice, was drawn up at the War Department on an understanding between the company and the War Department, and the first section provides that the railroad company shall pay one half the cost of the construction of the bridge from the island of Rock Island to the Iowa shore, and shall build at their own expense the entire bridge on the Illinois side.

Mr. HOWARD. What is to be the expense of building from the island to the Iowa shore?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not know the expense of that part of it, but the whole superstructure is estimated at $1,000,000.

Mr. HOWARD. On both sides?

Mr. TRUMBULL. On both sides of the island.

Mr. HOWARD. Then the bridge on that side will probably be worth $500,000.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not know what it would be on that side, but the provision of the bill is:

That the ownership of said bridge shall be and remain in the United States, and the Rock Island and Pacific Railroad Company shall have the right of way over said bridge for all purposes of transit across the island and river, upon condition that the said railroad company shall pay to the United States, first, half the cost of the superstructure of the bridge over the main channel and half the cost of keeping the same in repair, and shall also build at its own cost the bridge over that part of the river which is on the east side of the island of Rock Island, and also the railroad on and across said island of Rock Island; and upon a full compliance with these conditions said railroad company shall have the use of said bridge for the purposes of free transit, but without any claim to the ownership thereof; and said railroad company shall, within six months after said new bridge is ready for use, remove their old bridge from the river and their railroad track from its present location on the island of Rock: And provided further, That the Government may permit any other road or roads wishing to cross on said bridge to do so by paying to the parties then in interest the proportionate cost of said bridge.

The railroad company pays half the expense of the bridge over the main channel, which is west of the island of Rock Island, and the bridge belongs to the United States, the United States controls it, and the company is to have the right to pass over it, and it is to be a wagon bridge as well as a railroad bridge.

Mr. HOWE. I wish to ask the Senator a question. My attention is just called to this measure for the first time, and I wish to ask of him if he conceives that Congress has the power to declare any structure placed by private parties over that river to be a nuisance and upon their own motion to abate it without paying damages to the owners of the structure?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I consider that the United States has the authority at any time to remove an obstruction by declaring it a nuisance, or without declaring it a nuisance, in the navigable waters of that river, without damages to anybody. We appropriate millions of dollars nearly every year to remove obstructions to the Mississippi river.

Mr. HOWE. But the question is whether the determination of Congress that a certain structure is a nuisance is final on the parties?

Mr. TRUMBULL. Congress has a right to remove it whether it be an obstruction or not.

Mr. HOWE. Remove a structure put there by a private individual?

Mr. TRUMBULL. If a structure made by any private party is an obstruction to the navigable waters of the Mississippi, Congress by law has a right to direct any officer to remove it without incurring damages to anybody.

Mr. HOWE. I must say that upon that question of law, I am obliged to differ with the Senator from Illinois, with great diffidence and respect. I think he is entirely wrong about that. I think the only right that the Government has to interfere with the private property of any individual over waters or in waters, is upon the ground that it is an obstruction to navigation.

Mr. FESSENDEN. A part of the present bridge of course rests upon Rock Island. Is not that the exclusive property of the United States?

Mr. TRUMBULL. The island is, and you can direct the bridge to be removed.

Mr. CORBETT. Then it is private property, and it has been built with the consent of, or without any objection from, the United States, and the parties have been suffered to use it for ten years. The question to my mind now is whether the United States can, without taking proper proceedings to condemn the property, go and tear down that bridge and destroy the rights of private property without compensation. It seems to me that the Government has not the right without condemning the bridge as a nuisance. If a commission is appointed and it is condemned as a nuisance and an obstruction to navigation, then it may be torn down; but without that I cannot see that there is any such right. It appears to me that the bill is destructive of the rights of private individuals and private property, and that they can come upon the Government for damages. Unless there is an amendment made in that respect, I cannot vote for the measure.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, the unfinished business of yesterday is regularly before the Senate.

Mr. HARLAN. I ask that we be allowed to take the vote upon this joint resolution. I think a vote can be had in a few minutes.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Yes, let us have the vote.

Mr. WILSON. I propose to discuss this question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent the unfinished business of yesterday may be laid aside informally.

Mr. WILSON. If the consideration of this bridge bill is to be continued, I propose to discuss it now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us finish the tax bill. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. HARLAN. I think there will be great economy of time in taking the question on this joint resolution now. There are doubtless a few members of the Senate who are opposed to it, but I think we can soon get a vote on it; and in order to test the question, I move that the special order be postponed for thirty minutes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I trust not.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It will not take long; give us thirty minutes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think the tax bill will take long.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the unfinished business of yesterday be postponed for thirty minutes.

The motion was not agreed to, there being on a division—ayes 17, noes 19.

REPORTS FROM PRINTING COMMITTEE.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a motion to print the report of the Secretary of War, communicating information relative to the purchase and sale of vessels by the War Department during the war of the rebellion, have directed me to report it without recommendation. I move its indefinite postponement. There is no use in printing this document.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. The same committee, to whom was referred a resolution to print four thousand additional copies of the report of the Committee on Retrenchment upon the diplomatic and consular service of the United States, have instructed me to report it back without amendment and recommend its passage. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the resolution was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That four thousand extra copies of the report of the Committee on Retrenchment upon the diplomatic and consular service of the United States be printed for the use of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WILSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 600) to authorize the sale of portions of the military reservations at Forts Leavenworth and Riley, in the State of Kansas; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOWE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 601) granting land to the Territory of Dakota in aid of the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company, authorizing said company to extend said road through the Territory of Dakota; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McDONALD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 602) to provide levees to secure the low lands of Arkansas and Missouri from inundation, and to encourage the settlement thereof; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 603) to aid in the construction of the International Pacific railroad from Cairo, Illinois, to the Rio Grande river, to authorize the consolidation of certain railroad companies, and to provide homesteads for the laborers on said roads; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WELCH asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 604) regulating the times and places of holding the district and circuit courts of the United States for the northern district of Florida; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. YATES submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, that the Secretary of the Interior be requested to inform the Senate what action, if any, has been had in consequence of the ninth section of the act approved March 2, 1867, directing him to procure an examination to be made of the condition of the public buildings in the Territory of New Mexico, and report to the next Congress an estimate of what amount is necessary to complete the same, and also the sums of money, if any, which have been expended in making such survey; also what sums, if any, have been expended in repairing or completing said public buildings since the date of the above-mentioned act.

REPORT OF ACADEMY OF SCIENCE.

Mr. SUMNER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, that there be printed of the report of the National Academy of Science for the year 1867, together with the scientific memoirs appended to the same, one thousand extra copies for the use of the academy.

NAVY-YARD EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. WILSON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, that the Secretary of the Navy be directed to report for the information of Congress the number of persons employed in the navy-yards, and in what capacity, on the 1st day of January, 1868, and the number so employed on the 1st day of July, 1868.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to some and disagreed to other amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 818) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1869, and for other purposes, and agreed to other amendments of the Senate with amendments; asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the said bill, and appointed Mr. ELIHU B. WASHBURN of Illinois, Mr. BENJAMIN F. BUTLER of Massachusetts, and Mr. WILLIAM S. HOLMAN of Indiana, conferees on the part of the House.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 818) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1869, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House, and the amendments of the House of Representatives to other amendments of the Senate.

On motion by Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and disagree to the amendments of the House to other amendments of the Senate thereto, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. MORRILL of Maine, Mr. HARLAN, and Mr. COLE.

RIGHTS OF CITIZENS ABROAD.

Mr. CONNESS. I wish to move to make the bill reported by my friend from Massachusetts, to protect American citizens abroad, the special order for Friday evening next, at half past seven o'clock. I wish to say in this connection that—

Mr. SHERMAN. I must object. I call for the regular order of business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is the unfinished business of yesterday, and nothing else is in order except by unanimous consent.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope the Senator will allow me to make this motion. It will not interfere with business.

Mr. SHERMAN. It will lead to debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any objection to the motion?

Mr. SUMNER. I prefer that the Senator should withhold his motion for the present, and that we may take the bill up some day next week. I have my reasons for it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I object, then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is objected to, and cannot be received.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let us go on with the tax bill.

INTERNAL TAXES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (H. R. No. 1284) to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal tax on distilled spirits and tobacco and to amend the tax on banks is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. DAVIS] is entitled to the floor on an amendment which he was about to offer, and has not yet sent it to the Chair.

Mr. CONNESS. Now, with the leave of the Senator from Kentucky, and on this bill, I wish to say what the courtesy of my friend from Ohio would not permit me to say before, that in the report of the Associated Press made of the proceedings of the Senate the other day when a motion was submitted for evening sessions, it was stated that the Senate refused to order evening sessions for the purpose of considering the bill that I referred to a moment since. That was not a correct report. The Senate did not make any such refusal, and that statement I desire the reporters to take notice of this morning, because it is not just to the Senate. I now desire, in conclusion, to say that I accept the suggestion of the honorable chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and with him or through him will hope for the consideration of the bill at an early day.

Mr. SUMNER. I should be glad to have an understanding with the Senator at an early day next week in regard to that bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I have had an amendment prepared on consultation with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, which I now propose. It is to add to the third section of the bill the following provision:

But any person may produce alcoholic vapor by vaporization from fermented mash, using such vapors in the manufacture of vinegar in the same building where produced; and such person shall be deemed a distiller and subject to all the provisions of law relating to distillers, except that the special tax to be paid by him shall be twenty dollars instead of the special tax laid on distillers, and except that the vinegar produced not containing any alcohol shall not be deemed distilled spirits within the meaning of the law relating thereto, but upon vinegar so manufactured there is hereby laid a tax of five cents per gallon; and the method of return, assessment, and collection of such tax shall be regulated by the provisions of law relating to manufacturers, as those provisions existed on the 30th of March, 1863; not, however, to the exclusion of any provision relating to distilled spirits which shall be capable of being applied to the manufacture hereby allowed.

I will state to the Senate that I was up to see the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in relation to this proposition, and he called in his chemists and other officers to the number of about half a dozen, and after full consultation this amendment was agreed upon. It will provide more revenue, and is so guarded, as these gentlemen think, as to be impossible to be the cause of any fraud upon the revenue.

I will remark further that a patent for making vinegar upon this principle was obtained. It is prepared as though it was to be distilled; it is vaporized, and in that state it is mixed with the mash, and it then makes vinegar; and when it is made into vinegar or in any intermediate stage it is wholly incapable of being put into alcoholic form. That is what all the gentlemen up there said this morning. This proposition is made with the approval of the officers of that bureau. It was drawn up by them after full and patient consideration, and I think it well guarded.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Committee on Finance examined this matter very carefully. The person claiming to have made an invention for making vinegar by this process came before the committee and made an explanation; but we were satisfied that this provision could not be complied with with safety to the revenue. The process of making vinegar according to this patent is a distillation of spirits precisely as in the form of ordinary distillation, but the spirits are held in vapor, vaporized instead of being condensed into whisky. It is transferred and forms the component part of the manufacture of vinegar. By this process a very cheap kind of vinegar has been made and sold in the market, and in this way this inventor has undersold all the ordinary forms of home-made or old-fashioned vinegar made out of cider, out of the pumice of apples. The only difference between his mode of distillation and the mode of distilling whisky is that he does not condense the vapor into spirits, but uses the vapor to make vinegar. It is nothing but whisky. According to his statement but five per cent. of the aggregate of the vinegar is whisky; and it is much safer and much better for him to pay the tax, which will be about equivalent to $1 20 on a barrel of vinegar, than to open the door to wholesale frauds. While I do not impute to this gentleman any desire to commit frauds, yet as a matter of course, if this privilege is given a vast amount of the whisky instead of being condensed in the form of whisky will be transferred in the form of vapor into vinegar or other substances. It seems to me it would not be safe. The old-fashioned mode of making vinegar was by the very simple process of converting cider, or the drippings of the pumice of apples, into vinegar.

The Army regulations prohibit the use of this manufactured vinegar, and my own impression is that it is deleterious to the public health and ought not to be used by any one. The proper vinegar to be used is that made in the ordinary way by the simple process of souring cider. It seems to me that this proposition is encouraging an unwholesome practice at best to the danger of the public revenue. That is the conclusion to which the committee came.

As to the information that is now given from the Commissioner of the Internal Revenue, I only know that so far as we had any information officially he was opposed to it. Perhaps he has been able to draw up a section that he thinks they might with great care prevent frauds under, but we have no official information from him on the subject. I do not at all question what the Senator from Kentucky has said; but I do not think it will be wise for us to adopt this amendment without further examination.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I hope the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky will be adopted. I have had a personal interview with one of the manufacturers of vinegar in Chicago, a former friend of mine in the State of Indiana, in whose statements I have entire confidence. I think the liquor used in the manufacture of vinegar ought not to be liable to be taxed. It has not heretofore, as I understand, been subject to tax, but it is supposed by the manufacturers that the phrasology of this bill will compel them to pay that tax. It is very sure that it would not be the purpose of Congress to tax an article so indispensable for domestic use as vinegar.

Mr. SHERMAN. We do not tax vinegar except that made under this patent process by the mixture of whisky. We do not tax vinegar made by the old process.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Of course there is no direct tax on vinegar, but the phraseology of this bill imposes this indirect tax. and, as this gentleman informs me. it will very materially, and perhaps almost ruinously interfere with the business. I do not know anything about the quality of the vinegar that is thus produced. I take it that the people who buy and use it can judge of that. The parties claim to manufacture a good article. How that is, or what may be the decision of Army officers on the subject, I have no information; but it is vinegar that is very much used, and in the manufacture of which it is necessary to use some distilled liquor in the form, I suppose, mentioned by the honorable Senator from Ohio. It seems to me there will be no difficulty about preventing frauds. The great fear of frauds ought not to induce us to tax an indispensable article of food.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is one other consideration I wish to mention. If you yield to this demand that there shall be no tax on the spirits actually used in vinegar, you must also yield to the same demand in regard to medicines indispensably necessary for human life. There are a number of medicines, the names of which I could give, that are admitted to be excellent, which contain more or less of spirits. These spirits are not used in the raw form, but in various processes by distillation and redistillation. The very moment you open the door and allow any commodity that has spirit in it to escape tax, you must extend the same exemption to a multitude of articles that are much more meritorious than manufactured vinegar. There are a great many preparations that are necessary and proper medicines, and if you make this exemption in favor of whisky used in the manufacture of vinegar, how can you deny it to them? Here is a manufactured article that I think is deleterious. Vinegar is supplied cheaply and in great quantities by a natural process. This process simply reduces the price of ordinary vinegar about four or five dollars a barrel, according to the statement of this gentleman, while the whole tax levied by this act on the spirits in the barrel would be only $1 20. The manufacturer may well afford to pay the tax on the two gallons of whisky consumed in manufacturing a barrel of vinegar, and he can then undersell the home-made article. I do not think it will do to open this door.

Mr. DAVIS. The proposition contained in the proposed amendment subjects the manufacturer of vinegar to two taxes, first to a specific tax of twenty dollars for the privilege of making vinegar, and second, it subjects the manufacturer of vinegar to tax on the amount of alcohol that he uses in the manufacture of the vinegar. There are from two and a half to five gallons of alcohol used to a barrel of vinegar, and whatever amount of alcohol may be used is subject to taxation by this proposition.

I admit that the manufacturer of vinegar by this process makes his mash precisely as mash is made to distill whisky. He then transfers the alcohol in the mash into the aeriform condition; but the amount of alcohol in each barrel of vinegar, it is provided, shall be ascertained and be subject to the taxation of fifty cents per gallon.

In relation to the article that is produced by this process, I say it is the best vinegar, as tested in the city of Louisville, that has been made by any process for the manufacture of vinegar. It is preferred by those who consume vinegar in all shapes and for any purpose, to any other article of vinegar, and the effect of its production has been in the city of Louisville to reduce the price from $12 50 per barrel to $7 50 per barrel. This manufacture under the present patent is yet in its infancy; but in that city the effect has been already to reduce vinegar at the rate of five dollars a barrel, and to produce a superior article. The gentleman who is engaged in manufacturing vinegar in that city is the patentee, and he has associated with him men of capital, and they have erected an establishment at a cost of upward of fifty thousand dollars, which is now in full operation and making one hundred barrels of vinegar per day. Now, after this citizen has made a useful discovery, and has reduced it to practice, and has obtained from the Government letters-patent for the use of his improvement in the mode of making vinegar, and when he has expended $50,000 in erecting a manufactory to distill it, and when he comes here with a proposition in which he agrees that he will pay a specific tax of twenty dollars for the privilege of making vinegar, and that every gallon of alcohol which he uses in the process shall be taxed fifty cents per gallon, and when all the revenue officers have devised the means of preventing fraud which they think will effectually prevent it, the question is whether the Senate will insist upon his losing the benefit of his patent-right and of his investment of $50,000 for machinery and buildings for the purpose of manufacturing this article, or whether the Senate will consent that he shall manufacture it on the terms which he has assented to, and which make it impossible, with any degree of fidelity and vigilance on the part of the officers, that there should be any fraud whatever in the manufacture of the article. It seems to me that it would be peculiarly hard to refuse this to a man who has invented this mode of making vinegar, and who, with his associates, has adventured so much money in the preparations necessary for manufacturing it. Now, to deny to him the privilege of manufacturing it by insisting on terms that would amount to a suppression of the manufacture, would be acting in an improper manner, as I think.

I am sorry that this proposition encounters the opposition of the honorable chairman of the Committee on Finance. Here is a great necessity of absolute and universal use all over the country, the article of vinegar. Here is a great improvement in the manufacture of that article that improves the manufacture of the article itself, that cheapens it in the course of twelve months about thirty-three per cent. to the consumer, in which a large sum has been adventured for the purpose of continuing and expanding the manufacture; and it seems to me that it would be harsh and unjust in the extreme degree now to subject this man to conditions that would preclude him absolutely from the further continuance of the manufacture of the article. I trust that the amendment will be adopted. I ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I understand from the Senator from Kentucky that this amendment was prepared at his suggestion in the Department, and that it is supposed that it will avoid any possibility of fraud or evasion. It only, then, leaves the question whether we are willing to tax such liquors as are necessary in the manufacture of vinegar.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator's own reflection will convince him that the cost of watching this distillation and avoiding fraud will be more than all we receive from vinegar. Another thing, we have provided here a small tax of twenty or twenty-five dollars as a special tax for a compounder of liquor. The vinegar-maker would be a compounder, because he would have the alcohol already made, condensed from the worm, and use that in his business. There is no trouble in his carrying on his business. Instead of taking the alcohol in vapor, as he proposes, he would take his alcohol in the ordinary state and use it in the manufacture of vinegar, and he pays a special tax for that of only twenty-five dollars. Under the present law as it stands, there is no difficulty in his carrying on his business, provided he is willing to pay the ordinary tax of sixty cents a gallon on whisky.

Mr. DAVIS. I will merely remark that this vapor is not condensed in the process of manufacturing vinegar, and the gentleman engaged in the manufacture would be perfectly willing to agree that if any condensing apparatus should be found upon the premises the whole establishment should be forfeited. He entered upon this manufacture with the single purpose of making the best article of vinegar without any fraudulent intent whatever. He and his associates present themselves here, consenting to such guards as the officers of the Treasury upon full consultation have agreed to as sufficient for that purpose, and if they are not sufficient they are willing to submit to any other guards that the officers of the Treasury or the Committee on Finance may choose to impose upon them. They do not condense nor propose to condense the alcoholic vapor. They use it before it is condensed, and at any stage of the process to final conversion of it into vinegar, or any intermediate process, it is utterly impossible to extract alcohol from it. All the chemists, in the presence of the Commissioner this morning, at the Department so stated; and they drew up this proposition themselves, as calculated to protect the Treasury and the Government against all fraud; and if it is not sufficient, they may devise any other means that they please for the purpose of rendering fraud impossible, and especially they may make the presence of any machinery for condensing upon the premises evidence of fraudulent intent, and forfeit the whole establishment in consideration of the presence of any such machinery for condensing.

It is certainly, I think, a very hard case to this patentee, after having made this discovery of the most useful and the speediest and the cheapest way of manufacturing vinegar, and manufacturing it, as he does, at a cost of thirty-three and a third less than it has heretofore been manufactured. He has paid for his patent-right; he has the pledged faith of the Government that he shall be allowed to use that patent-right. He then goes on to invest $50,000 in the construction of a building and the necessary manufacturing apparatus to continue the production of this article, and it would be, in my opinion, a want of faith on the part of the Government to deny him the right of continuing the manufacture when the Treasury officers themselves report that he can continue it without the possibility of fraud. I hope that the Senate will adopt the amendment.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 8, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Davis, Fowler, Hendricks, Johnson, McCreery, Van Winkle, and Wade—8.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Cattell, Chandler, Cragin, Drake, Edmunds, Ferry, Fessenden, Harlan, Henderson, Howard, Howe, McDonald, Morgan, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Osborn, Ramsey, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—25.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Cameron, Cole, Conkling, Conness, Corbett, Dixon, Decolittle, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Morrill of Maine, Norton, Nye, Patterson of New Hampshire, Patterson of Tennessee, Pomeroy, Rice, Ross, Saulsbury, Sprague, Thayer, Tipton, Vickers, Wolch, and Wiley—25.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FOWLER. I move to amend the bill by striking out in line eight of section three the words "the distiller," and inserting "the United States."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment is not now in order. It will be in order when the bill is reported to the Senate. The third section referred to has been inserted as an amendment, and is not now amendable.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. FOWLER. Now I move to amend the third section by striking out in line eight the words "the distiller" and inserting "the United States;" so as to read, "and the same shall be furnished and attached to the distillery at the expense of the United States."

I suppose the object is to collect the largest amount of revenue we can, and in this view we are to encourage this interest of the country. It is to be considered for the purposes of this bill as one of the interests of the country in the same light as other interests are considered. It is to be viewed in the same light as the manufacture of iron, or the manufacture of cotton or woolen goods, or any other pursuit. There are a large number of distilleries that this provision would impose a burden of from twenty-five to one hundred per cent. upon in getting this single instrument, and it is without any certainty as to the result. The only object of it seems to be to crush out the small distilleries of the country, whereas it is understood by those best versed in such matters that the frauds have been perpetrated on the Government not by small distilleries but by large ones. I do not think it can be the true policy of the Government to crush out any interest in this way. As well might you impose heavy burdens on small farmers or small manufacturers of cotton or woolen goods as upon small distillers. The result is to deprive small distillers of the use of their capital in this pursuit and force the business into large establishments, and prevent any persons pursuing this branch of business unless those who have a large amount of capital. I am opposed to that policy not only with respect to this, but with respect to every other pursuit.

Mr. SHERMAN. The only question here is whether the United States or the distiller shall pay for the necessary meters and meter-safes. Under the present law the distillers pay for them, and many of them have supplied themselves with them. All the United States have to do in regard to meters is simply to prescribe the form and manner and kind. Certainly to throw on the United States the burden of furnishing meters and meter-safes for all the distilleries in the United States would be an extraordinary thing.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. The question will be taken on all the amendments together, with the exception of such as may be indicated for a separate vote.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I ask for a separate vote on the amendment to the fiftieth section.

Mr. CONNESS. I desire to ask a question. In Committee of the Whole a proviso was adopted to the first section of the bill. I desire to know whether if that is concurred in will be subject to still further amendment. ["No," "No."] Then I desire to ask for a separate vote on the question of concurring in that amendment, because I wish to move an amendment to it.

Mr. McCREERY. I wish to give notice that I will offer amendments in the following sections: section twelve, now thirteen; section nineteen, now twenty; and section thirty-two.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first excepted amendment will now be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment to add at the end of the first section the following proviso:

Provided, That the tax on brandy made from grapes shall be the same and no higher than that upon other distilled spirits.

Mr. CONNESS. I renew the amendment offered by my colleague in Committee of the Whole to that amendment. The proposition is to strike out the words "the same and no higher than that" and insert "one half the tax;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That the tax on brandy made from grapes shall be one half the tax upon other distilled spirits.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senate a few words on this first section, although not upon the particular amendment just now moved; and I take the opportunity, with the permission of the Senate, to say them now, because I am expecting every moment to be called out of the Senate to act upon a committee of conference.

The first section of the bill has one feature which is more obnoxious to me than I know how to state. I have done everything but lay awake at nights to discover some language by which I could express my view of the proposition contained in the first section and yet be consistent with my feelings toward the members of the committee who have reported it. I confess I have the most profound respect for each and every member of that committee; and yet when I come to look at this piece of their handiwork I have thought of but one word in the English language yet that comes anywhere near the expression of my views of it, and that is that it is humiliating. But I do not suppose I ought to say that of the section, because it might by some persons be thought to reflect upon the committee of the Senate. I know the ability and the integrity and the industry which characterize that committee; but, after all, here is a proposition made to the American people to remit about one dollar and forty cents per gallon of the tax which for some years we have asserted should be collected upon this article known as whisky.

When this tax of two dollars per gallon was first imposed upon that article I had the distinguished honor of being a member of the Finance Committee. I outgrew that long ago. But while I was upon the committee I am happy to remember to-day that I took an active part in securing this increase of the tax on distilled spirits. While that measure was pending I was in the habit of conferring with numbers of gentlemen from different portions of the United States who were then engaged in the distillation of these spirits. I found among them many gentlemen as intelligent and as honest, I verily believe, as any men with whom I have ever conferred upon any subject; and I remember to-day that among the whole number I never found a man who professed to care a fig whether the tax was twenty cents a gallon or two dollars per gallon. I never found a man among them who did not believe that so far as the manufacturers were concerned they could just as well afford to pay two dollars as to pay anything. They asked that they should not be compelled to advance this high tax to the Government in advance of sales; but if they could be allowed to retain the payment until their sales were made they were perfectly willing to pay the two dollars per gallon simply because they knew the consumer would pay it to them. Whisky is just as sure to sell in the market at its cost as wheat is, or as corn is. It was then; it is now. That was the testimony of honest distillers engaged in the business at that time.

And, Mr. President, I am glad to say that I do not remember ever to have met but one consumer from that day to this who objected to paying or having the tax of two dollars per gallon paid. I believe the great body of consumers, especially of those who consume it as a beverage, feel, as I think I expressed myself at the time, that it made a more respectable beverage out of it when it had contributed two dollars per gallon to the necessities of the Government than when it came to you so excessively cheap as the distillers were in the habit of furnishing it before this tax was put on. I think to day as I thought then, that it is not creditable in the Government, it is not creditable to the industry of the people, to furnish so much drunkenness as there is in a gallon of whisky at forty cents, as you could furnish it at if there was no tax on it, or at a dollar, as you can furnish it with a tax of only fifty or sixty cents per gallon. I do not think it is a respectable thing.

Now, Mr. President, why is this proposition brought before us at this time to reduce this tax from two dollars to sixty cents a gallon? It is not because you are getting too much money; it is not because your Treasury is overflowing; it is not because you are debauching and demoralizing the American people with a superabundant Treasury; it is not because you have more money than you know how to expend. You are, on the contrary, racking every resource upon which you can place your hands to get the money with which to meet the pressing, the urgent demands of the nation. What, then, is the reason for putting this tax down? Does it discourage any branch of industry? Does it discourage any kind of production which the nation cares to foster, or wishes to build up, or to promote? No man here will pretend that. If it discourages anything, any kind of production, it is the production of this one article, distilled spirits; and I do not think there is any sound interest in the Government which would be injured if we did, by our legislation, discourage the production of whisky. But the simple fact is, it would not discourage the production of that article, nor the consumption of it. There will be no more or less whisky drank in the country or consumed in the country whether the tax be sixty cents or two dollars. Where there is an appetite for the use of this article as a beverage that appetite is proof against any measure of taxation that you ever have proposed yet. Where there is a necessity for the use of it in mechanics, of course that necessity will have to stand this great tax. But the amount of this distillation which is used in mechanics as compared with the quantity which is used as a beverage is nothing at all.

Then what is the reason for urging upon us this reduction? I do not know but that it has been stated in the course of this debate; it is understood throughout the country, understood as plainly as if it was recited in a preamble to this bill. The proposition rests upon the allegation that two dollars per gallon cannot be collected; that the Government is not equal to the task of collecting this amount of two dollars per gallon. Why, sir, when you first commenced taxing whisky, the manufacture of that article was in the hands of men the great body of whom would have gone on foot to your collectors to pay any amount of tax you saw fit to impose rather than to rest under the odium of attempting to deprive the Government of any portion of its legitimate revenues. That the character of the gentlemen engaged in this manufacture may have changed very much since that time I cannot undertake to deny. That the individuals engaged in it have changed very much, I know; for I have seen many men who were engaged in the manufacture then who are no longer engaged in it, and I have heard of others who were engaged in it then and are no longer engaged in it. But I do not pretend to say that if every man who then was manufacturing distilled spirits was now doing it and was as honest to-day as he was then, he, under the operation of your revenue system, would take the trouble to walk out of his town or to walk out of his office to see this tax collected. He could not afford to do it. No man can afford to-day to be honest who is engaged in the manufacture of distilled spirits simply because the Government itself tolerates and winks at, and covers up, aids and abets so many dishonest, corrupt, wicked, nefarious men who are engaged in the same business. It is manifest that an honest distiller cannot afford to pay to your Treasury two dollars a gallon on his production when the dishonest one settles with the same Treasury at one dollar per gallon. He can afford to pay the two dollars if the Government will see to it that nobody else makes whisky cheaper than he does or settles with the Treasury at a less figure than he does. It is only upon that condition that he can afford to pay his taxes.

We know very well that the Government has not enforced the collection of this tax heretofore. Before you commenced the taxation of whisky you were making about eighty million gallons a year. I suppose no man pretends that the production is any less than it was then. I have no doubt it is much more. I believe we are now getting about one million dollars a month, or something like that, from this source. That shows you simply that your revenues from this one source are defrauded to the extent of about one hundred and seventy million dollars per annum. That money, I suppose, is divided among the dishonest and knavish men who are employed in the manufacture and who are employed in the collection of your revenue. It is an enormous sum.

Now, Mr. President, these laws have been in existence some five or six years. It is some six years since you first commenced to tax whisky. From year to year the Legislature has made it its business to perfect the system, to improve the machinery by which these taxes are collected. This is the last attempt at improvement. I have not had the opportunity to examine this bill very carefully. So far as I have examined it I am inclined to think it is a decided improvement upon anything that we have ever had upon the statute-book before. It seems to me very carefully drawn. But I admit that there is no statute in the world, be it ever so cunning, that can stand in the place of, or answer for, an honest officer. The great defect in your system at this time is that you have not honest officers, and you have not men at the head of your system who will call dishonest officers to any just or fair accountability.

The different methods by which your revenues have been defrauded in this one article are just as familiar to the great body of the people of the United States, to the whole body of its business men, as they are to the men who are engaged in perpetrating those frauds themselves. They are in the mouths of everybody, Senators are repeating them, members of committees are repeating them, telling them here on the floor. They go into the columns of the Globe. They go into the columns of the newspapers throughout the country. You know all the expedients and all the tricks. Different schemes have been detailed here over and over again. This very season I have heard of some individuals connected with this branch of the service being brought to grief by reason of their rascalities. But, sir, it is known to the President of the United States; it is known to the Secretary of the Treasurer; it is known to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; it is known to the country that hundreds and hundreds of the most gigantic frauds, amounting to millions in specific instances, have been perpetrated. Every step has been detailed, but no attempt has been made to call any one of the officers within whose jurisdiction these great frauds have been perpetrated to any sort of an account.

Mr. President, when the whole press of the country resounds with the fact that vessels are loaded with barrels under the pretext of exporting whisky and nothing but water is sent out, or when vessels under the same pretext are loaded with whisky and that whisky never goes out of sight of land, but returns and is unloaded within a particular collection district of the United States, one would suppose, when such facts as those are narrated, if you had an efficient and honest administration of the Executive Departments, the revenue officers would be in danger of losing their places.

Mr. CONNESS. Not a bit.

Mr. HOWE. "Not a bit," says the Senator. Yes; they would be in danger of losing their places if the Senator himself was at the head of one of these Departments. It would not do for a collector or an inspector in that district to say "I did not know anything about that." The Senator from California would tell him at once when he urged that plea that he was not the man for his place; that he was decidedly out of place; and that he could find a better man for it; for he knows, as you know, and as I know, that it is not difficult to find men for each one of these places who cannot be manipulated and put to sleep every time one of these fraudulent shipments is desired or attempted.

And so, Mr. President, when a large quantity of spirits is forwarded from a distillery in the interior of the country to the sea-board in bond and never reaches the warehouse, but goes upon the market before getting there, and that fact becomes notorious and is in the mouths of everybody, an efficient officer at the head of the revenue system having control of his subordinates would see that more vigilant and careful officers were put in the place of those who had allowed such things to be done.

I have another remark to make. When the whole country stands pointing their finger toward individual collectors and assessors and inspectors who are working at a prescribed salary, so many dollars a day, or so many thousands a year, and when you are told that they are piling up fortunes in a month, and you are made to see the fortunes, to see them suddenly transformed from poor men to millionaires—I say, when such circumstances are pointed out, and they go on from day to day, it is an explanation of this mystery whereby your tax upon the statute book continues so very heavy, and your income from this source is so very light; and it is another instance I think, in which, if you had an efficient administration of the Executive Departments of your Government, such spectacles would not any longer be seen.

Now, we do encounter, we have encountered, these difficulties. I know the Finance Committee cannot change these officers; the Senate cannot; both Houses of Congress cannot. There was a time when we might have prevented a great many of these appointments, but we did not do it. Such men, men of this character, are now in office. For the purpose of what I have to say this morning I am willing to admit what I suppose the Committee on Finance assert, that the tax of two dollars per gallon cannot be collected. But I say, if the fact be so, it does seem to me, nevertheless, the Committee on Finance have mistaken terribly the remedy. It is no remedy to reduce this tax to fifty cents. You have dishonest men engaged in this branch of the service. They will not collect or they will not account for this tax. Why, sir, that same class of men will remain in office after you have passed this bill, and if they will not collect and account for two dollars, they will not collect and account for fifty cents.

I have heard it said that these distillers would pay the fifty cents rather than run the risk of detection. Why, Mr. President, they will pay two dollars just as quick as fifty cents. The great mass of them run no risk of detection. Their arrangements are perfected with the officers; they are in full communion with the Government itself, through its employés, and know exactly the terms upon which they are doing business; and they run no more risk than the Government does. To be sure, if somebody, who has no duty to perform, outwits the distiller, and the assessor, and the collector, and the inspector, and informs the Commissioner or the Secretary, then the distiller may come to grief, and so may the collector, and so may the inspector. Whatever risk there is is mutual. They all share in it. But that risk is so very light that I feel great confidence in assuring the Committee on Finance that they will find fifty cents a gallon abundant to encourage them still to go on with this same copartnership to the end. Fifty cents on eighty million gallons will yield $40,000,000, and that is a pretty good fund to steal from. It ought to satisfy a large number of reasonable thieves.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] shakes his head; says it will not. I suppose he thinks they have been so high fed heretofore that they will not compromise for forty millions. He may be right. He may know better than I do. He may be right; but all I have to say in reply to that is, if they are not willing to take the forty millions, they will take the balance out of your other sources of revenue; and if that theory is correct you ought by all manner of means to keep up your tax to two dollars for the express purpose of furnishing a fund which will satisfy the rascals, which will content the thieves, and which will encourage or induce them to pay the balance of your revenue into the Treasury. To-day you start out in this bill with this proposition, that you have an army of thieves engaged in collecting the revenue, and in order to swell the resources of the Treasury you propose to reduce the amount of the revenue. You admit you cannot control them; you confess that they are stronger than the Government; you confess that rascality is supreme over honesty in the nation, and then reduce the fund upon which they are allowed to plunder, and you expect them to deal honestly with the other sources of revenue! It seems to me we shall find ourselves mistaken.

I do not venture the prediction that your revenues from this source will not be increased if you put this tax down to fifty cents a gallon, for I do not know what is in the future. If the gentlemen outside of Congress can control the action of Congress; can make us reduce a tax when they tell us to, or raise it when they tell us to, and if they have decreed that putting this down to fifty cents is only a temporary measure, that it is resorted to only to enable them to get out of bond the large quantity which is collected there, and to manufacture at this low rate an additional amount which will supply the consumption for a year, and then to be followed with another sudden and great rise—if that be the theory upon which this legislation is based, then I admit your revenues will be increased from this source, because the moment the tax is put down to fifty cents, everybody who has a distillery or can lease one will go to work distilling to the utmost of its capacity, and when the amount on hand is as large as they care to advance the tax upon, then they will come forward and tell us, as we were told some years ago, "It is a great scandal to let this article go to market so cheap, when you are taxing the direct necessities of life as heavily as your laws still will tax them." They will tell us that it is a great scandal that this article should pay only fifty cents a gallon, that it ought to pay a dollar and a half or two dollars again, and then the tax will be raised, and then they will reap the profits on their business transaction in the mean time.

But if that is not the theory; if the theory is that fifty cents a gallon is to be hereafter for all the future the maximum of the tax on whisky, then while you have your present corps of officers in control of this branch of the service you must not expect any additional revenue from this article. They are masters of the situation, and you tell them so by this bill. Their interests must be taken care of first, and you tell them they can and may take care of them first. Their interest is to fill their pockets, let what will happen to the Treasury; and if they cannot fill their pockets by taking the same percentage of the fifty cents that they have required of the two dollars, then they will take a larger percentage of that; and if the whole of the fifty cents will not fill their pockets, then, as I have already said to you, they will take the other revenue collected from other subjects.

But, Mr. President, leaving out all these economical considerations, if I knew that you could not get a dollar of revenue from this source for the next eight months, and if I knew that you could get fifty millions by reducing this tax to fifty cents, I should still insist that you did not make enough by the change to compensate for the indelible disgrace you inflict upon the character of the nation by the confession which the first section of this bill contains. If it is true that the Government is weaker than this band of thieves I would not be hired to place the acknowledgment of the fact upon the statute-book for any $50,000,000. I would keep it off; and the more I felt my weakness the more I would pretend to be strong, if I were the Government. The more imminent I felt to be the danger of my being beaten in this protracted struggle, the more I would pretend that there was no danger at all. I would not make this humiliating confession for any amount of money that anybody proposes to realize out of this change in the law.

But, sir, I do not believe in any sort of necessity to adopt this measure. I believe that a revenue can be collected from this article. I have been told, and I believe that business men will enter into obligations to pay the Treasury of the United States from a million to a million and a half dollars every week in lieu of this tax on distilled spirits; that you can farm out this business of distilling liquors at from one million to a million and a half dollars per week. We never have done it. It is not exactly in harmony with our notions. It would require you to grant a monopoly to somebody or other. You have granted that already. Your collectors and inspectors of internal revenue have a monopoly of this business. The only difference is that you get $12,000,000 and they get $170,000,000; whereas in the other case you would divide about evenly. That is all the difference. It is only a pretty stern necessity resting upon the Government that I should feel a justification to myself to vote for selling, farming out this or any other branch of the revenue; but before I would submit to such a confession as this first section makes, I would not only sell any branch of the internal revenue, but I do not know but that I would put up the Government itself at public auction and sell that. I would agree to anything rather than this.

It is just as easy, it seems to me, to enlist the honest men in the country on the side of the Government as it is to enlist the thieves; and if you will do that I believe they will take care of the interests of the Government. Sooner than agree to this I would give the Commissioner of Internal Revenue or the Secretary of the Treasury a commission of five or ten or fifteen or twenty per cent. on the whole revenue collected from this source, and give him full command of the force; let him employ his own assistants, and pay him the commission only on so much as he paid into the Treasury. It would make him immensely rich, I know, to give him that large commission; but then it would make the Government so much more independent than it has ever been yet. Is it not better to give one man a commission of ten per cent. than to distribute a commission of eighty per cent. among a number of men? Is it not better to save ninety per cent. of this revenue than it is to save five per cent. of it? It is less than that that you are getting now.

I cannot believe that an expedient might not be adopted which would enable the Government to realize a very large sum in spite of the men you now have employed in this branch of the service, not with their help. I guess that is hopeless; but in spite of them a very large revenue could be collected from this source; and I should have been heartily glad for the sake of the country if the Committee on Finance had seen proper to report in favor of trying some such expedient. Doubtless they thought they had, and perhaps they had, for I have not considered the subject very carefully, sufficient reasons for not trying any one of the expedients that I have suggested. Perhaps there is no expedient by which, as things now stand, this revenue can be collected; but I would still carry sail to the end; I would still stand upon the right of the Government to have this full tax; and I would wait for that happier day, not far distant I believe, when honesty will take command in the Executive Departments of the Government, and when the national will expressed in your statutes will be obeyed willingly by the honest men of the country, and necessarily by the thieves of the country.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I shall vote against any change that may be proposed to this bill and shall vote for the bill with this tax at fifty cents. I do not think it is any backing down on the part of Congress or any humiliating acknowledgment on our part. We are not the administrators of the Government. We have ascertained that fact pretty thoroughly. We do not collect the taxes. I believe there is a larger margin for larceny in two dollars than in fifty cents; and upon that theory I shall go for the tax of fifty cents. I do not believe that putting the tax down to fifty cents will make those men honest; but I do not think it will give them quite as large a margin for larceny. I do not expect to infuse any life into the administration of the Government while it remains in its present hands. I do not say who is to blame; but it is manifest to me that no honest effort is made by the authorities to collect this tax. It is impossible for us to tell who is to blame. The whole administration of the Government, so far as the collection of this tax is concerned, is a failure.

I do not believe that the American people are so corrupt that they cannot administer their laws. I believe that a vigorous administration could find honest men that would administer the law. The fault is in the administration of the Government. I have no information that leads me to charge this man or that man particularly with it. Each one will find sufficient reasons to charge it upon another. But we have the fact that the revenue is not collected. I believe that two dollars gives them a wider margin for wholesale corruption than fifty cents. Of course officers who have once been corrupted will remain corrupted; but if the tax is put at fifty cents, there may be some honor in some men engaged in the business of distilling, and rather than continue in these corrupt combinations, rather than countenance this wholesale rascality, they may voluntarily pay the tax without coercion. I think we should be likely to get more from them at fifty cents voluntarily than we should by any system of coercion. We cannot coerce them; we cannot force them to pay the tax if we have to collect it through the machinery we now have. This measure looks to me rather like an appeal to the generosity of the distillers to pay something into the Treasury.

Mr. MORTON. That is what it is.

Mr. STEWART. That is about what it is. But when Senators talk about having any force in the Government to collect it, I do not expect it; and when they speak as if we were responsible, I deny it; we are not responsible in any degree. I do not care how good the laws are, in bad hands they amount to nothing. I vote for this bill as an appeal to the whisky distillers to pay something to the Government. We put the tax down to a very low figure and ask them to pay something to the Government and stop dividing with collectors, inspectors, and other officers.

Mr. HOWE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. HOWE. That idea has occurred to me. I ask him if he does not think it would be expedient to change the form of the section and put it in the form of a petition to the distillers?

Mr. STEWART. I think we would be as likely to get about as much in that way. I do not think that with the present machinery of Government we have any means of collecting taxes. That is not expected; but there are some men engaged in this business who, rather than break the law, will be willing to pay this sum, and we shall be likely to get as much as we would if the tax were two dollars. There is not as wide a margin for rascality.

Mr. CAMERON. Will the Senator from Nevada allow me one word?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. CAMERON. I desire to call the attention of the Senator to this fact: we have twenty-five million gallons now in bond, on which we have the right and the power to collect the tax of two dollars. What will you do with that in bond?

Mr. STEWART. I think the Senator from Pennsylvania is mistaken in his proposition that we have the power to do that.

Mr. CAMERON. I am not mistaken, for the whisky is there in our possession, and we can command the payment of the tax any day we please. We can put a provision in this bill compelling them to pay the tax in ten, twenty, or thirty days from this time.

Mr. STEWART. I have no evidence before me to make me believe that if the whisky is there it would stay there if we attempted to realize from it. It has always disappeared in some way. I have no faith in that at all, not a particle. Our experience thus far has proved it to be a failure. When you supposed that you had whisky in bond you found only empty barrels there. They have a way of doing these things when there is a thorough partnership between the officials and the whisky manufacturers and dealers. When that partnership is complete, you may have whisky there on paper, but it is very doubtful whether you have it in your warehouse. I think an honest appeal to the manufacturers of whisky to pay fifty cents into the Treasury may avail something. I think the constituents of my friend from Kentucky who manufacture Bourbon will pay fifty cents; and I think a great many of the country people will pay fifty cents rather than be in partnership with the whisky ring. I think we shall get more revenue by this reduced tax. I give notice now that I shall not support next winter any proposition to raise this tax again. I shall not vote to raise the tax again to make a speculation in that form. No doubt we shall get a very handsome revenue at a tax of fifty cents when it is thoroughly enforced, and it will be enforced, because we shall have an administration at some time, undoubtedly, that will do it.

Mr. POMEROY. I have been anxious to have a vote on this distinctive proposition at some time.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let us take the vote now on the pending amendment.

Mr. POMEROY. The question now I understand to be on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. EDMUNDS in the chair.) The question now is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from California [Mr. CONNESS] to an amendment recommended by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope that before further discussion on the main question the Senate will allow the vote to be taken on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas has the floor.

Mr. POMEROY. I have no objection to taking a vote. I was going to say that at some time or other, either in Senate or in committee, I shall move to strike out "fifty cents" and insert "two dollars," so as to have, if possible, a distinctive vote of the Senate on that proposition. I have no objection to waiting until we are in the Senate, and these various amendments are concurred in. I am informed that we are now considering this bill in the Senate. I will inquire if that is so?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has been reported to the Senate.

Mr. POMEROY. Then the first question will be on concurring in the amendments made in committee.

Mr. MORTON. That motion has been carried.

Mr. POMEROY. Then, if I am in order, I move to amend the first section of the bill, the main feature of the bill, by striking out "fifty cents" and inserting "two dollars."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is not now in order. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from California to an amendment recommended by the committee.

Mr. POMEROY. That was the amendment moved when we were in committee by the Senator from California, who sits next to me, [Mr. COLE.]

Mr. CONNESS. Yes, sir, and renewed by me in the Senate. The vote can now be taken upon that.

Mr. POMEROY. Very well; let us have that vote first.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I do not desire to protract the debate on the question raised by the Senator from Wisconsin, but I am unwilling to be placed in the attitude in which he left the Senate in reference to the amount of tax upon whisky.

Mr. POMEROY. The Senator must be aware that that question is not before the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I am merely saying a word or two in reply to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. CONNESS. You can do that by and by.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I may as well do it now. I do not want to occupy time.

Mr. President, I disagree with the Senator from Wisconsin on the point as to its being wise ever to have placed so high a tax as two dollars upon whisky, but there was such a desire to obtain all the revenue that we needed from two or three articles that I was willing, or rather consented so far as my vote was concerned, to have the experiment tried, although I never had any faith that we could collect so large a sum. I was in favor of something like a dollar, not over a dollar, and I should be better satisfied now if this bill provided for a tax of a dollar than any other sum. But the Constitution of the United States places the main responsibility upon the House of Representatives of raising revenue. The committee of the House labored upon this bill very assiduously for over seven months. They received delegations and testimony from all parts of the country, and reached the conclusion that it ought not to be placed at any higher figure than that fixed in this bill.

I believe with the Senator from Nevada that it will depend greatly upon the men whom we have in office as to the amount that will be collected. But it has been found, as a recent minister of England has stated, that there, with the exception of this one article, when the duties are placed above thirty-five per cent. it is no object to the Government; there will be such smuggling carried on in England that they cannot increase the revenue upon many articles when they raise the duty above thirty-five per cent., because the temptation is so great. In relation to such articles as spirits they confine their operations within so narrow a field and make the license system so high that only a very few can enter upon the business, and then they place inspectors all over the island to ferret out any illicit distillation. Therefore they are able to collect nearly all the amount that they levy upon this article. But take it upon the continent: it is not so much that they are in favor of lower duties upon the continent than we are. They would levy higher rates of duty but for the impossibility of collecting them. They need the revenue. Take for instance Austria. She is bankrupt at this moment, and would be very glad to raise a larger sum of revenue. But where the boundary lines are as they are in Europe, sometimes countries not even separated by a river, merely an imaginary boundary line, it is impossible to collect revenue from a high tax, there will be so much smuggling going on. I think that our experience has demonstrated that a tax of two dollars affords too large a temptation for poor human nature either in this country or in any other. We are not worse here than they are in other countries, except, perhaps, in the personnel of our office holders at the present moment. I hope that there can be some improvement there. I do not think that we ought to be subjected to the reproach of a surrender to the whisky ring. I do not believe any such thing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER: The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from California to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CONNESS. I have only to call the attention of the Senate to the amendment, and to hope that it will be adopted. I think it is a concession that ought to be made to us.

Mr. DAVIS. I will inquire what proposition is before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported by the Clerk.

The CHIEF CLERK. In Committee of the Whole the following proviso was inserted at the end of the first section:

Provided, That the tax on brandy made from grapes shall be the same and no higher than that upon other distilled spirits.

On the question to concur with the Senate in that amendment, it is proposed to amend the amendment by striking out the words "the same and no higher than that," and inserting the words "one half of the tax;" so that the proviso will read:

Provided, That the tax on brandy made from grapes shall be one half the tax upon other distilled spirits.

Mr. DAVIS. That is an amendment to an amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, sir, and upon this question the yeas and nays have been demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 17, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cole, Conness, Corbett, Davis, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, McCreery, Morton, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Stewart, Sumner, Van Winkle, Williams, and Wilson—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Cameron, Chandler, Conkling, Cragin, Drake, Edmunds, Ferry, Fessenden, Harlan, Howe, McDonald, Morgan, Morrill of Vermont, Ross, Sherman, Vickers, and Yates—18.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Cattell, Dixon, Doolittle, Fowler, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Johnson, Morrill of Maine, Norton, Nye, Osborn, Patterson of New Hampshire, Patterson of Tennessee, Rice, Saulsbury, Sprague, Thayer, Tipton, Trumbull, Wade, Welch, and Wiley—23.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment made in committee.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to amend that amendment by adopting the words of the amendment offered by the Senator from California with these additional words, after the word "grapes," "or any other fruit."

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the amendment so that the proviso will read:

Provided, That the tax on brandy made from grapes or any other fruit shall be one half the tax upon other distilled spirits.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know that it is necessary to debate this proposition, but I will state that if it is adopted but little, if any more whisky will be made. There are enough apples and peaches in this country to make a reasonable supply of brandy. It would be better at once to reduce the tax to twenty-five cents. The only difference is that brandy is the distillation of fruit and whisky is the distillation of grain; and if brandy can be made from apples and peaches at a tax of twenty-five cents a gallon, while whisky is made at a tax of sixty cents a gallon, all the spirits, or the great body, will be made from grain. We do not get much revenue from grape brandy, as the Senator from California says. It is not yet an important interest as it will be; but we get $850,000 from brandies made from fruits. As a matter of course this proposition is a substantial abolition of this enormous revenue. The apple orchards of Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Indiana, and all the other States will furnish apple brandy enough, I think, to keep everybody drunk who wants to be drunk, at a tax of twenty-five cents. This is a much more important proposition than the proposition of the Senator from California.

Mr. CAMERON. I was about to say to the chairman of the Committee on Finance that under this proposition the frauds would be much more extensive than even he has imagined, because the flavor of brandy can be given to any spirits. There is no difficulty with the present knowledge and experience in chemistry in giving the taste of brandy to spirits made from oats or rye or corn or any other product. It is just as easy to call it brandy, color it a little, and give it a little different flavor, as it is to call it whisky. This would only be introducing another mode of defrauding the revenue. Why, sir, there can be apples enough raised in the northern part of New York and in the State of Michigan particularly—the best apple region now in the world—to make all the spirits that can be consumed in the whole country. It is most surprising to see the amount of apples raised in the little peninsula in Michigan between the two great lakes.

The argument against this proposition, to my mind, is that it will give another opportunity for fraud. The original proposition was wrong, because there is no more reason why you should give a bounty to the making of brandy from grapes than there is for giving a bounty to the making of whisky from rye or corn or potatoes or anything else. I am surprised that a gentleman so liberal as the Senator from California always is should expect us to vote such injustice to the other States in favor of the Pacific slope. That is the great word now. We used to talk of the West whenever anything extraordinary was to be done; but now it has got to be the "Pacific slope." From this time out we shall be legislating in favor of that slope. It is a great country, and every year it is getting to be greater; but there is no more reason why the wine-growers of the Pacific should have a bounty for its product than there is for giving one to the man who tills the soil in the valleys of Pennsylvania and who raises the corn there; nor, indeed, is there a bit more reason why he should have an opportunity of doing wrong there than there is that the man in the city of New York who is defrauding the revenue every day, seeking every opportunity he can to do it, should have such an opportunity. I do not charge the constituents of my friend from California with ever attempting to do wrong; but here will be a new temptation again.

The Senator from Nevada supported this bill on the ground that the present tax was giving too great a temptation to defraud the revenue. I think the whole thing is wrong. We ought to adhere to the tax which we have put upon distilled spirits, and make no exception of one product against another.

Mr. CONNESS. Mr. President, if that were the rule in the United States, you would hear one wail from Pennsylvania that would reach the Pacific slope. Every coal miner and the owner of a coal mine would cry out aloud; every iron miner and manufacturer of iron would join in the cry; and every politician in Pennsylvania would help them, as they always have. There is no State in the Union that has been so nursed, fondled, caressed, kept enriched, as the State my honorable friend so ably represents. I do not complain about that. I had a hand in helping him; but it is rather an ungrateful thing in him to turn upon us in our child-life and deny to us what he has experienced and what we have helped to give. I think a little sober reflection on the part of my junior friend from Pennsylvania ought to satisfy him of what a bad speech he has made.

Mr. CAMERON. It is true that my aged friend from California, as he will admit, is always zealous in what he believes to be right, but especially when that belief takes him to his great State of California. I am willing to admit everything that can be said in favor of its greatness and of its disinterestedness. It has never had anything to bolster itself up at all. The country has done nothing for California, and I am surprised they have asked so little. They have only been in the Union for about fifteen years, and I think they have had every year about as many millions to help them along as they have asked for; and therefore it is that I am surprised they have not asked for more, for children are very apt to be spoiled by kindly and tender treatment.

Now, Mr. President, as to Pennsylvania, she is what she is. She comes here to beg for nothing. She does not ask you to do for her what you are not glad to do for yourselves. Her coal mines have had no protection. They have taken care of themselves. You have protected her iron; but it was because in times past you could get iron of no place else but Pennsylvania. She was necessary to your safety in peace and your protection in war, and every time she came up and did her duty nobly, without complaining and without boasting of her merits.

Why, sir, she does not now want any reduction of this whisky tax. She only asks you to leave it as you have put it. She is unwilling that you should at once give a premium to these swindlers on the $50,000,000 of revenue which you have now in your control, and which you may collect to-morrow if you will on the whisky in the bonded warehouses. We hear a clamor in different quarters to release that tax, and I am afraid my friend, the Senator from California, is willing to go with them. Brave and bold man as he is, I am surprised that he listens to this clamor of the rogues and dishonest men who say that our whisky tax cannot be collected, and that he is willing, because they say it will not be collected, to have it taken off. That is not according to my notions of courage, and I am sure would not be according to his if he had reflected. I trust, sir, that we shall not agree to this amendment. I think, as I said in the beginning, it will introduce new and greater frauds than we have had.

Mr. FOWLER. I have but a single word to say on this proposition. I hope the amendment now proposed will be adopted. The production of brandy from grapes is only a small interest. As I said the other morning, the amount of tax collected from that source is almost nothing. Last year from California it was only $11,000, and probably will not be more than half that this year unless the production has been increased, and the tax from that source is collected with a great deal more care than any other. It really might be stricken out from the list without any loss whatever, and perhaps it ought to be done. The only objection I had to that proposition was that it proposed merely a reduction of the tax on brandy made from grapes; but as brandies distilled from other fruits are now connected with it, I have no objection to it and shall vote for it. I was right in stating the other morning that the tax collected in California in 1867 was $11,000 instead of $67,000. Sixty-seven thousand was the amount collected from spirits made from all kinds of fruits in California. The $11,000 from grape brandy is so inconsiderable a sum as to make no item whatever.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, I voted for the amendment offered by the Senator from California to impose one half the amount of tax upon brandy manufactured from grapes. I did it with the sole view to encourage that, at present, infant enterprise existing in the United States. We all know very well that the grape culture is becoming every year more and more important; and the time, I think, is not far distant when the people of the United States will be able to manufacture their own brandies from their own grapes. I think it a very great interest in itself and one deserving of encouragement. Such is the case undoubtedly in California. Such is the case to a great extent, and to a far greater extent, doubtless, in the State of Ohio. The same branch of industry is now being pursued very vigorously all along through the lake country from the Mississippi to the State of New York. I voted, therefore, to reduce the tax upon brandy manufactured from grapes for that reason.

But I cannot go so far as to reduce it upon all brandies manufactured, whether from grapes or other fruits, as is contemplated by the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky. I do not think we are in a situation to remit so large a portion of the tax which we have been in the habit of collecting from those articles. I understand from the honorable Senator from Ohio, the chairman of the Committee on Finance, that we are now collecting about eight hundred thousand dollars upon these species of liquors, sometimes called brandy, sometimes by one name and sometimes another. I do not think this would be treating the Government fairly, and I do not think the manufacturers of that article generally throughout the country require any such reduction, and I cannot therefore vote for it.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next excepted amendment was on page 59, section forty-eight, now section fifty, to insert after the enacting clause the following words:

That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall have power, whenever in his judgment the necessities of the service may require, to employ competent persons, not exceeding fifty in number at any one time, whose term of service shall continue at the pleasure of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who shall perform such duties and at such places as may be required of them by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, at a rate of compensation to be determined by the said Commissioner before the commencement of his employment.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I move to amend the amendment in the second line, by inserting after the word "revenue" the words "with the assent of the Secretary of the Treasury;" so that it will read:

That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the assent of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall have power, &c.

This leaves the selection of these persons to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; but leaves him subject to a very proper check, especially as the number of officers is left at fifty, and it is very questionable whether that number will be needed. Whenever the Commissioner shall lay before the Secretary information to warrant the employment of so large a number, he can doubtless obtain it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I trust the Senate will not agree to that. The purpose of this section is to give the employment of these persons to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and separate it from politics. The Secretary of the Treasury must employ collectors, assessors, and the great volume of officers. These detectives may be employed for a day or for a week, and there business may be to watch and ascertain whether frauds are committed by officers appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury. Cases may arise where it would be very impolitic to require the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in the employment of a mere detective for a temporary occasion, to consult any one. He may not wish to disclose his purpose to any mortal man. I think, therefore, the whole matter should be left to him. It is a very small power at any rate, less power than is exercised by a master mason or a master joiner at any of our navy-yards. I think it had better be left to the Commissioner.

Mr. POMEROY. I think the responsibility of collecting this revenue should fall upon some one person. If you allow the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to name these persons and the Secretary to approve them, there will be a division of responsibility and no one held responsible. I think there has been a difficulty all the year past, and perhaps more in this way: we held the Commissioner of the Internal Revenue to collecting the revenue; yet he could not appoint a man; he could not appoint a clerk; he could not turn out one. He had not as much power as the chief clerk; and yet we held him to that responsibility. Under the old law he could do nothing except in concurrence with the Secretary of the Treasury, and if they did not concur nothing was done. I was glad to see this provision in the bill.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The Senator does not understand my amendment obviously. This amendment does not require that the person selected shall be approved by the Secretary.

Mr. POMEROY. But it requires that nobody can be approved of unless selected by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The amendment is this: that the assent of the Secretary to the employment of persons by the Commissioner, shall be required. The maximum number is fifty. Whenever the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall obtain permission of the Secretary to employ ten, twenty-five, thirty, forty, or fifty, he can employ them up to fifty. The Secretary is not to approve the persons selected. That is left to the Commissioner. Instead of moving an amendment cutting this number down to twenty or thirty, which I proposed doing in the first instance, I thought I would leave it all open, that the number might be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury upon the application of the Commissioner; but, of course, the persons will be selected by the Commissioner himself. I thought it better to put my amendment in this form than to reduce the number to twenty or thirty, which might not possibly be enough.

Mr. POMEROY. The same effect is produced. If the question whether any shall be employed or not depends upon the concurrence of the Secretary of the Treasury, and if he does not choose to concur with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, then none are employed. I would rather leave it as it is now in the bill than leave it in that way.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in

The next excepted amendment was on page 26, section nineteen, now section twenty, line seven, to insert after the word "ascertained" the words:

By reckoning not less than twelve quarts of proof spirits for every bushel of grain used, nor less than seven tenths of one proof gallon of spirits for every gallon of molasses used.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in this amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McCREERY. I have given notice of the amendments that I desire to offer, and as there are several of them, I shall claim the indulgence of the Senate until they dispose of the several amendments that I have marked out, and I would ask the attention of the Senate for two or three reasons. One is, I have occupied very little time, and trespassed very little upon their attention since I have been here. Another reason is, that my State has probably as much, or more, interest in this liquor and tobacco law than almost any other State in the Union. I move to strike out the following passage on page 16, commencing at line eleven and running down to line fourteen:

But any distiller who shall suspend work, as provided by this act, shall pay only two dollars per day during the time the work shall be so suspended in his distillery.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator from Kentucky that the question now is on concurring in the different amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, and the list is not yet exhausted. Therefore, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky is not in order. An amendment to this pending amendment would be in order, but not an amendment to another part of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN, (to Mr. McCREERY.) Have you any objection to this amendment?

Mr. McCREERY. I have an objection to the amendment of the committee on page 26. I move to strike out the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is equivalent to the pending question.

Mr. McCREERY. I only ask one thing, and that is, that I may be informed when it will be in order to offer my amendments?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator with pleasure. The question now is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, which has been read.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator from Kentucky has any objection to this amendment, it should be made now; now is the time. If it is adopted now, it cannot be reconsidered. The words that are inserted in this section were prepared by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and are in the main copied from the existing law. It is only a mode of ascertaining the amount of spirits distilled. That will be ascertained according to this method "by reckoning not less than twelve quarts of proof spirits for every bushel of grain used"—they make a little more than that—"nor less than seven tenths of one proof gallon of spirits for every gallon of molasses used."

Mr. JOHNSON, (to Mr. McCREERY.) Do you propose to strike those words out?

Mr. McCREERY. I propose to strike out those words.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McCREERY. I am opposed to agreeing to this amendment, and I desire to submit a very few remarks to explain the ground of my opposition to this amendment of the committee.

It appears to me that there is no use in the meters and measures which will cost the distillers a thousand or twelve hundred dollars apiece if you are to put a specific tax of $1 50 a bushel upon the corn that is to be converted into whisky. The adoption of this amendment will be, in effect, a tax of eighty or ninety cents a gallon on good whisky, whereas it will reduce the tax on mean whisky to about thirty-five or forty cents. I state here before the Senate that three gallons of good copper distilled whisky cannot be made from one bushel of corn. After you have gone on and adopted your meters and your measures, and compelled every distiller in the United States at an expense of one thousand or twelve hundred dollars to adopt those meters, why, then, do you say you will tax corn $1 50 a bushel if converted into whisky? Sir, it is a premium on mean whisky and a severe tax on good whisky. More than six or eight quarts of good copper distilled whisky cannot be made from one bushel of corn; but if you let the worm run until it gets to high wines and low wines, you may then make four or five gallons of whisky to the bushel. I hold that it is a fraud upon the country. All the whisky used for medical purposes in the United States will then be taxed from eighty to ninety cents per gallon, and the mean whisky, four or five gallons of which may be made from a single bushel of corn, will be taxed from thirty-five to forty cents a gallon.

I call upon the Senate to look at this measure and tell me why it is necessary to have your meters showing the precise number of gallons manufactured, and then say that a tax shall be imposed of $1 50 on every bushel of corn manufactured into whisky? Every gallon of whisky manufactured for medical purposes, for the purposes of health, will be subjected under the provisions of this law to a tax of eighty or ninety cents; whereas the mean whisky, the rifle whisky, which is said to kill at forty yards, may be manufactured at thirty-five or forty cents. If these gentlemen are to go to the expense of meters and measures to show what quantity of liquor they have manufactured at their establishment, tax them according, tax them by the gallon as you propose to do; but do not compel a man to make three gallons of whisky from one bushel of corn when it is impossible to make that much good whisky from a bushel of corn. It cannot be done. From six to eight quarts of good copper distilled whisky is just as much as can be made from a bushel of corn. Why, then, offer a premium by legislation for mean whisky, and impose a double tax upon good whisky? Tax it fifty cents a gallon as you propose; and if you are going to discriminate at all, discriminate in favor of good whisky, and not in favor of mean whisky, which this provision in this bill does.

I hope that the Senate will strike out this amendment—for it is an amendment of our Committee on Finance—and stand on the bill as it came from the House. Take this bill from beginning to end, and, in my opinion, it is about double as good as it came from the House as our committee have made it. As far as I have been able to examine their amendments, in every instance, according to my judgment, they are in error, and especially in this proposition, because, if I discriminated at all; I would discriminate in favor of good whisky, and not against good whisky.

Mr. SHERMAN. This section simply provides a mode and manner of ascertaining the production of the distillery, and prescribes the rules and terms by which a collector or assessor can determine the productive capacity of the distillery. Among other modes of ascertaining that, it provides that three gallons of whisky shall be counted for every bushel of grain used. In all the distilling I know of the grain yields more than that. It says that not less than three gallons shall be counted for every bushel of grain. Usually a bushel of grain yields three gallons and a quarter or a half, according to my information. This language that we have inserted here was inserted at the request of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and is the language of the present law, which prescribes the same rule and mode of ascertaining the capacity of the distillery. The Senator from Kentucky sees in this amendment a great deal of evil and error. I should be very sorry, indeed, to dispense with any good whisky or encourage the production of any bad whisky; but this amendment does not do that. It simply prescribes a rule and mode of ascertaining the capacity of the distillery. The quantity of spirits to be made in the distillery is afterward gauged and tested in the mode provided by law. This is nothing more than providing approximate rules by which the quantity of whisky distilled at a particular place shall be ascertained.

Mr. FOWLER. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. After the number of bushels of grain is ascertained, are the distilleries to be taxed at the rate of three gallons for each bushel?

Mr. SHERMAN. The quantity on which they have to pay tax is not determined by this section. This is a mode of ascertaining the capacity of the distillery:

That on the receipt of the distiller's first return in each month, the assessor shall inquire and determine whether said distiller has accounted in his returns for the preceding month for all the spirits produced by him.

It is a mere question as to whether the distiller has made a proper return. Then it says: "And to determine the quantity of spirits thus to be accounted for," these rules shall be provided; that is, every bushel of grain which goes into the distillery, an account of which is provided for in a previous section, shall be accounted equal to a productive capacity of three gallons.

Mr. FOWLER. Suppose he returns seven hundred, does he not have to pay $1 50 for each bushel?

Mr. SHERMAN. He will have to produce from that bushel three gallons; but if the grain is not consumed, or if it is consumed for some other purpose, as a matter of course he does not pay. It is a mere mode of ascertaining the capacity of a distillery. I maintain that there are no distilleries in Kentucky but what make three gallons of spirits from a bushel of grain. They may make some good spirits; but then they work off the balance into low wines or some other grade of spirits; but I maintain that all of them produce at least three gallons to the bushel.

Mr. FOWLER. I have taken some pains to ascertain the facts in regard to this question in my own State. The State of Kentucky occupies nearly the same relation toward the whisky-making business that Tennessee does. We have a large number of small copper-distilled distilleries in the States of Kentucky and Tennessee, and I apprehend in those distilleries every dollar of tax has been collected. There have been no frauds in any of those distilleries. Now, if they are compelled to pay a tax of a $1 50 on each bushel of grain consumed, that will amount to a tax of seventy-five cents on the gallon, because I have been informed by those best calculated to give me advice on the subject that a bushel of grain will not make in these distilleries more than about eight quarts or two gallons of whisky—good whisky—as has been stated. It is very evident, then, that this section is liable to the objection made by the Senator from Kentucky, and these persons will have to pay a tax of seventy-five cents on the gallon, instead of fifty cents, which will be paid by the large establishments where they make three, four, or five gallons, as the case may be, from a bushel of grain. I hope that this portion of the bill will be stricken out.

Mr. MORTON. Living in a State where there is great deal of whisky made, I have heard the subject talked about often, and I understand the truth to be about this: where there are small distilleries, private still, perhaps, where a man makes whisky for his own use and for his neighbors around, and where quality is looked to more than anything else, they will make about eight quarts or two gallons to the bushel; but in all large distilleries where it is made for sale, for gain, they make from three to four gallons to the bushel. In these small distilleries, where whisky is made on a small scale, for home use or the use of neighbors, and where quality is looked to almost exclusively, as stated by the Senator from Kentucky, they make from seven to eight quarts to the bushel; but where it is made on a large scale, and for commerce and trade, they make from three to four gallons to the bushel.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know much about the manufacture of whisky; but taking the statement made by the Senator from Indiana, the necessity of this amendment, it seems to me, is perfectly obvious; for if you do not provide in the bill how many gallons shall constitute the product of a bushel, then these large distilleries may account for two gallons of whisky from each bushel of grain, and conceal or steal the other gallon; and these small distilleries to which the Senator has referred—

Mr. McCREERY. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, this bill provides that a meter shall be obtained by each distiller in the United States at his own expense. That will test the amount of whisky manufactured.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No matter about that. These meters have been tried, and they have not been found to be sufficient to prevent fraud; and this is only an additional provision. Where a certain number of bushels of grain are received into a distillery for the purpose of being manufactured into whisky it is necessary that the distiller should account for a certain number of gallons. The law requires him to do that; and it requires him for every bushel of grain to account for three gallons of whisky. So far as these small distilleries are concerned that make only say two gallons of whisky from a bushel of grain, the residue that is left is good for other purposes, I suppose; but if it is of no value, still the two gallons of whisky are so much more valuable than three would be, perhaps are worth so much more per gallon than if the grain had been converted into three gallons, that the owners of these small distilleries can afford to pay a little additional tax.

But, sir, it is impossible to provide by a general law for these particular and exceptional cases. The great bulk of the whisky manufacture in this country is made for sale, and the object of this legislation is to reach the large distilleries, and we must provide a law that will reach such a case and prevent frauds, even if it does in some cases operate with harshness upon the private distilleries that men set up and run for their own convenience and luxury or for the accommodation of their immediate neighbors. To undertake to say that there shall be no rule on this subject is to abolish one of the new guards which this bill undertakes to put upon distilleries to prevent fraud; and I do not think, therefore, that it is advisable to adopt the proposition.

Mr. DAVIS. The amendment of the committee is objectionable in two points of view. There are two modes of distilling whisky: one is by the copper worm, and the other by steam. The copper worm distilleries usually distill in the season which begins about the 1st of November and ends about the 1st of June from one hundred and fifty to three hundred barrels. By that mode of distillation not more than two gallons on an average can be made, but by the steam mode something like four gallons on an average can be made. The amendment, then, in its application to copper distillation, is too high by one third, and in its application to steam modes it is too low:

The whole quantity of spirits produced from the materials used shall be ascertained by reckoning not less than twelve quarts of proof spirits for every bushel of grain used, nor less than seven tenths of one proof gallon of spirits for every gallon of molasses used.

Now, there is no man who knows anything about distilling whisky by the copper mode who will say that more than two gallons an average can be made to the bushel of grain. That is the average, but it is a high average. The average by steam is four gallons the bushel. If this provision read that the copper distilleries should be charged for two gallons the bushel, it would be right; and if in addition it provided that steam distilleries should be charged for four gallons per bushel that would be right. I tell the honorable Senator from Oregon, and also the honorable Senator from Ohio, the chairman of the committee, that it is as easy to make a product of four gallons by the steam mode of distillation as it is to make two gallons by the copper mode of distillation. The whisky ceases to run at a certain degree of strength in the copper mode; and everything that is left after that degree of strength has been reached goes into slop and is fed to stock hogs and cattle and mules.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I inquire of the Senator if that slop is not much more valuable than the slop of steam distillation.

Mr. DAVIS. It is something more valuable, but nothing like in the proportion in which this provision operates to the detriment of copper distilled whisky. You cannot possibly make three gallons average by the copper mode. The highest average, taking the whole whisky season, is two gallons for that mode.

I would make this suggestion to the honorable gentlemen: much the larger amount of whisky that is made is by the steam mode, because more gallons are produced by that mode; and in making the product in this amendment less than four gallons there is a serious injury done to the Treasury, because the product is four gallons the bushel average. That is a high average, I admit; but to put the average at three gallons would be too low. This mode, then, of ascertaining the true quantity of grain that is distilled is delusive and defective in that respect in relation to the steam mode, and it is equally incorrect and inaccurate in relation to the copper distilled mode, because it gives an average that is one half more than the real average. If the committee insist on adhering to this feature of the bill I think they ought to reduce the product as to copper distilleries to two gallons, and they ought to raise it as to steam distilleries to four gallons per bushel, which would be about right, and the real product of these two modes of distillation.

Mr. McCREERY. I have but a single remark to make. I desire that Senators shall vote understandingly on this question. The adoption of this provision establishes a tax of thirty-seven and a half cents a gallon on mean whisky, and a tax of seventy-five cents a gallon on good whisky. That is the precise operation of this amendment proposed by the Committee on Finance, that a gallon of good whisky is to be taxed seventy-five cents, and a gallon of inferior, mean whisky is to be taxed thirty-seven and a half cents. As the good whisky is used for medicinal purposes, as it is an article that is used in the practice of medicine and tends to promote the health of the country, I do insist that the Senate of the United States ought not to discriminate against the good and force up the mean. If you are going to tax by the gallon, tax by the gallon. You have said that you will tax whisky fifty cents on the gallon. Be it so; but do not come in now and tax the product of a bushel of grain and say that three gallons of whisky shall be made from it, when three gallons of good whisky cannot be made from it, and when four gallons of mean whisky may be made and are made from it by the steam process, as my colleague has told you. I say that more than two gallons of good copper distilled whisky cannot be made from a bushel of corn. Tax by the gallon; put your tax at fifty cents a gallon, but do not come here and say in effect that good whisky shall be taxed seventy-five cents a gallon, and mean whisky thirty-seven and a half cents. I move to strike out this amendment of the committee.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the question.

Mr. BUCKALEW. If this amendment of the committee should be rejected, the section would be left perfect; there would be no imperfection in its construction. Then it would be left to the department of internal revenue to adopt such rules as it may think proper in ascertaining the amount. If it thinks proper to adopt this rule of three gallons to a bushel, so be it. I think it would be very well to leave the department free-handed. There seems to be controversy about the amount which can be produced from a bushel of grain, and perhaps it will depend, as has already been stated, upon the process of manufacture. The rule may be different in different establishments. I think the best thing is to leave the bill as the House had it in this respect, to allow the department by its orders, by its rules, to establish the mode in which the amount shall be ascertained. Without this amendment the section will read, "and to determine the quantity of spirits thus to be accounted for, the whole quantity of spirits produced from materials used shall be ascertained" upon some intelligent and fair mode of computation. As the product may be different in different establishments, according to the habit of manufacture in different parts of the country, it seems to me we had better leave it where the House did, in the discretion of the department itself.

Mr. CATTELL. The statement made by the Senator from Kentucky in regard to the amount of whisky produced from a bushel of grain differs very much from the information which I have upon that subject. One of the largest distillers in the city of Philadelphia, and a distiller of fine whisky, informed me not long ago that the production from his distillery was four gallons and a fraction per bushel of grain. The entire production of his distillery for the year—and he showed me his books, which proved his assertion—was for every bushel of grain four gallons and a small fraction; five one hundredths, perhaps.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the honorable Senator inform the Senate by what mode his friend distilled, whether by the copper mode or the steam mode?

Mr. CATTELL. I cannot inform the Senator by what mode. I am only able to state this fact, which answers the remark of the other Senator from Kentucky that it was only mean whisky which could be produced in this quantity, that this gentleman informed me that very recently he had sold a thousand barrels of his whisky in bond at five dollars a gallon. So it could not have been a very mean whisky!

Mr. McCREERY. Has the Senator ever tasted that gentleman's whisky? [Laughter.]

Mr. CATTELL. I believe I have.

Mr. McCREERY. Was it good?

Mr. CATTELL. I think it was. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIS. The distillers of steam whisky resort to this expedient: they first get the product of the grain in the form of steam distillation, and for the purpose of giving it something like a tincture of good whisky they run it through a long copper pipe; and I suppose that was an expedient that the honorable Senator's friend resorted to.

Mr. CATTELL. I have no doubt the distillation of which I spoke was through copper stills. I ought to have stated when I was on the floor before, in answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. McCREERY,] that I had taken this whisky medicinally. I forgot to make that qualification.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the Senate will retain this clause, because it is recommended to us by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue as indispensably necessary in furnishing a rule. It is copied from the old law, and no complaint has been made of it. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the special commissioner, Mr. Wells, thought it had been omitted by mistake; and I have no doubt it is so. I will say, however, to the Senator from Kentucky that if on the conference which will occur in regard to this matter any difficulty should appear by the introduction of this clause we can very easily arrange it. My own impression is that the clause is right now. The minimum product of a bushel of grain ought to be fixed by the law, and there is no trouble, I think, in the rate fixed. It is copied from the old law, and there seems to have been no trouble in its application.

Mr. McCREERY. I am in favor of making a man pay tax according to the number of gallons he makes. If he makes one gallon, let him pay fifty cents; if he makes two let him pay a dollar; but do not say he shall make so much out of a bushel of corn, and thus make it to his interest to make the whisky as mean as possible. Do not let us offer a premium for mean whisky. Let him pay tax on what he makes, but do not offer a premium for mean whisky. Do not let it go forth from this Hall that if a man will make mean whisky he shall pay thirty-seven and a half cents a gallon, when if he makes good whisky he must pay from seventy-five to eighty cents a gallon tax. Do not let us send that forth as the judgment of the Senate of the United States. If we discriminate at all let us discriminate in favor of good whisky, that which a man may take without hurt to his constitution or his health, that which physicians may administer to him and do administer to him in disease. If we are to discriminate at all let it be in favor of good whisky, and not say that that shall be taxed eighty cents a gallon, when mean whisky shall be let off at thirty-seven and a half cents a gallon, which is the positive and direct operation of this provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. POMEROY. Now all the amendments made in committee have been disposed of, and I move to amend the bill by striking out "fifty cents," in line five of section one, and inserting "two dollars." If it is more desirable to the friends of the bill I am willing to say $1 90, because I believe there is about ten cents per gallon additional tax in other forms; but in order that we may have the sense of the Senate I will simply move to strike out "fifty cents" and insert "two dollars." As the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] desires to address the Senate on this question, I yield the floor to him.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I have but a very few words to say in regard to this proposition of the Senator from Kansas. The opinion in favor of reducing the tax on whisky from two dollars to fifty cents, or some sum thereabouts, I regard more as the result of a panic than anything else. I have never heard what I regarded as a good reason assigned for it. It was put on after considerable discussion, and I think will now be taken off, for I apprehend the vote will be that way here—as it has been in the House, so it will be probably in the Senate—without any specific reason assigned for it beyond this: that you cannot collect a tax of two dollars, because there is such great temptation to commit fraud, but that you can collect a tax of fifty cents, for the reason that the temptation to fraud is not so great, and that the manufacturers of whisky will consent to pay that tax.

Mr. President, the whole thing is narrowed down to the simple question whether there is not a sufficient temptation under the reduced rate for the commission of fraud to induce its perpetration. Let me remark to you that the perpetration of frauds upon the revenue is much easier now than it was two, three, or four years ago; that the mode of committing these frauds is now perfectly understood; has been reduced, I may say, to a science, and the whole country, almost, has come to understand how it is done.

Another thing: those engaged in frauds upon the revenue have now found out their men, their officers, their collectors, their assessors, their inspectors, their district attorneys. They know who they are, and that they can rely upon them. In other words, the machinery for committing these frauds is all prepared. It has not to be invented, to be experimented on, and tried, as it has been, but it now exists ready-made. Under this law there will be a temptation to the extent of twenty-five dollars per barrel to commit fraud; a temptation yet under this law of twenty-five dollars per barrel, with the machinery all prepared to hand. The officers who will engage in the perpetration of the fraud are known, and the facilities are so much greater now than they were two or three years ago that manufacturers can, perhaps, make more money by frauds with the tax at fifty cents a gallon than they could two or three years ago with the tax at two dollars a gallon.

Mr. President, these facts cannot be disputed. Here is a tax of four dollars on the barrel and fifty cents on the gallon; call it in round numbers a temptation of twenty-five dollars on each barrel for the commission of fraud. Will you tell me that this is not sufficient to induce these men to perpetrate fraud? The Senator from Nevada stated the whole truth; it is an appeal to the manufacturers of whisky to pay some revenue, rather than a proposition to collect it. But, sir, the appeal will fail, for the reason that the temptations are still too strong, and the temptations will overcome the generosity that is appealed to.

Mr. President, I do not believe that this revenue will be collected better substantially than it has been before. That is to say, the temptations to fraud are so great that it will be perpetrated as heretofore in every part of the country; and all we shall gain by this bill will be in the new machinery that may have been devised and that would be equally operative in collecting the tax of two dollars as in collecting a tax of fifty cents.

We are throwing away a dollar and a half substantially on each gallon of whisky. We are conceding before the whole world that this Government has not the skill and the force to collect this tax. It is a concession to the robbers. It is almost a bargain made with the robbers. Why, sir, there are some countries in Europe that less than twenty-five years ago had to make terms with the highwaymen and banditti that invested the country. There were certain provinces in Italy that had to do that. I believe it has been done in Mexico within the last few years. And, sir, we are substantially making terms with the whisky thieves; we are asking them almost in the language of the Senator from Nevada, "How much will you consent to pay?" Mr. President, the principle upon which this bill has been brought here is wrong; it is shameful; it is disgraceful; it is a confession of weakness on our part that we have not the force nor the intellectual resources by which this tax can be collected.

I have heard as an excuse for this, all the blame laid on the executive department. While the executive department is to blame for much in the appointment of bad officers and the refusal to remove those, perhaps, that have been convicted of fraud, all the blame does not rest there. No, sir; the great fault and failure of our system has been in the failure to enforce the criminal laws of this country. If the committee had devoted themselves to the production of a new law by which the criminal laws would have been enforced, they would have made much more progress in the collection of this revenue. As I had occasion to state yesterday, there is now no personal danger connected with the violation of the revenue laws. The only penalty is a compromise. The men engaged in this business have no horror of being disgraced; they do not care very much about being exposed, especially when they make a great deal of money by it; but there is not one of them who is not opposed to going to the penitentiary. I do not care how low down he is, I do not care how mercenary and utterly corrupt, still he has almost as much objection to going to the penitentiary as an honest man has; but the fear of going to the penitentiary has been removed; there has been no personal danger connected with the violation of these laws. As I have said before, the only penalty was a compromise, in which he always got off by paying less than he would if he had paid the honest tax in the first place. So that there has been substantially a premium offered in favor of committing frauds, with the expectation of getting off by a compromise. Why, Mr. President, there have been two or three men convicted recently in New York. It surprised the whole country. It has had a beneficial effect, too, in this very business. There has been one convicted at Richmond, in Virginia, and that has had a good effect.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Several have been convicted.

Mr. MORTON. If there was one man convicted in every State and sent to the penitentiary it would almost stop these frauds and you could collect the two-dollar tax better than you can collect this fifty cent tax under the operation of this bill. If only twenty-five out of the hundreds of scoundrels that have been engaged in this business had been tried and convicted and sent to the penitentiary it would have saved you from twenty-five to fifty million dollars. The great failure in the whole business has been the compromise system. I repeat it again; it is just as plain as the sun in the heavens. What explanation can be made?

The learned chairman of the Committee on Finance I know has paid a great deal of attention to this subject; but how can he explain the fact that up to this time out of many thousand cases there have been less than twelve convictions to imprisonment, while hundreds and thousands of indictments have been found. I know they have been found in Illinois, they have been found in my State, they have been found in New York; but what has become of them? They have all got off the docket in some way. The spirit of compromise emanating from the Treasury Department here, from the Commissioner's department, has gone abroad until the whole system has been debauched and nearly destroyed.

As I had occasion to say yesterday, there are perhaps some cases that ought to be compromised. I believe that; but as between the two evils of compromising everything and compromising nothing, I say we had much better compromise nothing. Let us try that awhile. We have tried the other and have ruined the system. You intended only to compromise with a few cases where perhaps it was proper to do so; you have compromised all. You have opened a door and the whole body of criminals have marched out through it. This bill contains the same door carefully and elaborately provided as it was before; and can any reason be shown why it will not have the same operation?

Mr. President, I am one of those who believe that two dollars can be collected as well as fifty cents on the gallon, and in doing that we shall collect almost four times the amount of revenue that we shall collect under this bill. We are making a shameful concession of three fourths of the revenue that we ought to collect upon whisky.

We are doing it, too, without reason; we are doing it under a kind of panic. I know just how it started, and I know the kind of talk by which it started. It started some three months ago. It was said that the whisky men would furnish enough money to carry the elections in this country, and that the only way to defeat that was by reducing the tax on whisky. That was the beginning of this panic. Now, sir, they will collect enough money with the tax at fifty cents, for that purpose, if it can be accomplished in that way, and as the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] suggests, apply the balance that they do not have to pay. That reason is not a good one. Money will not carry these elections. I have more faith in the integrity of the people than that. I believe after all money has but a small share in determining the result of these great popular movements. But, Mr. President, if it has its share they will get enough under the present bill to answer all practical purposes.

Sir, this bill contains a shameful concession, one that ought to bring the blush upon the cheek of almost every American Senator; an acknowledgment to the plunderers of the Government that they have beaten us; and, in the language of the Senator from Nevada, we are now making an appeal to their generosity. "How much will you give?" as it might have been said by the prince or governor of a little Italian principality to a gang of banditti, "How much will you take to let travel go on through this principality?"

Then, Mr. President, let us look in the proper direction, let us look to the enforcement of the laws. You may talk about your meters and your improved machinery and your walls around the distillery, and all these numerous little arrangements that are prepared for in this and other bills; but what do they all amount to? As long as the criminals, well known as they are, walk the streets of every city in the finest clothes and driving the finest horses, what do all these petty, miserable, little arrangements amount to when the criminal laws are not enforced? Sir, you had better appropriate $1,000,000 to pay prosecuting attorneys; you had better appropriate money and present temptations on the side of officers to do their duty. You will make more money in that way than you will by beginning with a concession of three fourths of the whole amount of the tax to the thieves and then present the same facilities for escape after all that they have had before.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I had resolved at one time not to say one word to endeavor to convince any Senator of the necessity of reducing the tax on whisky. It is a question that every man can determine for himself. What I say now is not at all for the purpose of convincing any one of what is plain and palpable to everybody, but rather for the purpose, on account of the remarks of the Senator from Indiana, of defending the Committee on Finance.

The Committee of Ways and Means reported the tax bill at this session to the House of Representatives with the tax on spirits left at two dollars a gallon. They reported it in that shape to the House of Representatives, taking ground, however, that they would not attempt to fix the rate of tax on whisky, because that was a question the reasons controlling which were within the mind of every member of the House, and so they reported a bill leaving the rate to stand as in the existing law. The House of Representatives, after full debate, after some five months' consideration, when the subject was presented in every possible form, and when various propositions were made, some to reduce the tax as low as twenty-five cents, finally fixed the tax at fifty cents a gallon and imposed special taxes equivalent to ten cents more. The whole machinery of the bill was then made to collect that tax, not a higher tax, but to conform to the rate fixed by the House. The bill has come to us. It is true a proposition was made in the Committee on Finance to change this rate; the members of the committee varying in their ideas just about as the members of the Senate do, some wanting it a little more, and some less; but on the whole we concluded that if there was to be any change in the rate of tax that change must be made by the Senate. I am perfectly willing that the Senate should take the responsibility, without any instruction or any information from the Committee on Finance as to the rate of tax.

Mr. President, I have heard before of my friend from Indiana's panacea for all the ills in the internal revenue system. He would not compromise with anybody; he would make an iron, unbending rule to put everybody in the penitentiary. I should be very willing to give him a $100,000 of that $1,000,000 he talks about, and make him prosecuting attorney of all the persons charged with crime under the internal revenue laws. He says the Committee on Finance ought to have reported a criminal statute. We have had some experience of that kind.

Mr. MORTON. No, there are plenty of statutes, but you do not enforce them.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the Senator does not expect the Committee on Finance to enforce criminal statutes. We reported one criminal statute, and the Senate refused to agree to it because it was so harsh, and this bill contains at the end of almost every section a clause making something a penitentiary offense. So there are enough criminal statutes, enough offenses defined to fill all your penitentiaries and jails. The Senator asks, then, why these laws are not enforced? In the first place, so gross and palpable has been the corruption caused by the failure to collect the tax on whisky that these people have bought their way through the meshes of the law, district attorneys and courts, and assessors and collectors and inspectors, and so on through the whole list. Why? Because the temptation is so enormous, the fund is so great, the amount in their possession and control is so vast, that they are able to break through all the meshes of the law. I do not know why more cases have not been prosecuted, but I have authority to say from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue—and I give it only on his statement, because I have no information on the subject except what I derive from him—that he has attempted to settle no cases involving penitentiary offenses, that his settlements have usually been confined to smaller matters in regard to the ordinary machinery of managing the internal revenue, and that no case involving a criminal offense had been settled except with the approbation of the judge or the district attorney, one or both. This officer, I have no doubt, has endeavored to do the best he can, though he has not in all cases evinced the energy and vigor which some think he ought to have shown.

Mr. CAMERON. Allow me to say that I know some cases where settlements were made that the district attorney did not recommend. I know of one case of a thousand barrels of whisky—

Mr. SHERMAN. A criminal case?

Mr. CAMERON. I will state the facts, and the Senator can judge. There was one case where I was told, and believed, one thousand barrels of whisky were in the hands of an individual of great power, not far from my place. The Senate may remember that I took great pains a year ago to have a Democrat made collector of a certain district, because I believed he would honestly enforce the law, and it was a district where other men seeking the position were in league with large distilleries. In that district I was told of one thousand barrels of whisky in the possession and under the control of a certain man which he got through somehow or other without paying any tax. Although information of that fact was brought here by the collector, the man escaped in some way, not through the courts, but through the officers here, and as I am told through a member of Congress. I know another case where $40,000 was gotten from a distiller, and the money is still in the custody of the Treasury Department here or some officer of it, and the most strenuous and determined exertions have been made for a year to get the collector removed who exposed that fraud of the $40,000. The trouble is not in the courts.

Mr. ANTHONY. Allow me to say to the Senator from Ohio that several cases have been brought to my knowledge where considerable seizures of whisky have been made, and in the opinion of the prosecuting officer there was no possible doubt that it would be forfeited to the Government; but without any consultation with him, and, so far as he knows, without any consultation with the court, though there may have been consultation without his knowledge, he was directed to discontinue the suits, suits in which he had no doubt the Government would prevail. I do not know where the blame is, or whether there is any blame in the matter, but I think it is a very bad system that permits such things.

Mr. CAMERON. Allow me to make a further statement. There is one case of fraud in my immediate neighborhood where a man was removed who was an inspector or something of that kind, because I knew he was engaged in fraud. He was out for a little while, and then suddenly was reinstated, and within the last ten days the Commissioner of Internal Revenue came to me and said, "I have been compelled to reinstate that person." It is not necessary for me to mention his name. I know that members of Congress interfere in such cases. If a man of influence in a district is convicted in the public mind of fraud, his member of Congress will go to the Department and get a release. I have now mentioned the case of a man who I knew was engaged in frauds, knew by evidence so strong that I could not resist it, and he has been reinstated.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now, coming back to the declarations I made before, I say again, on the authority of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, that no criminal case has been settled except upon the recommendation of either the judge or the district attorney, so I am informed; and the statements made by the Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from Rhode Island are not inconsistent with the truth of this statement. That in cases of forfeiture settlements have been made which are totally indefensible, if the facts are as stated in the public prints and stated here by Senators, is manifest and palpable; but if I was in the place of the Senator from Rhode Island, or the Senator from Pennsylvania, I would make a specific charge, and if I found that a high officer of the Government was guilty of gross neglect, or of malfeasance, I would bring the matter before the Senate of the United States with date and figures and amounts, and submit it to the other House as the basis for an impeachment proceeding. That is the remedy. If I knew, in the language of the Senator from Pennsylvania, of a distinct case of a man guilty of a palpable fraud, who was found guilty of that fraud, and then restored to office after examination, I would bring that to the attention of the House of Representatives.

Mr. CAMERON. I did not say that he was found guilty, but I say that I knew he was guilty of fraud, and so represented it to the Department, and he has been reinstated.

Mr. SHERMAN. I come back to the point again: are we not all satisfied that it is impossible for some reason or other to collect the tax of two dollars a gallon on whisky? I was the last man to yield my opinion on that subject. I was always opposed to the high rate of tax fixed by the law, two dollars, and preferred one dollar, but at the beginning of this session I made up my mind that it was the duty of Congress to deliberate upon some mode of collecting the two-dollar tax; but when the House of Representatives, the proper organs of the people, who directly represent the people, and who by the Constitution have power to originate revenue bills, have by their own motion after full consultation determined that they would only collect a tax of sixty cents a gallon on whisky, is it wise for the Senate at this stage of the session to go back on this proposition and change it, and thus run the risk of a controversy between the two Houses on a question vital and vitally necessary to be decided? That is the point. The Committee on Finance did not feel themselves at liberty to reopen the question; and if they had reported this bill with a substantial change from the proposition of the other House, they would not have been justified unless they were able to give clear and conclusive reasons for that change. If the Committee on Finance now stood here demanding that the judgment of the House of Representatives was not right, we should have to support that demand with strong and conclusive reasons.

On the other hand, there is a general acquiescence by the country that it is impossible to collect the two-dollar tax; that it presents so strong a temptation that no law, no machinery, will enable us to collect it, and therefore the Committee on Finance simply report back this bill unaltered in this respect. If, however, the Senate choose to raise the rate it is for them to do it. Something is said about a tax of $2 50 being collected in England. How is it done? If you give us the machinery adopted in England we can collect three dollars tax; but would our people submit to it? What is the English system? By their system of special licenses and prohibitions they confine the whole process of distilling spirits to about ten hands, ten great corporations, with vast capital, and those ten corporations distill all the spirits for the kingdom of Great Britain, and they do it under penalties and under a system of monopoly that our people would not submit to. Even the little attempts we make to restrain small distilleries and confine the distillation of spirits to the large distilleries are strongly opposed in the Senate.

The English system would uproot every distillery in the United States of America, destroy the whole of this property, and then charter corporations with capital so vast that the whole people would cry out against the monopoly, and I do not believe it would be possible, even if every member of the Senate and every member of the House believed it was better to organize this system of monopolies, to pass a bill fastening it on the country. There is one establishment in England that I was in which covers six acres of ground, and it can only be maintained by a vast aggregation of capital, and it is substantially run by the British Government. Are we prepared for that system? If we are, if we are willing to break down all the distilleries and substantially put the monopoly of this business into the hands of the Government to be operated only by great moneyed corporations, then we can collect three dollars or two dollars and a half, but the public judgment in this country would not tolerate it, and it would be idle for us to propose such a proposition.

In the other European countries, which are somewhat similar to our own, the tax varies from fifty to seventy-five cents. In Germany I think it is about thirty-six cents. In most of the other European countries, except England, it is about the rate proposed by this bill. It must be remembered that this is a vast country, covering many times the boundaries of Great Britain; that it has exposed frontiers where whisky may be smuggled; that it has vast deserts and great plains and unoccupied country; and very much of the fraudulent whisky in this country has been distilled in the various distilleries in the cities. Why, sir, it is supposed that about one third of all the fraudulent whisky has been distilled from molasses. Molasses may be distilled under this desk by a little machine that is sold at from ten to fifty dollars in the city of New York. It may be done in a garret, in a cellar, or in a shop; yes, it may be done in a box. As long as you maintain your present tax of two dollars this fraudulent distillation will go on, and all the detectives that the United States can employ, all the penitentiaries you may threaten, all the trials and prosecutions you may institute will not prevent this fraudulent distillation of whisky, if it can be made, as it can now be made from molasses in a little copper jug, you may say, when a single barrel distilled under the present act would pay a man eighty dollars a day.

Mr. MORTON. And under the proposed act it would pay him twenty-five dollars.

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir; there is where the Senator is mistaken. No whisky can be distilled from molasses under this bill. It can only be distilled from molasses at from one dollar to $1 10 a gallon. Perhaps I state it too low. The reduction to fifty cents utterly destroys that business. If you keep the tax above that, so that molasses spirits may be distilled, as a matter of course this molasses trade can supply the whole market, and it may be done in an illicit and improper way, and you cannot detect it, because it requires no machinery. You cannot distill from grain without having mash-tubs and pipes and all the paraphernalia of a distillery; but you may distill from molasses without any of this paraphernalia. The process is more simple than the conversion of molasses into sugar—a very simple process, indeed.

It has been stated to us that a tax higher than sixty cents on the gallon would still encourage and leave open this chance for fraudulent distillation from molasses. This bill is framed upon the idea that in all the process of distillation from grain, every stage of it may be marked, may be tested. Officers have been devised, gaugers and inspectors have been provided, and all the machinery necessary for collecting this tax.

Now, I warn the Senate if you follow the advice of Senators and leave the tax at two dollars the machinery which is provided for in this bill is not adapted to the collection of that tax. The machinery was made by the Committee of Ways and Means for the collection of a lower tax. If you attempt to maintain the two-dollar tax you cannot collect it with this additional machinery, because you cannot collect a two-dollar tax except by having much more rigorous measures than are proposed by this bill. I, however, leave the question for the Senate to determine. My conviction is that if the Senate should raise this from fifty cents to one dollar or two dollars they will have to take the back track before the close of the session. For this Congress to adjourn without some adjustment of the question of the tax on whisky would be a crime as bad as the fraudulent distillation of spirits or any of the crimes committed against the revenue laws. We must settle this question; and I assure Senators that if they attempt to continue this tax at two dollars a gallon the whole machinery of this bill must be changed to adapt it to that rate, and long delay will occur again. However, that is a matter for the Senate to determine. I will not detain them longer.

Mr. MORTON. I have but a remark to make in answer to the Senator from Ohio. He states on the authority of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that no penitentiary cases have been compromised except with the approbation of the court or the district attorney.

In the first place, the idea of compromising a criminal case in advance upon the recommendation of the court is somewhat novel, because the court until trial has no means of knowing anything about the case more than people outside; and it is not the practice of courts to give their opinions in favor of dismissing criminal cases. I should look with some degree of suspicion upon the conduct of any court that would go out of its way for the purpose of recommending that a man indicted for a penitentiary offense connected with the revenue should be compromised with and discharged. I have never known such a case. But the courts operate upon the advice of district attorneys who are their advisers under the law, and as a general thing where the prosecuting attorney asks a court to non pros, or dismiss a case, it will be done. According to that statement it is brought down to the operation of the district attorney and the judge of the court. We understand that but few convictions have taken place, and in fact but few trials have taken place; but we all know that there have been a great number of offenses committed and a great number of indictments have been found. Then it comes down to this, by the statement of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, that those offenses are passed by and those indictments are non pros, by the advice of the district attorney or of the court.

There are many murders committed throughout the country, and in one fourth of all the cases of murder there are trials and convictions, although it is a crime that is usually committed with great secrecy; but in not one case out of one hundred is there a trial and a conviction for a fraud upon the revenue, although they are committed with far less secrecy, far more easy of discovery, and it is far more easy to convict in them. Take the case of forgery: it is not too much to say from my experience in the practice of the law, that in one third of all cases of forgery that are brought to the public attention there are convictions; and yet it is a crime that is committed with great care, and usually by a person of more education and skill than a common thief.

But in the cases of frauds upon the revenue there has not been one conviction out of a hundred cases. And so you may run through the whole catalogue of crimes, and you find a fair proportion of convictions to the whole number of cases that are brought to notice; but in the cases of these great frauds upon the revenue, where millions and millions of dollars are stolen in one month, more money stolen in one month from the Government than is taken in the way of common larceny and stealing in the country in five years, there are hardly any convictions. I say the common stealings and larcenies of the country in five years do not comprehend as much money as the Government is robbed of in one month in this way. And yet, sir, there have been less than one dozen convictions in all these States in four or five years, and we are now told the responsibility is thrown back on the district attorneys and on the courts. And yet this very bill again provides for compromising these cases, civil and criminal, upon the recommendation of the district attorneys and the courts—a continuation of the very means heretofore resorted to. I might almost ask what excuse there is for it. What justification can there be for this kind of legislation with this terrible experience staring us in the face, with this great loss of revenue, this vast body of crime unpunished, well known but unpunished criminals walking abroad at noon-day with impunity? And yet we propose to leave the same means in operation by which this thing has been accomplished.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I have heard the distinguished Senator from Indiana declaim upon this subject two or three times with great vehemence, and denounce everybody and everything because there was within this law a provision that suits or seizures might be compromised by the public authorities; and he imagines that he has discovered an infallible remedy for all the frauds that are committed anywhere in the United States in the revenue system because he has discovered that suits have been commenced and have been compromised by the district attorney and by the judge, assuming, of course, that the district attorneys and judges were corrupt, purchasable men. In my opinion that provision in the law has no more effect one way or the other upon the violation of the revenue laws than a spoonful of water would have upon the body of the ocean.

Each individual seems to imagine that he has the specific remedy, and if his particular idea shall be adopted all evils will be cured. Some think it lies in a very high tax; some think in a very low tax; some think that it lies in a certain kind of meter, and some in a certain sort of machinery; but the Senator from Indiana has discovered that it all arises out of this provision of the act which allows the district attorneys and the judges, with the assent of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, to compromise a suit. All these men, of course, are corrupt; otherwise they would not compromise a suit that ought not to be compromised!

Now, sir, the argument of the honorable Senator, it seems to me, is entitled to very little weight, for the very plain reason that it proceeds upon the ground that the district attorneys of the country are venal and corrupt men. If that be the fact, is it not perfectly evident that any district attorney can defeat a prosecution without a compromise? Suppose that an individual who has made his hundreds of thousands of dollars by defrauding the revenue is indicted for a violation of the law. Is it not easy for him to suborn the district attorney to induce him either not to subpoena the necessary witnesses to convict, or bribe the witnesses to be absent? May he not make any arrangement with the prosecuting attorney that he pleases? And the system proposed by the honorable Senator leaves it to the district attorney, without revision anywhere by anybody, and under his system the only thing the criminal would have to do would be to hire the district attorney so to conduct the prosecution as to eventuate in an acquittal; and that is the usual course wherever district attorneys are bribed. But under the system here proposed no compromise can be effected without the consent of the district attorney, that consent to be approved by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue upon a statement of facts, and to that is now superadded the approval of the Attorney General.

Sir, all the men who are concerned in the collection of revenue testify that it is necessary that this power should exist somewhere, that it cannot with safety be abolished, for the collectors of internal revenue may abuse the powers with which they are invested. No civil officers, I undertake to say, in any country, were ever invested with more dangerous powers than are conferred on these revenue officers. If one was so disposed, he could seize the property of an honest man and compel him to buy his peace and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue would have no power in his hands to protect the man who was innocent, to prevent abuses of power in this way; but it is left exclusively for collectors and subordinate officers in the service to exercise this extraordinary power at their pleasure. The difficulty does not lie here; it lies, I undertake to say, in the excessive tax that was imposed upon this article, a tax that was too high at the beginning, and experience has demonstrated that it was too high, and that it cannot be collected.

If the history of the excise system demonstrates one fact more than another, it is that any tax which is so greatly disproportioned to the cost of producing the article as the whisky tax is disproportioned to the cost of whisky cannot be collected, as a general rule. That is proved by the history of European countries. At the beginning of this session I took pains to look into this question and to read the various books I could lay my hands on upon the subject; and I was convinced—and no man can fail to come to the same conclusion who will examine the subject—that our experience in this respect has been like the experience of all other countries. When a gallon of whisky costs only forty cents to produce it, and you impose a tax of two dollars, there is a temptation to commit fraud that is irresistible, and that will produce fraud as long as men are as weak and as fallible as they are at this time. And it is not chargeable to one man or another man; it is chargeable to the selfishness and weakness of human nature. Sir, it is a tax that cannot in the nature of things be collected under our system of government at any rate. It is a tax that cannot be collected without the exercise of that tyrannical and arbitrary and absolute power over property and the rights of the citizens which the people of this country will not endure.

The Senator speaks of convictions for murder and convictions for forgery, and argues as though the violation of the revenue law stood upon the same ground. Let a man who has committed the crime of murder approach the honorable Senator or attempt to intrude into society, and how will he be treated? Will not all persons avoid him? Let a man who is known to be guilty of the crime of forgery endeavor to intrude himself into society, and what will be his reception? Men as to whom it is well known that they have made their hundreds of thousands of money by the violation of the revenue laws appear here and are treated and regarded as our most distinguished citizens. They glory in what they have done. Popular opinion is so perverted that it does not condemn this offense as it does the offense to which the Senator referred. Put a man upon his trial before a jury of the country, propose to send him to the penitentiary because he has manufactured a gallon of whisky contrary to law; can you convict him before that jury as you can for the offense of forgery or of murder? Sir, there is something in the minds of that jury that influences their action, and they will not convict him of that crime with the readiness that they would of a crime that they regarded of greater criminality.

Mr. MORTON. I want to suggest to my friend, with his permission, that the responsibility cannot be laid upon the jurors, because, so far as trials have taken place, the jurors have done their duty so far as we know. The responsibility cannot be placed on them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. So far as we know from what has transpired we know nothing about that. The distinguished Senator made a very eloquent speech; but where were his facts? He denounced the district attorneys and the judges, and he talked about the corruptions of officials, and about the few convictions that had occurred, and about the acquittals, and all that sort of thing; but where were the facts? I know, and can call to mind, cases where men have been tried for violations of this law, and were acquitted, case after case; where the same individual was put upon his trial for violation of the revenue laws and was acquitted because the jury, to some extent, sympathized with the feeling that prevailed everywhere, that it is a law too severe and too harsh to consign a man to the penitentiary for making whisky, or buying or selling whisky contrary to law.

Now, sir, I believe that our true policy would be to reduce this whisky tax to twenty-five cents per gallon; and my reason for that is that it is necessary to destroy the system that has been organized for the purpose of defrauding the revenue. That can only be destroyed by removing the inducement for its continuance.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then fifty cents does not do it?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not say that. I say that twenty-five cents would offer a less temptation than fifty cents; and fifty cents certainly offers a less temptation than two dollars. Will the honorable Senator pretend to say that fifty cents a gallon is an equal temptation to two dollars per gallon for the commission of crime? For the same reason you might say that $1,000 is an equal temptation to $10,000 for the commission of any crime. I say that the temptation to commit this crime is to that extent removed.

Then, again, with this reduction of the tax honest men can engage in the business of distilling. Now it is well known to every man who is disposed to be honest in this business that he cannot prosecute it with success and pay his two dollars per gallon tax on whisky; while it is selling in open market for ninety cents per gallon. That is an utter impossibility, and every man knows it; therefore, no honest man undertakes to follow that business at this time. The consequence of this tax of two dollars has been to drive every honest man out of the business and put it into the hands of rogues and rascals; men who disregard the laws of the country.

I say that honest men can engage in this business with this reduced tax, and they will be prompted—and that accords with the experience of the country upon all subjects of this nature—they will be prompted to pursue and prosecute those men who are disposed to violate the law, and thus defeat them in their business. Make this tax fifty cents or twenty-five cents, and you make every honest distiller in the country a prosecutor of the criminal. Let any man invest twenty-five or fifty thousand dollars in the business of distilling, with the tax of twenty-five or fifty cents, and that man is interested in prosecuting every one who undertakes to manufacture whisky without paying the tax, and so defraud the revenue and him in the transaction of his business.

But now no such men are in the business;

they are all out of the business, and the prosecution of those criminals is left to the hands of the officials of the country, many of whom are confessedly either incompetent or dishonest and do not enforce the laws.

It has been said that this is a shameful confession. Is it true that when Congress makes a mistake, and the experience of the country demonstrates that mistake beyond all controversy, Congress, from a feeling of pride and consistency, is to say, "We will not correct it, because it is a shameful acknowledgment," more shameful, perhaps, on account of the blunder that Congress made than for any other reason? All countries have been compelled to make this acknowledgment. Is it shameful to acknowledge the truth? Do we not know that this revenue from whisky has decreased from twenty or thirty millions down to $13,000,000 per annum? Is not that a fact? May we not properly recognize that fact and act upon it? And if there be a remedy is it not our duty and our business to apply that remedy? We have tried every other expedient; we have amended law after law; we have superadded penitentiary to fine; we have been improving and elaborating this machinery year after year; and still the decrease in the revenue collected goes on. If there be any remedy whatever it lies in the reduction of the rate of tax.

I am satisfied that the men who are interested in the present state of things, the whisky ring, are working to keep this tax at two dollars per gallon, for the reason that they can make $1,000 while it continues at two dollars where they can make $100 when it is fifty cents a gallon. They know they can defraud the Government and defeat the collection of this tax, no matter what your machinery may be, so long as you keep it at two dollars a gallon; and they are interested in keeping this tax at its present figure, so that they can make their business profitable and flourish as they have flourished.

I think, Mr. President, without protracting these remarks, that we ought, at any rate, to try this experiment; that we ought to try this reduction of the tax; and I should be ready and willing to reduce it to twenty-five cents at this time; commence with that, and then after the system is broken up, after the thieves have been driven out of the business, after distilling has gone into the hands of honest men and they are established under the protection of the law, you could add five, ten, or fifteen cents with perfect propriety to the tax, and it would be paid and collected.

Mr. CAMERON. The Senator from Ohio said that no country collected a tax so large as we now impose on whisky. He said also that the machinery of this bill was made for the collection of a tax of fifty cents and not of two dollars. I had in the beginning of the session a good deal of conversation with the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means in the other House, and I understood from him that he was preparing the machinery of a bill which would collect the two dollars; and he said to me in the most positive terms that no other bill should pass with his approbation than that which did collect the two dollars a gallon, because, as he said, he believed that the tax would be paid willingly by the honest manufacturer of whisky, and that all the other schemes were in favor of the dishonest ones.

On the other point, we know that in England, whose habits we have acquired to some extent, they collect ten shillings a gallon on their spirits, which are the same as our whisky, and that is about two dollars and forty cents of our currency.

Mr. COLE. Three dollars and forty cents.

Mr. CAMERON. Add the difference between gold and paper, it may be that.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is the imperial gallon, a higher proof, about the same as two dollars here.

Mr. CAMERON. I take it for granted, as they pay on gallons there, the opportunity would be about the same. I have said nothing against the integrity of the district attorneys or the judges. I believe they have generally done their duty faithfully and wisely. I think there have been very few convictions; but latterly, under the legislation of the present session, five or six men have been sentenced to the penitentiary. Before the legislation of this session nobody was convicted of an offense. My belief is that all we want to secure the collection of the revenue is to make offenses against the law odious.

The Senator from Oregon says that nobody allows a murderer to go into society, and nobody allows a highway robber to go into society, but that it is different with men guilty of offenses under the revenue laws. He forgets that not one of these men will admit that he has been committing offenses against the law, because to a well-regulated mind the violation of any law of the country is a crime, whether it be murder or theft; and if you make the violation of the law in this case so offensive that every man who has committed it shall be sent to the penitentiary there shall be a mark on his children and his grandchildren for all time to come, because their parent or grandparent has served a number of years in the penitentiary as a felon, because he violated the law, then you will make that violation of the law disagreeable and offensive, and men will not be willing to undertake it.

I have no doubt that the man who has committed an offense against the law, with the tax at two dollars a gallon, will do it with the tax at fifty or twenty-five cents. We often hear of robberies being committed for fifty dollars. A poor old woman, not long ago, in my State, living in her hut, was murdered to get the little savings of her life, which were fifty or sixty dollars. It is not the amount, but the inclination to commit these offenses, the moral turpitude which is in the mind that makes the felon.

Then, again, as I said yesterday, we give up all the power we have as a party by admitting that we are unfit to carry out the laws which we have enacted. We talk about the offenses against the laws on the part of this Administration. If we believe that, we ought not to give them the power to offend the law and to put the money into the hands of their friends. These offenses are committed daily by men who desire to make money. It is not because they are Democrats or Republicans or anything else, but because they desire to defraud the Government, which is easiest defrauded.

As I stated a while ago, I know cases which have been settled by Government officers, and I believe that the great cause of the opposition to the law and the offenses against it is because the men here in Washington have had the power to make settlements. It is not the small men in Kentucky who make whisky out of their own corn that are the robbers of the Treasury; but it is the men in New York and in Philadelphia, and probably in Boston, and in Cincinnati, and in Richmond and Baltimore that have been the great offenders against the law. These men in large cities are hidden from public observation; they commit these offenses in their cellars and their garrets; and they say "If I am caught, some member of Congress will go and say it is a petty offense, not one for which a man ought to be put in the penitentiary; you are my constituent, and you will vote for me probably, and therefore I will get you out of this trouble." That is the cause of the difficulty.

Sir, having made the law, we ought to give it a fair trial; and as members of this great progressive party we ought not to admit that we will take the burdens off these thieves and robbers and put them upon the honest manufacturers of other products. Then, again, the whisky ring own the whisky in bond, and there are twenty-five million gallons now in bond, on which the Government is entitled to $50,000,000. You make them a present of that, for the great head of that ring coming here from Cincinnati and now controlling things in New York to make a fortune out of. He owns the greatest amount of that whisky in bond. These are the men who will be benefited, not the honest manufacturers. The Government will be robbed and the whisky ring will be enriched, and they will come here next year when we get the reins of Government and tell us we must have revenue; now raise the tax again.

When the tax was first put on they were about here convincing members of Congress and Senators that it was unjust to tax the whisky on hand, and by Congress refusing to do that they made money enough to enrich them; and now after they get this tax taken off, and get the control of the thing, they will come here next year and want the tax put on again. I can see very clearly that these same men will make forty or fifty million dollars now by the reduction of this tax, and having got it, they will come back next year and try to convince us that we should put an additional tax on whisky, that they may go to work and buy it in in the mean time under the lower tax. The operations in whisky are like dealings in the stock of the Erie railroad, or any other stock which has very little intrinsic value. Men bet on it, gamble on it. A man will imagine to-day that next week the stock of a particular railroad will go up to a particular price, and he will get somebody to join him, and they will make bets on it. So in regard to whisky; ever since the tax was first put on it has been a great matter of speculation in the hands of the great speculators of the country just as much as in stock gambling.

I am sorry that the Senator from Oregon pursued the argument which he did, for I have so much respect for his mind and for his reasoning powers that I always listen to him with pleasure; but to-day his remarks illustrate the strange perversity of the human head and human heart. When we imagine a particular idea we always, if we have ability, as the Senator has, can find a strong argument in favor of it, no matter how false its foundation may be. I wish he was on the other side, for then I am sure that in a couple of years hereafter he would rejoice if we keep this tax on and save worthier objects from being taxed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of five o'clock having arrived, the Senate will take a recess until half past seven o'clock.

Mr. MORTON. Before that is done, I desire, for the purpose of simply saying, in reply to the Senator from Oregon, that I did not intend to charge the judges of the courts with corruption. I did not speak words to that effect.

The Senate took a recess until half past seven o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

INTERNAL TAXES.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1284) to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to amend the tax on banks.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to offer a couple of verbal amendments before proceeding further with the bill. On page 52, line six of section forty-four, I move to strike out the words "or rectifier" after "distiller."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. On page 39, in lines twenty-nine and thirty of section twenty-eight, I move to strike out the words "on his monthly list."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I desire to propose a few amendments, to which I think there will be no objection, which are merely verbal. On page 27, line sixteen of section twenty-one, after the word "distiller," I move to insert "or other person liable." By reference to page 2, line fourteen of section one, it will be seen that there are some other persons made liable, and therefore they ought to be included here.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. On page 25, line fifty-six of section nineteen, I move to strike out the word "distilling" and insert "produce." This is a mere verbal amendment. It will be seen on the twenty-fourth page that in the oath to be taken the word "produce" is used, and the word used here should be the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. On pages 48 and 49, in section forty-one, line two, I move to strike out the words "seize and" before "detain;" in line eight to strike out "seized" and insert "detained," and in line twelve to strike out "seizure" and insert "detention."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCREERY. I wish to move a verbal amendment. In lines twenty-six, twenty-seven, and twenty-eight of section fifty-two, there is a clause which reads thus: "In no case, however, shall the aggregate monthly fees of any gauger exceed at the rate of $3,000 per annum." I move to strike out the word "at." The clause is not grammatical as it stands, and I desire that this bill shall be grammatical, however erroneous it may be in principle. You cannot exceed "at" anything, or produce "at" anything, though you may exceed a thing or produce a thing.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCREERY. I move that wherever the word "meter" occurs in this bill it be stricken out. It will take about one thousand or one thousand two hundred dollars to buy a meter. The Senate have already determined that they will not tax the product fifty cents a gallon, but that they will tax the corn $1 50 a bushel. That is the effect of the last amendment adopted by the Senate; and on that account, as these meters will be so costly, I move that the meters be dispensed with, and that wherever the word "meter" occurs throughout the bill it be stricken out, and that in place of the word "meter" the words "sealed half bushel" be inserted, so that the collectors of internal revenue may furnish every distiller throughout the United States a sealed half bushel, in order that the tax of $1 50 may be imposed on each bushel of corn transformed into whisky.

Mr. POMEROY. How would you do that where they make whisky out of molasses?

Mr. McCREERY. I am not talking about molasses now, but of corn-distilled whisky. My motion may apply to grain-distilled liquor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is not now in order. There is an amendment pending, offered by the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. POMEROY,] to strike out "fifty cents," in line five of the first section, and insert "two dollars." That is the pending question. The amendments which have been received this evening were mere verbal amendments.

Mr. COLE. I have to offer but a remark or two in addition to what I said yesterday in favor of keeping up the tax on whisky at two dollars, which is the substance of the amendment of the honorable Senator from Kansas. I believe it to be conceded that the only reason for reducing the tax below two dollars or one dollar and a half is the alleged inability of the Government to collect the higher rate. It is argued that by reason of the high rate of taxation upon whisky small establishments or distilleries are liable to be started, and have been in operation throughout the country. The distinguished chairman of the Committee on Finance tells us that there are some exceedingly small distilleries, such as could be put under a desk or in a box and be worked in that manner. That argument proves to my mind conclusively that in regard to this description of offenses there are persons disposed to commit small offenses as well as large. We have many thieves, those who commit petty larceny, and those who would disdain to do that, but commit grand larceny. Precisely the same classes of characters, I suppose, exist among those who would evade the tax upon whisky; and if you were to put the tax down to half a dollar a gallon or to twenty-five cents a gallon you would find these petty-larceny fellows who would endeavor to avoid it even at these low rates, who would make a little out of the evasion of the law in that manner. So it seems to me we shall not attain the end aimed at in the report of the committee of putting the tax so low that nobody will be mean enough to evade the law. If we were to put it down to the lowest sum which has been mentioned to-day, ten cents a gallon, in my opinion there would be found men in the country mean enough to evade the payment of the tax at that low rate.

I am not at all willing to concede that this tax cannot be enforced at a higher rate than fifty cents a gallon. The tax has been enforced in some places at the rate that the law now fixes. It gives me great satisfaction to be able to say that in the first district of California, which includes the city of San Francisco, there has been no evasion of the law. I have before me an authentic statement of the amount of tax collected upon whisky during the year preceding the 1st of November, 1867, in the first district of California, and I find the amount to be $1,803,458 for that year. I have also a statement showing the amount of tax collected upon spirits in the ten metropolitan districts of New York, including the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, ninth, and the thirty-second collection districts of that State:

Table showing the taxes paid on spirits in New York city and in the first district of California, from November 1, 1866, to November 1, 1867.

New York.	Amount of tax.
First district.....	$41,628
Second district.....	43,482
Third district.....	41,656
Fourth district.....	40,186
Fifth district.....	75,446
Sixth district.....	158,222
Seventh district.....	67,320
Eighth district.....	159,116
Ninth district.....	216,020
Thirty-second district.....	1,021,006
Total.....	1,867,032
California.
First district.....	1,803,458
Difference.....	$63,574

Thus it appears that in one district of California, including San Francisco, there was collected in that year off whisky within $63,574 of the amount collected in the ten metropolitan districts of New York.

I have in addition to this statement, not before me, to be sure, in a form to present to the Senate, but I have the utmost assurance that the tax has been collected in the portion of the United States to which I allude. The reason why it is collected there is because the officers have faithfully and honestly performed their duty, and in my judgment not one gallon out of twenty-five has escaped taxation, while perhaps scarcely a gallon out of twenty-five has paid the tax in the metropolitan districts of New York.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the Senator from California want to know why the tax is collected in California? I can tell him.

Mr. COLE. I know the reason why.

Mr. SHERMAN. One reason is that elsewhere the great fraud is in the transportation of whisky.

Mr. COLE. That does not meet the argument, because this whisky is in great part manufactured in California. There are several very large distilleries in San Francisco; but the real reason that I would allege for this close observance of the law there is the fidelity of the agents of the Government who are employed to perform this duty. They have done it carefully and faithfully. I know that some little distilleries have been seized there, but very little, however, out of the whole quantity manufactured in that city has escaped taxation at the rate of two dollars a gallon.

I will add further that in the district to which I allude in California during the last fiscal year which ended on the last day of last month there were collected by the internal revenue department over five million dollars at a cost of less than one half of one per cent. for the collection. I do not say this in the way of boasting, but for the purpose of showing that it is possible to enforce the collection of this tax even at the rate that is prescribed by law.

Now, let me reiterate what I said at the start, to wit, that if the tax is reduced you will find these petty-larceny fellows in sufficient numbers to evade the payment of that tax; and you will not, by putting it down at this low rate, and in that manner appealing to the generosity of this class of people, succeed in collecting the small amount per gallon that you prescribe.

I am very loth to reduce the tax on whisky from two dollars to any very low sum. If we must concede that we cannot collect the tax unless we reduce it down to the low rate of fifty cents or less upon a gallon that argument is in favor of removing the tax entirely, and we had better throw it off that product entirely and tax bread or some more useful article than whisky for the purpose of raising revenue. This is of all articles that which should pay the most tax, and in my judgment we can enforce the tax. If we cannot get the very high rate which is now prescribed by law, let us not go away down through fear that these persons who are defrauding the Government will be able to continue their frauds, but put it down to $1 50, and by no means lower than one dollar per gallon. We should not, in my judgment, so dispense with this means of revenue as to make it necessary to put a high tax upon the proper industries of the country to meet the deficiency which will result from so reducing this tax, provided of course that we are able to collect the tax levied by law. I appeal to Senators, with all the earnestness of my nature, not to reduce this tax to the low rate of fifty cents; but I shall not detain the Senate further.

Mr. POMEROY. Mr. President, the pending amendment I understand to be the one offered by me striking out fifty cents and inserting two dollars as the tax on each gallon of whisky. I moved that amendment sincerely, after considering the subject as well as I could, and believing that it was better not to reduce the tax than to reduce it. I have read as far as I have been able what was said in the House of Representatives and what has been said in the Senate on this subject, and at first I thought I might bring my mind to believe that after all it might be better as we are situated to reduce this tax; but it is so against every sentiment I ever entertained, so against my convictions of what is best, that on reflection I have concluded to adhere, so far as my vote goes, to the old tax. If there are any reasons why we should come down to a dollar or a dollar and a half, those reasons may be considered; but to come down to fifty cents I believe to be entirely out of the question.

I take it that every Senator feels as I do, that we are representing a Government in this matter, that it is not our interests simply, that it is not ourselves who are concerned, but the question is what is best for this great Government to do. We happen to be dealers and partners and holders of whisky, I am sorry to say. The Government itself holds and owns to-day more whisky than any other party, more whisky than the "whisky ring," of which we have heard so much. I am unable to state precisely the amount, but it is not less than twenty-five million gallons; it may be thirty millions. We represent a Government in interest in this matter. The thirty millions which we own, which have been forfeited to us, are worth to us two dollars a gallon, and it is our fault that whisky does not bring more than that in the market. There is an interest of not less than $50,000,000 which this Government has in whisky because it owns it and holds it.

What would individual proprietors do if they held this property? Knock down its price to a dollar a gallon? Would individual proprietors holding such a large interest in whisky pursue a course to reduce its value? That whisky ought to bring and by a judicious management might be made to net two dollars a gallon. Would individuals pursue a course to have it net them seventy-five or eighty cents?

In the first place, then, the Government is interested to a very large extent in keeping up the price of whisky and not in pulling it down. In the second place, I do not believe there is any utility to the country in having cheap whisky. Who wants it cheap? It is no interest to the manufacturer to have it cheap; it is no interest to the producer to have it cheap; it is none to the Government; and I do not know that it is any interest to the consumer, and in fact it is rather my opinion that his interest lies in the direction of expensive and dear whisky, and if there is such a thing, as my friend from Kentucky intimated, good whisky, of which I have always had my doubts. I regard the question of having cheap whisky as not worthy of consideration. No person in this country that produces it, no parties that hold it, no persons engaged in the manufacture or trade, either desire or can afford really to have cheap whisky. Besides, in itself it is not an article that ought to be cheap. It is an article that is making war upon us, war upon individuals, war upon society. It produces pauperism and crime. It makes everything else dear. It never ought to be cheap. It never ought to be tolerated. It is one of the enemies of our race, socially and in every other way, and we ought not to pursue a course to make it cheap. Who wants it cheap? If the tax can be kept up at two dollars a gallon, and religiously and strictly enforced, as I believe it can, the price should be at least $2 40 a gallon.

The Senator from Ohio argued at considerable length to-day, and with a great deal of fairness, as I thought, until he came to the point that if we put the tax back at two dollars we should have to change the whole framework of this bill. Why change it? I thought this bill was drawn to enforce the collection of the tax. I thought many portions of it were peculiarly adapted to detecting fraud. I thought that if we had had the framework of this bill in the law that provided for assessing two dollars a gallon we should have got the two dollars. I am now at a loss to know why it is that if we raise this tax to two dollars we shall have to change the whole framework of the bill. I fail to see it. I do not believe we can afford to sacrifice the amount of whisky we have on hand to any temporizing policy, nor make any concessions to the combination that is organized to defeat the law. I would not disguise the fact that there is an organization and combination in this country, as I suppose, known and called "the whisky ring," the object of which is to make what they can off the defeat of the law, the object of which is to control the manufacture and sale of whisky in this country, so that they can defeat the ends the law has in view in levying the tax. I do not doubt that there is such an organization; but why surrender to it? It is an organization against law; it is a rebellion against statute; and I would no more surrender to this whisky rebellion that is got up to defeat the collection of the tax than I would surrender to an armed rebellion. It is no more respectable to do it; it is as much against our patriotic sentiments to do it; and we ought to organize this Government on purpose to defeat this whisky rebellion. But to surrender in advance, to come down before we have thrown stones or turf or anything, and say to these men, "We retire, and you shall have the tax at fifty cents," is too humiliating to me. I do not believe the necessity of doing that is upon us. I do not believe the interests of the country demand it. I believe we shall be cheated just as surely with fifty cents as with two dollars as the tax.

For these reasons, without desiring in the heat of this night to detain the Senate, I have moved the amendment to ascertain what the sentiment of the Senate is. The other House has expressed its conviction, and now I want fairly and deliberately the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I suppose the Senator from Kansas knows very well that the party that he alludes to, what is called the whisky ring, to which he says he would not surrender, want the defeat of this bill; and they want precisely what is now proposed, to keep the tax at two dollars a gallon. We have offered this tax of two dollars a gallon, and we find that we collect about ten per cent. of it. We may not do any better with the reduced tax; but it would be pretty hard to do worse. At any rate, I entirely agree with him in one thing, that I would not surrender; and I am very much in hopes that the Senate will not surrender; but they will surrender the moment they defeat this bill and keep the tax at two dollars. That I consider a perfect surrender to the whisky ring, for that is precisely what they want and what they intend to accomplish.

Mr. CATTELL. I fully concur in the sentiments just expressed by the Senator from New York; and in addition to what he has said I wish to remark that, in my judgment and the judgment of the Finance Committee the very highest possible rate of tax which can be properly collected without the intervention of bonded warehouses has been adopted by the committee. If we depart from about a fifty or sixty cent tax, it becomes a matter of absolute necessity that you shall provide a system of warehouses in which the liquor can be stored, because otherwise so an amount of capital is required to conduct the business at a tax of two dollars per gallon that it cannot be done except by concentrating it in the hands of capitalists throughout the country, which would not be submitted to by our people. For a distillery that makes fifty barrels per day, and that is moderate distilling—there are some in our country making more than two hundred barrels per day—for one that makes fifty barrels per day the tax, at two dollars a gallon, is $4,000 per day. Every gentleman on this floor knows that, as with the brandy made in California, so with the whisky that is used for drinking, the fine whisky, it must be kept for a time in order to become fit for use; and in order that it shall be kept, if the tax must be paid at the distillery, think for a moment what the amount is of $4,000 a day in taxes. It is $120,000 on the production of a moderate distillery in a single month. It is impossible to conduct the business successfully, in my judgment, upon any higher rate of tax than is provided for in this bill unless you go back to the system of bonded warehouses.

Mr. POMEROY. Allow me to ask the Senator how much the Government has on hand?

Mr. CATTELL. The Government has not any, but in bonded warehouses belonging to other people I suppose there are about twenty-five million gallons.

Mr. POMEROY. How much has been forfeited to the Government; how much does the Government own?

Mr. CATTELL. I do not know; but not much, I take it. The chairman of the committee perhaps can tell.

Mr. SHERMAN. It cannot be much.

Mr. CATTELL. It is well for the Senate, when they are voting upon the question of the amount of the tax, to consider this point. I think the Senate will see that it will be absolutely necessary to go back to the warehouse system if we keep the tax at two dollars a gallon. We never can collect a tax of two dollars a gallon at the still. It is utterly impossible, in my judgment, to conduct the trade in that form.

Mr. President, every gentleman who has addressed the Senate on this subject seems to have the idea that the frauds upon the revenue in regard to whisky result from some particular cause. Some ascribe it to one cause and some to another. My judgment is that it results from just one cause, and one only, and that is because you impose a tax of five hundred per cent. upon the production of this article, which is an absurdity, and which makes it an impossibility in an elective Government like ours to collect the tax. You cannot collect a tax of five hundred per cent. on any article. Every gentleman upon this floor knows that in our tariff laws we endeavor to avoid excessive rates of duty upon imported goods, because they lead to smuggling; because if they are excessive they will be avoided in some way or other, the ingenuity and avarice of man are so very great. Such is the case with this tax upon whisky at two dollars a gallon. Take, for instance, the case of a distillery to which I have just now alluded, one of fifty barrels capacity per day. The tax upon it at two dollars a gallon is $4,000 per day. You employ a revenue officer to watch this distillery of spirits, and you pay him five dollars per day. The individual conducting such a distillery can afford, if that officer will shut his eyes, to pay him $1,000 a day and make a large fortune himself besides in a single year. I insist upon it that the whole difficulty in this matter is that the amount of the tax is so enormous that there is enough in it to corrupt poor, weak human nature, and that we cannot collect the tax when there is so much money involved in it as there is at two dollars a gallon. The Finance Committee believe that many of the present rules will be remedied by the reduction proposed, and that if you put a tax of a little over one hundred per cent. on an article there is not so much inducement at any rate to commit fraud, there is not so much room for avarice to play, as there is in a tax of five hundred per cent. Besides, we have tried the experiment, and we have tried it faithfully under the two-dollar tax.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Faithfully!

Mr. CATTELL. Faithfully in point of time, and I do not know that we can do any better unless my friend proposes to find out a race of men better than those who have been attending to this duty, and proposes to have that race of men appointed. I think if my friend could select the men and appoint them himself he might find a much better set than those in office now; but unfortunately these appointments are not intrusted to him, nor even to the Senate of the United States.

Mr. President, in my judgment the whisky ring, as it is frequently called here, and by that I mean those connected with the frauds in regard to whisky all over the country, have been taking from the United States in this tax at least thirty or forty million dollars per annum, and I think a vote of the Senate to continue this tax at two dollars is an invitation to them to proceed in that direction, and is affording them the carcass upon which to prey. I am not disposed for one to gratify their avarice at the expense of the Government of the United States.

My impression is that a very large amount of the frauds upon the revenue in regard to whisky have arisen first in the bonded warehouses, and in the transmission of whisky from one bonded warehouse to another, and its transmission from the manufactory to the bonded warehouse. By arranging a tax which can be collected at the still, and abolishing the bonded warehouses, you certainly escape that avenue of fraud. The second great source of fraud has been, I think, the large illicit distillation of whisky from molasses in the little stills that are worked in the cellars and the garrets of private houses which are outside of the reach of the most vigilant detective in the revenue service. By the tax which we now propose to put upon whisky you destroy this illicit distilling of molasses, because even if those who distill it escape the tax they cannot produce it at a less rate than whisky can be produced from grain, adding the fifty cents tax to it. There is a second source of fraud which you escape by the reduction of the tax.

I confess, Mr. President, that with others I regret to be compelled to admit that the Government of the United States cannot collect any tax which it chooses to impose; but as the Senator from Oregon said this afternoon, human nature is weak, and if the temptation is too great it will not stand it. I remember to have heard an incident which occurred with Mr. Lincoln, who was in difficulty about getting somebody to send down to the southern States as a cotton agent upon one occasion. He selected one of his old and long-tried friends and sent him into that locality, and was comforted by the belief that he had an honest man there. A few months after this gentleman had become fairly established in his duties, he wrote to Mr. Lincoln asking to be relieved. Mr. Lincoln replied inquiring why he wanted to add to his many troubles by asking him now to look for another officer in whom he had confidence to send down there. He replied to Mr. Lincoln that he was almost a believer in the doctrine that every man had his price; that the blockade runners in cotton had offered him already $250,000, and he thought it likely the next offer would be $500,000, and he did not know whether he had moral courage enough to resist it, and therefore he thought he had better be recalled while he was honest.

The difficulty of this whole matter, in my judgment, is that the amount of money involved is so immense that it is impossible by any improvements, or any taxation, or any guards of legislation which you can throw around it to prevent the revenue from being largely defrauded, so long as you continue so excessive a rate as five hundred per cent. tax on any article. I should be glad personally if this tax could be collected, because I believe that whisky is one of the articles that ought to pay a very heavy tax; and I adhered during last autumn, and the early part of this session, to the idea that we ought to make another and further attempt to collect the tax of two dollars a gallon; but the most careful investigation I have been able to give the subject has convinced me that it is time we made an experiment in some other direction.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I believe with the Senator from New Jersey, after his speech, that poor human nature is weak. We find from his own confession that after years of experience in business, having fully made up his mind that we ought to try the experiment of so adjusting our machinery and so selecting our officers as to see whether we could not collect two dollars a gallon on this greatest and most pernicious of luxuries, he has suddenly, through the weakness of human nature, under whatever temptation has been offered to him, turned a somersault and come over to the proposition that the tax has all the time been just four times too high. I am bound to believe, Mr. President, that human nature is weak, and that some share of that weakness—and I say it without any disrespect—may be found within the Committee on Finance as well as among those gentlemen who are so stubborn and so unable to receive light as to be determined to fight this question with the whisky men out on this line, if it takes until next March.

Philosophically there can be only one of two reasons or classes of reasons why this tax cannot be collected. The first is that the law adjusting this tax is unjust and oppressive, based upon a wrong principle. That is a legislative reason. The second is, assuming the law to be based upon a right principle, agents to execute that law have been selected who have been faithless to their duty. You may turn it over as much as you please; you may resort to as much sophistry or as much explanation as you please; you may be as vague as you like; nevertheless, under these two heads you are obliged to consider this question.

Now, I have not yet been convinced that the theory of this law, which was agreed upon four years ago, is wrong. We have had four years of legislation upon this principle of two dollars a gallon tax. I for one am unwilling to confess at this particular point of time or any other point of time, until I shall be convinced of it, that the representatives of the people, the responsible law-making power of the country, have been deceiving themselves session after session for four long years as to the principle upon which a tax upon this luxury ought to be imposed. I do not believe it. They have been home session after session; they have consulted with their constituents; they have understood what the public sentiment is; they have known that the hard-working classes of this country are in favor of imposing taxation upon the luxuries that are used in the land. And therefore I assume that they have returned to the legislative halls imbued with the principles that their constituents have reflected upon them of keeping up this tax to the point where it now stands. If they have not, then it is a confession of a greater weakness of human nature than that to which my friend from New Jersey has alluded, that we have not acted before. Why have we stood here idle all the day long, as the Scripture hath it, and not lifted our hands to correct this great legislative evil if the error and the fault has laid at the door of Congress all this time. I deny the assertion and insist upon the proof. And what is the proof brought forward by the Finance Committee in favor of this proposition that the error has been ours, and not at the other end of the avenue all this while? Why, they say you do not get the tax. Granted; but I fail to see the necessary connection between the fact that you do not get the tax and the fact that is now asserted that the fault is in the law, and not in the executors of it. It is an arbitrary choice the committee make if they stop there and say it is our fault rather than the fault of the Chief Executive. No, sir; the true principle upon which taxation ought to be imposed—and the experience of other countries has demonstrated that it can be imposed upon that principle—is to put the highest possible rate on articles of luxury; and what can be more so than this, an article the production of which it would be a great advantage to this country if it could be discouraged instead of encouraged, and leave the corn and the wheat and the rye that go into your poison to be fed to the children of the drunkard instead of turned into liquid and given to him as a drink.

I say, sir, that the principle of taxation has been and always must be that luxuries of this description ought to bear the highest possible rate of taxation, and that there is no limit beyond which you ought not to go if you choose to get it from this source at all, so long as anybody is willing to buy his glass of whisky if he does pay five hundred per cent. of the cost of it to the Government.

Mr. CATTELL. If the Government got it I would not object to any rate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then my friend from New Jersey admits that the true principle upon which the law-making power ought to proceed is to wring from this injurious and detrimental business of the country the largest possible penny that can be wrung from it. Then we turn over to the other question, can you get it? He says that you cannot, because the officers of the law may be exposed to such a great temptation in the way of bribery and corruption as that they will not resist, and that they will corruptly and unfaithfully neglect their duty in favor of the distillers of whisky. I do not believe the proposition. I will put it to my friend if he believes the proposition? Take his own district in New Jersey, if it were left to him to select an assessor, a collector, and an inspector of internal revenue in his district, will he rise in his place and say that he could not select one hundred men in that district to whom he could repose this trust with an absolute certainty in a moral sense that they would resist all temptation, no matter how great it might be? I know that my friend could resist that temptation, and I believe that in point of honesty, from the very fact that he is here, there are hundreds and thousands of men in the State of New Jersey as honest as he is. If there had not been my friend would not have honored us with his presence. He represents the honest party of New Jersey, made up of the honest men; and if he could have the selection of the officers of the revenue in that State I will give him my bond, poor as it be, or my word, which is as good as my bond, neither having any pecuniary value, that he would find that the two-dollar tax would be collected.

But my friend says that at the two-dollar tax all the men will be driven out of the business. Suppose they are. Wheat and corn are good things to make into meal; they are good things to export; they are good things to feed to your operatives in your factories, much better than it is for them to drink them in liquid form. Although to the head of the family it does not always taste as well, the children like it better, as a rule. I do not think the country will be injured if we get no revenue at all from whisky, provided no whisky is made, and I believe my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WILSON] will agree to that proposition.

Where, then, do we find ourselves? We find ourselves standing upon the Republican platform with a confession that, although this is one of the articles upon which the highest tax ought to be imposed, the Republican party that is to come into power in March next has not in it the virtue and persistent faith and courage to collect this imposition, that it cannot trust itself, and that the fault for the last four years has been that the members of Congress who make your laws have so adjusted them as that it cannot trust itself.

I deny the proposition, sir. If you will look at the history of this traffic, if you will look at the long list of revenue officers whose names have been associated with the frauds and neglects of duty, you will find in nine cases out of ten that those officers have been appointed and kept in office and have been dealt with under political influences that are adverse to the interests which my friend from New Jersey and myself have most at heart, and that they have been screened and continued in their misdeeds. And if he will turn to an official report which has been laid on our tables to-day touching some recent investigations into the causes that produced a sudden termination to a great trial which went on here, he will find that the "sinews of war" that were to be raised to accomplish that purpose were to be procured, as one of their sources, out of the settlement of whisky causes by the agents of the Executive of the United States in New York. I do not say, because I have no right to say it and I have not the proof, that the Executive of the United States was a party to that arrangement; but I say that the evidence which is detailed in this report shows that through the means of Government officials and the friends of the Executive, that was the great source, and that steps were taken to draw from that source, from which the "sinews of war" were to be drawn for that purpose.

Mr. CONNESS. Were drawn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Were to be drawn. I do not know whether they were drawn or not. Where, then, do we find ourselves? The newspapers for the last two years have been full of these whisky cases, full of defection and corruption on the part of the assessors and collectors of this tax. I have stood on the ground, and I believe my constituents stand on the ground, that the fault in the non-collection of the tax is in the administration of the law, and that the chief administrator of the law, to whom the Constitution has confided the responsibility and the duty of executing it, and his aids and abettors, and his party are the responsible authors of these losses. And, therefore, I desire to stand upon the law as it is, and if we can, as I believe we shall, succeed in effecting a reformation in the administration of the law by the selection of a new officer, then I shall be willing to try the experiment, with some faith in its success, of getting out of this great luxury and out of these great monopolies that tax which such a luxury and such monopolies ought to bear, and thus relieve the burdens that are imposed on other branches of industry and commerce in the country.

So, Mr. President, without trespassing longer on the time of the Senate, I propose for one to stand by the old-fashioned tax of two dollars a gallon, and to stand by it until it is tried by a fresh administration appointed by a new President, who, as I have said, I have faith to believe will come in in the interest of a real execution of the laws, and until I shall see that there is a practical proof of what the Senator from New Jersey alleges, that you cannot in this country find enough virtuous and honest people to collect a tax of two dollars a gallon upon this luxury.

Mr. CAMERON. I desire only to make a little calculation with my friend, the Senator from New Jersey. He said that a very small distillery would produce fifty barrels a day.

Mr. CATTELL. No; I said a moderate distillery. There is a great difference between that and a very small distillery.

Mr. CAMERON. Not so much. I will show that the Senator is still wrong. He says that a moderate distillery will make fifty barrels a day, upon which, at two dollars a gallon, the tax would be $4,000 a day. Suppose a moderate distillery should make one hundred barrels a day, the tax on that at fifty cents a gallon, taking the barrels at forty gallons each, would be twenty dollars a barrel, or $2,000 a day. It would not be a very immoderate distillery that would make two hundred barrels a day, and there the tax would be $4,000 at once. There, then, under this fifty-cent tax is $4,000 daily temptation at a moderate distillery making two hundred barrels. Then how much better off are we? The whole argument of the Senator from New Jersey was to show that men could not stand the temptation of large sums of money. I show him that in that respect he is no better off by his proposed reduction.

My notions are exactly those expressed by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] that we are now about to make a change of Administration; that the tax has not been collected because we believe, and have so told our constituents, that those in power have not carried integrity into the performance of their duty. I desire to go before the people at the next election and make that issue, and say to them, "Elect our man, and we will put honest and faithful people in power who will collect this tax, and thereby save you from all other taxation." On the other hand, by reducing this tax, you admit that you are unfit for government—unfit to hold the reins of power. Surely, if there is a proper tax in the world it is one on an article which is so entirely a luxury as this. Men who like whisky will drink it, no matter what it costs.

The Senator from New Jersey told us that it required years to make good whisky. Why, sir, good whisky does not sell for one dollar a gallon, nor two dollars either. Ordinary whisky, and not the most expensive whisky either, sells readily for five dollars a gallon; and upon a gallon of whisky which will sell for five dollars two dollars is a small tax. To be sure, a large amount of it, that which the Senator from Kentucky said would kill at forty yards, is sold for less than that. But I cannot see any reason whatever why we, a party who boast so much of our reform and our ability to conduct the Government better than the other party, should, on the eve of the election, admit that we are unfit for the place to which we aspire.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Mr. President, it would seem almost, from the persistent attacks of Senators in relation to the amount of the tax proposed by this bill to be placed upon spirits, that there was a combination at the last moment to defeat the bill. I am aware that on this subject Senators as well as Representatives are usually eloquent and sometimes prolix. The arguments that have been advanced to-night are not new to me. Every time Congress has met since the passage of the law imposing two dollars a gallon upon whisky, and every time that the facts have demonstrated that it has not been collected, the law has been amended, and each time we have said to ourselves, "This time at all events we will make the penalties and forfeitures so severe that the law will be enforced;" and it is not all the time since we have had a perverse Executive. Before that, when we had officers recommended by ourselves, the law was not and could not be enforced.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much did we collect in 1864?

Mr. POMEROY. I should like to inquire when the law fixing two dollars tax came into effect.

Mr. SHERMAN. In March, 1865.

Mr. POMEROY. When since then had we our friends in office?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I have heard various Senators say that it was a very novel and unusual thing in the Senate of the United States when a Senator rose to speak that he should be interrupted by colloquies from all sides of the Senate. I have sometimes transgressed in that respect myself, but I do not conceive it to be a proper precedent, and as I do not propose to occupy over five minutes, I prefer to have all of that time myself.

Mr. POMEROY. I ask the Senator's pardon.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. My colleague says that the present tax can be enforced. I think we have demonstrated by practical experience that it cannot be, and as a practical man I think that we ought to legislate in view of practical results. The truth is that the world regards the transgression of laws which are enacted for the enforcement of revenue, whether foreign or domestic, not in the same light that they do any other criminal transgressions, where there is a forfeiture or a penalty of the penitentiary annexed. It is only evil because it is prohibited. They do not feel that there is any disgrace in evading a custom-house law or an internal revenue law; it is not evil in itself, but merely evil because it is prohibited. You cannot make the condition of a man who merely transgresses a revenue law the same as that of one who transgresses some other criminal statute. Take for instance, as an illustration, diamonds. Diamonds are of no use; they are used by men and women of wealth merely for ornamentation; and yet do we propose to levy any such duty on them as we do upon iron? No, sir; the only amount of duty we levy upon diamonds is ten per cent., and that is much more than we can collect. The old duty was a correct one, five per cent. upon diamonds; and at the time the duty was raised above that we had then the evidence before us that they could be freighted and delivered to parties in New York for seven and a half per cent., with the duty paid, even if the duty was ten per cent. Contracts were being entered into to that effect. And now this very week I have heard of parties here selling diamonds in the street; I have no doubt they were foreign Jews that brought them over, smuggled them in some way, and never paid any duty upon them. If the duty was reduced to five per cent. I have no question but that we could collect treble the amount we now do upon them. And yet it was utterly impossible to get a vote in the House of Representatives for any sum less than ten per cent. upon diamonds; and if it shall result here now to-night that this tax is kept at two dollars a gallon on whisky, it will prove in the end that we cannot collect it. Having faithfully tried for these last three years by some means to enforce it, and never believing that it could be collected, I am ready now to try another experiment, and it may be but an experiment; but I believe that the Committee of Ways and Means of the House of Representatives have labored long and faithfully on this subject, and I am for accepting their conclusions in the main, and adopting them here to-night. I trust we shall have a vote on this question and get through with this bill.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I voted against imposing this tax of two dollars a gallon originally, and I hold now the same opinions I then held with regard to the policy of its imposition. I did not then believe that the law would be enforced. I then believed that frauds would be sown broadcast through the country by it. But all opposition to the rate proposed was then unavailing. There were two classes of persons who carried this tax. I do not allude to those persons who thought this a legitimate object of revenue and desired to get the largest amount from it for the simple purpose of easing the Treasury; I allude to two other classes: first, those who look upon the manufacture of whisky as an evil, a moral and social evil, in the community, and desire, by virtue of the law-making power of the United States to repress the manufacture, to prevent the creation of the article. It is very true that we have no power here in Congress to destroy the production of any article allowed to be created by the laws of the several States, and an article of common property and of common traffic in the country. We can only operate upon property in our revenue laws as a revenue question for the purpose of obtaining money to the Treasury. But, as I said before, there were a large number of persons who had votes upon the passage of that bill or who had influence which they exerted upon the men who passed that bill, who thought it was a favorable opportunity to introduce moral reform through the instrumentality of an act of Congress. There was another class of men, those who had quantities of whisky upon hand and who would receive large additional amounts upon its sale if a law should be passed taxing future production at the rate of two dollars a gallon. That was a powerful interest; and whether you regard it now, as some gentlemen did, with favor or not, the fact is undoubted that it had influence and that it did exert its influence, and that most efficiently, upon the action of Congress fixing the rate at two dollars a gallon.

It was these two interests which fixed this tax at two dollars, and we have tried the experiment for a period now somewhat exceeding three years, and it has been a failure; and not a failure merely so far as our revenue is concerned, but a scandal and an evil in the administration of the Government and in the action of our people. And the question now is, whether we shall retrace our steps, whether we shall undo the work we then performed, correct the error which we then committed, or not. The House of Representatives have made the attempt, and have sent to us the proposition upon which their opinions have finally been concentrated; and that is, that we shall tax this article fifty cents a gallon in future, instead of the extraordinary, improvident, fruitless, mischievous, and evil rate of two dollars, which we adopted in March, 1865.

Now, sir, what are the arguments against this proposed change? I have listened to the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. POMEROY;] I always listen to him with satisfaction and very often with instruction; and I have also listened to the astute and able Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.] They have explored the field of argument and have stated to us their objections to this bill, and I suppose they are the best ones that can be produced. What are they? The Senator from Vermont states two points. First, he says this is a question of right or wrong; is this tax right? if so, it is to be maintained; has the Government not power to impose it? is this not a legitimate object of taxation? is it not an insult to us that our law shall be resisted, and should we retire before the assaults of fraudulent men and of objectors? As it is right let us enforce it, says he.

Again, he says this is a question with regard to machinery, the agents which we select to administer the system and the provisions of law by which they are authorized to enforce the tax which we have imposed. These are the two points which he suggests, but he omits the most important one, and because he does not touch that he does not touch the real point of the argument in this debate.

This is a question of expediency. It is not a question of right or wrong. There is no moral question involved in whether whisky should pay fifty cents or two dollars tax per gallon. It is a question of expediency in arranging our revenue system; and our experience is so manifestly and clearly against the expediency of the present rate that I think there ought to be no hesitation in agreeing with the House of Representatives to change it. This is the answer, and I think the sufficient answer, to the argument of the Senator from Vermont, that he does not state the main, true, real, important, vital question by which this subject can be determined, and determined, in my judgment, right by the Senate.

The Senator from Kansas made two points, also. The first was that the Government was the holder of an immense quantity of whisky, now twenty-five million gallons, an amount which would stagger gentlemen almost when they come to contemplate it. Think of the Government of the United States holding as owner twenty-five million gallons of this property, now having it in hand and interested in a market for its sale! The Senator confounded two things that are entirely distinct in their character. He is alluding to the amount of whisky in store owned by private individuals, held in storehouses, and not yet introduced into market. The Government is not the owner; it has no direct necessary interest in its sale. His whole argument is misconceived, because it is founded upon a mistake. This is private and not Government property. Well, sir, that part of his argument which he stated so triumphantly, which would have been very powerful if it had been correct, must be put aside; there is nothing in that.

Then he recurred to the other argument always introduced when the debate pinches upon questions of that kind. He introduced the moral considerations involved in the discussion of such bills, and the one to which I referred a short time since in the first remarks I made, and that is, that this is an article of production which ought to be discouraged by the Government, repressed; that instead of grain being turned into liquid and used in the form of spirits by the people it should be consumed as flour or some other more innocent and meritorious form.

These are all the arguments, so far as I remember, which have been stated against this bill. Now, sir, instead of this two dollar tax upon whisky having produced reform in the country of any kind, it has introduced evil and mischief. It has produced no temperance reform, no apparent decrease in the consumption of spirits as a drink. Nothing of that sort has been secured, although this experiment has been going on for three years; but this tax has sown fraud broadcast through the land, demoralized the people, or at least a portion of them, and our public agents.

Upon the whole, Mr. President, the argument in favor of this bill, in my judgment, is irresistible, and I shall vote for it with a perfectly clear mind, with a judgment entirely convinced of its propriety.

There is only one other point to which I will allude. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] assails the selection of public agents for the administration of our tax laws; particularly our agents concerned in the collection of the tax on whisky. I consider that one of the main reasons for the present unsatisfactory condition of our public service is a law which was introduced by himself and which was passed by the Senate mainly upon the advocacy given to it by himself and by the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. WILLIAMS.] I mean the tenure-of-office law. I do not believe you will have a satisfactory administration of your revenue system until that law shall be repealed, removed from the statute-book, and you shall restore complete power to the executive department to select all the agents who are concerned in the administration of our laws, particularly our revenue laws. Until that is done you will never have a satisfactory administration of this or any other system connected with our revenue.

Mr. POMEROY. I merely want to correct a single statement of the Senator from Pennsylvania. What I stated and the Senator from Pennsylvania replied to was this: that the Government of the United States had twenty-five million gallons in bond; that the interest which the Government had in it was the tax. It is in our warehouses, put in and held for the tax at two dollars a gallon, and the interest of the Government in it is $50,000,000. Some say that we have more than that; but the Finance Committee consider that there are at least $50,000,000 worth to the Government in bond, and you provide in this bill that it must be taken out within a year. The House had it six months; but you provide that it must be taken out in a year, and it cannot be taken out without paying the tax. Then we are sure, with any tolerable administration of this law, if we do not manufacture a gallon, but shut up every distillery during the year, that you will be able to get, if it is fairly and honestly taken out, $50,000,000.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I would like to ask the Senator one question. I would like to know of him how the Government can get $50,000,000 out of twenty-five million gallons of whisky, when whisky sells in market at $1 25 and $1 50 a gallon?

Mr. POMEROY. My point is that under the law they are obliged to take it out within a year, and they cannot get it out without paying the tax, or else it is forfeited; so that the interest of the Government I say is not to depreciate the price but to appreciate it, to advance it. If you and I were holders in our individual right, we would not strike it down to sixty cents or fifty cents, when we held it and had a sure claim on it at two dollars a gallon. That is the interest of the Government which I was trying to protect.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania informs us that the legislation of Congress must be had entirely with an eye to revenue, and that it is an unheard of impropriety that we should have any reference in our legislation to any question of morals; that we have to do with the sum of money that we can receive and with nothing else. I wish to ask my honorable friend if I did not misunderstand his position—

Mr. BUCKALEW. I spoke only with reference to the constitutional power to impose taxes. The power exists only for the purposes of revenue.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I did not misunderstand the honorable Senator; but that being so, I wish to ask him whether there has not always been in the customs laws a series of provisions that were based solely upon moral considerations, prohibiting the introduction into the country of a class of articles that the public will suppose to be injurious to the morals of the people? My friend from Pennsylvania knows, now that he is reminded of it, perfectly well that that is so. Therefore it is a little too late in the year 1868 to advance the doctrine that when we are dealing with subjects of taxation we have not a right to consider questions of morals as considered with the operation of such taxation.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I agree that the Government may do certain things with regard to the introduction of articles from abroad under the power to regulate commerce. I did not go into that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand that the laying of taxes on imports does not necessarily come under the head of the regulation of commerce, any more than the laying of internal taxes does; but I should like to have the Senator tell us what greater connection there is between morals in the regulation of commerce and morals in the imposition of taxes? That would be a question for the casuists to determine, which would take as long as it did the Dutchman to determine whether a ghost could go from one place to another without going through the space between, which occupied, I believe, twenty volumes.

My friend from Pennsylvania asserts that after all the true question, which those who believe in standing by this tax have lost sight of, is a question of expediency, which has nothing to do with morals; which has nothing to do with right and wrong, but only has to do with receiving the greatest reasonable amount of tax from a given article. Well, sir, it was upon grounds of expediency that I based my opposition to this change, because in the first place I have been brought up in a school of politics which has taught me that to do right is the highest possible expediency. I am aware that the party to which my honorable friend belongs never has taken exactly that view of the management of affairs. Success is the touch-stone with him and his associates to achieve the given point, no matter what the means may be by which that end is to be achieved, (I will keep within such limits as propriety and my friendship would confine me,) whether it is to be through a platform which has repudiation at one end of it and national rights at the other, or whatever the platform may be. But, sir, looking at it in the view of expediency, in that narrow and low sense in which he treats it, I say that it is expedient that we should receive from this article of luxury, as it is, the largest possible revenue that we can collect. I believe that is generally not disputed.

Then the next question is, Can we collect the two dollars a gallon? The committee and the Senator tell us that we cannot because we have not. They say that is the best proof. In the first year of this taxation, the year 1865, we collected, under an Administration that had been transmitted by one of the most unfortunate tragedies that ever happened in this or any other country, from one President to another, three or four times in round numbers the amount that we have collected in this year. I do not profess to state it with accuracy.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will my friend allow me to give him the figures?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will remind my friend from Ohio, although I am very glad to be interrupted, that he refused me a similar courtesy yesterday; but I wish to be interrupted, because I believe that is the true way of conducting debate to get at the truth.

Mr. SHERMAN. I was going to say that the Senator is mistaken in one thing. The tax was put at two dollars in March, 1865. In 1864, when it was sixty cents, it yielded us $28,431,000. The year following, 1865, during part of which it was sixty cents and part two dollars, it yielded us $15,995,000. The next year, 1866, during the whole of which we had the two-dollar tax, the yield was $29,198,000. In 1867 it was $28,296,000; and in the present year, up to the 1st of July, a little less than sixteen million dollars.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am much obliged to my honorable friend. In exact proportion as you are from the date of the death of President Lincoln, just in that proportion does the yield of the tax on whisky, or anything else in regard to which a "ring" can be formed, descend. I could have foretold, could have guessed, that that explanation would be reached if you looked at the documents. If you find that there is a whisky "ring," you find that every man of them is a supporter of that "conservative" and "constitutional" Administration, which is about to carry the country, amid thunders of applause, through Tammany Hall, as they say, on to some candidate, exactly who we do not yet know. They are all to be found on that side. They are all opposed to the tax and in favor of the Administration.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I desire to say a word to the Senator.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I shall be very happy to hear my friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I have paid some attention to the recent convictions at Richmond. I think there were four or five persons convicted and severely sentenced by the Chief Justice. There was also a recent conviction of a noted man at New York. In the whole number of those convictions, amounting to about half a dozen, there was but one among them who does not belong to the Senator's own party.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, every man who has been convicted undoubtedly under this Administration has been an opponent of it. I should have expected that. And every man who has received a sentence from the Chief Justice has undoubtedly been or will be a Republican.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I rose to correct the Senator, "every one were friends of the Administration." These are the only known cases to which I can point.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us see about those. Who is a Republican and who is otherwise in the State of Virginia nobody of less talent than my friend, and a man in intimate connection with the Administration, could possibly guess. We have had a recent instance of that in executive session, to which, of course, I cannot refer, where whether the man is on one side of the fence or the other, and we have it every time in these southern States, nobody can know. Therefore, I set aside his Virginia instances as being somewhat problematical. Now to the New York instance to which he alludes, where the man had a position: it so happened that that gentleman, according to his history, was a member of the party of my honorable friend. It is true that he sold himself out, as the story goes. I do not wish to abuse a man who is in the State prison and cannot reply to me; but the story goes that he sold himself out to get the speakership at Albany one year, and got it by one vote, and then returned to the fold of that great party which is always ready to receive at least penitents, if not those who have sinned and have not repented. That is his history. I believe I state it fairly.

No, Mr. President, it is a fact that my friend from Pennsylvania cannot deny that this great combination of operators against this law is just as thoroughly a combination in favor of this Administration and of the Democratic party as it is that I, who stand up here and stand by the law, am opposed to it. I do not say that the Democratic party is to blame for it. I do not say that the Administration is to blame for it. People cannot help admiring men who befriend them; and inasmuch as the conduct of this Administration has been such as to encourage and uphold, either affirmatively or negatively, this gigantic, informal, unorganized corporation, I do not think it is very unnatural that that corporation should lend all its energies to the defense of the President of the United States when he is impeached, and to the support of whoever it may be when he comes to be a candidate for office. I am not surprised at it at all.

My friend says that the real difficulty after all is in the fact that we passed a bill which deprived the President of the United States of the power summarily to remove persons from office when they should be detected in any improper practice, and he imputes to me and my honorable friend from Oregon [Mr. WILLIAMS] the guilt and sin of the passage of that law. My friend from Oregon is probably more to blame than I am, if there is any blame. The idea in that form originated with him. I am proud to say that I did all I could to aid him in carrying through and perfecting that measure, and I do not believe either he or myself is at all ashamed of it yet. Mr. President, were it not for that law to-day, instead of getting only $10,000,000 or $11,000,000, you would not have got $5,000,000. In my humble judgment—and our experience demonstrates it—if that law had not been in force there would not have been a man in the whole internal revenue service of the country, from the Commissioner down, who either was not in the whisky ring or a cousin to somebody who was in the whisky ring.

The truth is that everybody all over the country knows where this responsibility rests, and which are the birds that flock together. Look at the city of New York, where by far the largest proportion of all the whisky in the country, relatively speaking, is distilled and made, where the largest frauds are committed, where millions in a day or a week are taken from the coffers of the Government, or rather kept out of them that ought to go in. What do you see there? Just in proportion as there are distilleries, and just in proportion as there are frauds, you find coming up on election day the greatest majorities for the Democratic party; and the city that can defraud the United States out of its millions in a year can give to the Democratic party majorities by the hundred thousand, I was about to say—by the seventy or eighty thousand. To be sure this may be a perfectly inconsequential coincidence. It may be so; but it so happens that there is the fact: and it is a fact that the intelligent people of this country will not shut up their eyes to; and it will stand the fact until through a reformation of the administrative department of the Government there shall be sent into that city, or selected from it a class of agents (and there are enough of them there now among those citizens who could be selected if there was anybody to select them) who will enforce with fairness and impartiality and incorruptibility the law which declares that upon this liquor whatever is imposed shall be paid.

My colleague has said, reasoning upon economic grounds, and upon ingenious ones, as he always does, that the fact that the article is a luxury does not necessarily prove that it will bear a given rate of taxation. That is true; and he illustrates by referring to the case of diamonds, among the greatest of luxuries, only carrying an impost of ten per cent., which he believes to be double what it ought to be for purposes of revenue. That is all very true; and the reason my colleague well knows is that diamonds are a species of luxury that are easily concealed; that the vigilant and honest and energetic custom-house officer cannot find them. If there is any comparison or illustration to be made between a diamond and a barrel of whisky, or between a small casket of $1,000,000 of diamonds that you could put in your pocket and a huge distillery that runs its five hundred barrels a day, I fail to see it. You can collect the tax on whisky or stop the distilling if your agents are honest. You cannot collect a tax on diamonds where that tax is laid so high that it is an object for the holder and possessor of the diamonds to conceal them, as he can, nine times in ten, beyond the reach of their being discovered; and that I respectfully submit to my colleague is the fair difference between the two cases. But, sir, I do not wish to occupy more of your time.

Mr. CONNESS obtained the floor.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Allow me a moment in reply to my colleague?

Mr. CONNESS. Yes; I leave the discussion between the two Senators from Vermont.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I merely wish to say one word to my colleague in relation to the fact of diamonds being so easily concealed. I had supposed that a very considerable amount of whisky was very easily concealed. [Laughter.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is, through a glass. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. And in relation to this particular subject my colleague ought to know that our own good little State, where we drink no whisky, and where it was supposed we made none, has been shocked by the seizure of two distilleries there. There they thought they could go with entire impunity and hide their stills in the woods in some back town, and buy their molasses, cart it to their distillery, and make a very respectable little sum, much more than they could make by farming in Vermont. It is so over the country; in Tennessee, up and down the Mississippi. So that this high duty of two dollars per gallon tempts almost every rascal in the country to go to work. I say it is utterly impossible that we can collect it, and as practical men we should reduce it to the proper sum.

Mr. CONNESS and Mr. YATES addressed the Chair.

The President pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I took the floor from my friend from California, who yielded to me merely for explanation.

Mr. YATES. I will yield the floor to the Senator from California, if he wishes it.

Mr. CONNESS. No, sir; go on.

Mr. YATES. Mr. President, I do not think I should have said a word on this subject but for the insinuation which has been made that the advocates of the reduction of the tax are in some way or other associated with the whisky ring. I have not the pleasure of knowing any of that honorable fraternity. I will state that in the beginning I was in favor of the imposition of the two-dollar tax. But, sir, when it is intimated that the advocates of a reduction are in the interest of the whisky ring, I respond that the gentlemen are very unfortunate, indeed. They go upon the presumption that the whisky ring men can make more money when the tax is fifty cents on the gallon than they can when the tax is two dollars on the gallon—rather an unreasonable presumption, I think. What inducement is there that the whisky ring should be in favor of the reduction of the tax? Is not their margin great enough now? Will they leave the rich fields, in which they have garnered so much wealth, with a margin of two dollars to the gallon, to make immense fortunes upon fifty cents to the gallon? I say most unfortunate are these Senators. The experience of the country is against them. Under the system of two dollars on the gallon we have seen frauds which have shocked the sense of the nation, which have astounded the good and patriotic and honest of the land, and filled the whole country with demoralization and corruption. And yet these Senators say they are not in the interest of the whisky ring, and that the advocates of reduction are, when they are keeping wide open these doors to the continued commission of frauds.

I admit the correctness of the argument of the Senator from Vermont in so far as he says that we should tax luxuries more than we do the necessities of life. That is a correct principle. But, sir, the question now is whether we are to recognize this trade as lawful or not. If we are opposed to the manufacture and sale of ardent spirits then it is our duty as legislators not to collect a revenue at all from it, or we must tax it to the extent of absolute prohibition in order to carry out the doctrine for which the Senator contended. For instance, it is contended in many of the eastern States and in some of the western States that a State government which issues licenses to the grocery men is deriving a revenue from unlawful enterprises. What is this, if you carry out the same argument, but a license to the manufacturer of alcoholic liquor, that if he will pay two dollars upon the gallon he may continue his trade, however pernicious to society, however demoralizing, however much it fills the land with misery and woe?

But the question for us to decide, and which we must act upon, is this: do we recognize by taxation that the enterprise of manufacturing ardent spirits is a lawful one? If we do, then we must not administer oppressive taxation, burdensome taxation, to any lawful enterprise. While we may justly discriminate to a certain extent between the tax upon luxuries and necessities, yet if we admit that we can tax the article at all, and that the enterprise is a lawful one, then the tax must not be unreasonable. That is the question for the Senator to decide when he argues upon the mere morality of the question.

But, sir, I rose simply to say that I am not afraid of being identified with the whisky ring, when we propose to close up the avenues by which they have made immense fortunes, and filled the land with corruption, when by reducing the tax to a proper limit it can be collected, and when we know by sad experience that the present rate of tax not only cannot be collected, but has been a disgrace to the country in which we live.

Mr. CONNESS and Mr. DAVIS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. DAVIS. I will yield to the honorable Senator from California, as he yielded courteously to the Senator from Vermont a few minutes ago, and lost the floor.

Mr. CONNESS. Not at all; go on, sir.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I do not intend to say many words. I am very fond of a joke, but I think that the finest joke of the season has been cracked to-night when it was announced solemnly that the Radical party disdained success and adopted principle alone as its polar star. I think that is about as ludicrous, when compared with the practices of the party, as anything could well be.

Mr. President, the experience of the world, as has been suggested by one of the Senators from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] has established this truth in all countries: that where taxes reach to an excessive point collection becomes impossible. The whisky tax in the last few years has proved the truth of that proposition again. When the tax was twenty cents at first, and afterward fifty cents, the amount of revenue produced was thirty-eight million dollars and a fraction. The amount of the collections has never been equal to that sum since, except one year, and that was the year before the fiscal year that has just closed. I understand that the produce of the tax for the year that closed on the 30th of June last was about fifteen millions; in 1864 it was thirty-eight millions and a fraction. The highest rate of tax during the year, if I recollect aright, was fifty cents a gallon. Part of the year it was twenty cents and part of the year fifty cents a gallon.

Mr. WILSON. The amount collected was $28,000,000, instead of $38,000,000.

Mr. DAVIS. Twenty-eight million dollars. I thank the honorable Senator for correcting me. So that under the tax of last year of two dollars per gallon the produce was only a little more than half of the amount produced when it was twenty cents and fifty cents a gallon. The honorable Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] attributes this to the faithlessness of the power at the other end of the avenue. I have been expecting that that honorable Senator or some other Radical Senator would attribute the coming of the locusts to the same cause, [laughter,] for I suppose the power at the other end of the avenue had as much to do with the one as the other.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is certainly a strong analogy between the two instances. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIS. I will give another fact to the honorable Senator. I have seen a comparison of the amount of falling off of the revenue in the different districts, the appointments of which were controlled by the Executive, and the districts that were ratified by the confirming power of the Senate, and the aggregate amount, and the amount in detail is in favor of the districts where the Executive alone controlled the appointments.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to see the abstract.

Mr. DAVIS. I will make the issue with the honorable Senator, and I will compare notes with him critically and according to the record. As it has been shown to me, the amount of falling off in detail, and in the aggregate, in the districts controlled entirely by the Senate was greater than it was in the districts controlled by the Executive.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator permit me to ask him if he has that table here?

Mr. DAVIS. I have not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask him what districts he refers to?

Mr. DAVIS. A great many.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Can he name some of them? Was New Orleans one?

Mr. DAVIS. I will bring up the whole matter in detail at a more convenient season, and I will confront the honorable Senator.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to inquire if the district of which Steadman was collector was one?

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. I should like to say one word on that point, if the Senator from Kentucky has no objection. I saw that statement as it was printed in the newspapers, and wrote a letter to Mr. Rollins to know as to the facts. He replied to me that there was not one word of truth in it from beginning to end; that he had had nothing whatever to do with the appointments since the Philadelphia convention, and that that statement was totally false.

Mr. DAVIS. My honorable friend mistakes my statement. I did not state, nor did the statement which I saw make Mr. Rollins responsible for the appointments; but it made the Senate responsible for the appointments. I will give an example. I had nominated in a particular collection district in Kentucky five or six of the best business and most honest men in the district; and each of them successively was rejected by the Senate until an inferior and a less successful collector was eventually forced into the place. But I will bring that matter up at a more convenient season, and with a little more authenticity.

What I am after now is this: that as the honorable Senator from Oregon demonstrated with so much force this evening, whenever you raise the tax upon any article beyond a given point you make it an uncollectable tax and you necessarily produce frauds and evasions. That is the exact condition in which the whisky tax exists now and has existed for the last two or three years. The whisky costs in the production of it from thirty to forty cents a gallon. There is a tax imposed upon it of five times and more than five times the original cost. Whenever you lay a tax that has that disproportion to the cost of a particular article, you necessarily lay out a scheme for every kind of fraud and perjury and evasion of which the subject is susceptible. Such have been the operation and the effect of the tax of two dollars a gallon upon whisky.

A good deal is said about the "whisky ring" here. The distillers in my State do not belong to the whisky ring. As I understand, the whisky ring is composed of men who deal in the article upon which the tax has not been paid. So the producers in my State understand it. They know that they make the best article that is brought into market, and all they desire is that the tax, whatever it may be, shall be fairly collected. If you impose a tax of two dollars upon them, all that they desire is that the producers in New York and Brooklyn, and everywhere else, shall be made to pay faithfully the same tax; because, whenever other distillers are bound by the law and by the administration of the law to pay the same rate of tax that they pay, they can force the other distillers out of the market, because they can afford to sell as low and they will sell a superior article. The distillers in Kentucky do not complain of the rate of tax so much as they do that it is so high that it is not and cannot be collected. No fact is better authenticated than this. You may go into the New York markets, and you may find whisky branded properly, as having passed inspection and having paid the tax, that can be purchased at from a dollar and a half to two dollars a gallon. That proves only this general fact, that that whisky has passed into market without paying the tax; it has passed into the market by fraud, by perjury, by the defalcation of the officers whose duty it was to see that the tax had been paid.

It is these abuses and imperfections of the system of which the distillers in my country complain. They do not care the toss-up of a copper whether the tax on whisky is fifty cents or two dollars per gallon if the tax is honestly and faithfully and punctually collected. But their experience and the experience of the nation for three years proves that the present rate of tax is too high ever to be collected, and that all the frauds that are committed, and they amount to millions upon millions annually, are at the cost, more or less, of the honest producer who pays fairly the tax levied by the Government.

Now, Mr. President, the honorable Senator from Kansas is in favor of a high tax.

Mr. POMEROY. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAVIS. Does the honorable Senator wish a high tax in the aggregate which cannot be collected, or a low rate of tax which can be collected which would yield a greater amount in the aggregate? Which would the honorable Senator prefer?

Mr. POMEROY. I want the tax honestly collected at two dollars a gallon.

Mr. DAVIS. Suppose it cannot be.

Mr. POMEROY. There is no "cannot" about it.

Mr. DAVIS. Experience is the best of all teachers, and it has proved beyond doubt to every unprejudiced and reasonable mind that the tax of two dollars has not been collected and cannot be collected. But this is the proposition, and it was correctly stated by the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BUCKALEW;] so far as the present bill is involved the only legitimate inquiry is, What rate of tax will produce the largest amount of revenue in the aggregate? If two dollars will produce the largest amount, there being no fairer subject for taxation than whisky, I say tax it. But when experience has proved for three years that the tax cannot be collected, and that at least three fourths of the whisky that is manufactured goes into market without the payment of any tax at all, and in that way not only defrauds the Government, but the honest producer of the article who does pay the tax, I ask the honorable Senator from Kansas if it is not time to abandon it? And when we recur to a previous time when the tax ranged from twenty cents to fifty cents per gallon, and learn that the amount of the tax then collected was nearly double what was collected under the two-dollar tax for the last year, can there be a reasonable doubt that the rate of two dollars is too high, and that it is impossible to collect that amount of tax?

Mr. President, I do not care what the rate of tax upon whisky is. I should be willing now and forever, if the Government had the power and could so legislate that a barrel of whisky should never be made again, that that legislation should take place. I am no friend of the production of whisky, or to its use as a beverage. I concede fully with the honorable Senator from Kansas that a great amount of the misery and crime that disgrace the world and deform humanity results from the excessive use of whisky. But next to the use of whisky, the most fruitful source of the crime of the present day is the legislation of Congress to enforce the tax of two dollars a gallon upon whisky. Why, sir, your laws are studded throughout with fines, forfeitures, penalties, perjuries, punishments by fine and imprisonment. All the paraphernalia of the most atrocious system of penal laws that was ever devised by the wit and the ingenuity of man teem in your present revenue laws in relation to whisky, and they have failed wholly and signally of the purposes for which they were made. I say that your whole legislation has been to organize and create a hot-bed of crime, fraud, immorality, perjury, the effect of which has been to corrupt this nation and the American people to a greater extent than they have ever been corrupted by any other cause save and except the intemperate use of the article upon which you impose this enormous rate of tax. Will you continue this system? It is a foul blot, a disgrace upon the nation and upon legislation.

Sir, there are laws that can be executed, and there are laws that cannot be executed. There is a higher law than your legislation in this country, and that higher law is the great public sentiment. As two or three honorable Senators have said, you cannot stamp upon an act that is merely malum prohibitum the infamy and the odium of an act malum in se. It is not of the heinous, immoral nature, that moral turpitude which is necessary to turn the sentiments of a community and a people against a crime that the law has denounced as one.

Sir, when you impose a tax of two dollars upon whisky, the men who pay it—the men who pay it at last—are the consumers, but both the distiller and the consumer begin to inquire, "Why is this enormous rate of tax imposed upon me?" They turn to your legislation, and they see that you maintain a Freedmen's Bureau to support and educate hundreds of thousands of lazy, vagabond negroes; and see that that is one of the enormous drafts upon the Treasury of the United States, and upon the taxes which they pay upon whisky. They turn then to your standing Army that is not kept up for the defense of the country, for the support of the Government in its just authority, for the protection of the frontiers and of the coast upon the ocean, but that is kept up to the number of twenty or thirty thousand men in the southern States. Here you have a standing Army of some fifty-eight or sixty thousand men that if the companies were filled up you could raise to one hundred and six thousand; and they inquire, why is this enormous standing Army maintained? For the purpose of keeping the southern people in a state of subjection to your legislation and to your friends, the negroes, the freedmen of those States. You deprive them of the power of self-government; you withhold from them every constitutional right and liberty for which their fathers fought, and which is guaranteed to them by the Constitution. This second great drain annually costs thirty or forty millions more than is necessary for the Army of the United States. Sir, when the intelligent people of the United States, who are ground to the dust for the payment of the enormous taxes that are impoverishing them and their families, begin to inquire where are the expenditures of this enormous tax of two dollars a gallon upon whisky—the original cost of which is only about thirty cents—do you expect to convince them, the juries of the country, and the public sentiment of the country, that it is a heinous and a base crime to evade the payment of these enormous taxes when they are collected for these purposes?

Mr. President, there are some great principles of human nature that can never be conquered by any legislation. I will state one or two. One is that temptation and fraud make crime; temptation and opportunity make criminals. If there are any men who are not criminals, and who will not commit crime, they are the ones who are not brought into contact with temptation.

Sir, it is utterly impossible to impose that rate of tax upon whisky and to dream of collecting it. The man who persuades himself that it can be collected is a dreamer. He does not understand the imperfect nature to which he belongs; he shuts his eyes against experience; and he refuses to listen to the silent teachings of that inward man that instructs us all. You cannot collect such a tax. You have attempted it by experiments that ought to have satisfied you not only of its impracticability but of its impossibility, and it is time that you should change your system of legislation.

Another principle of human nature is that there must be a proportion between crime and punishment. The guilt, the atrocity, the turpitude of the act must wear something like an equitable proportion to the severity of the punishment. You may inflict punishment as severe as you please in every line in your bill for the violation of the laws in relation to the payment of the tax upon whisky, and you will never instruct or teach the mind or moral sense of the people of the United States that they are atrocious and heinous crimes. They are not so. They are laws against justice; they are laws against equal rights; they are laws that forget entirely the proportion between crime and punishment; they are laws that shock human nature and the sense of justice that is innate in man; and whenever you introduce a code of that character in relation to any subject the people will subordinate your code to a higher code, namely, their own sense of propriety, of right and wrong, of what belongs to our common humanity. There is no wise, practical legislation but what seeks a just apportionment between crime and punishment; and there is no wise and statesmanlike legislation that shuts the mind and the eyes to the lessons of experience as you, gentlemen, are attempting to do in relation to this subject. You must be taught by the great principles of human nature, common to us all, and you must be taught by the lessons of experience; and when these two sources of teaching instruct you that you are upon a wrong system it is wisdom and patriotism and common sense to change your course of legislation and to adopt a better and a more correct and philosophical line.

Mr. McCREERY. It is almost ten o'clock and the thermometer is standing at ninety-eight degrees. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Several SENATORS. No, no; let us finish the bill to-night.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

Mr. CONNESS. I shall not detain the Senate long.

Mr. McCREERY. I call for a division on my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is rather late.

Several SENATORS. It is too late.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CONNESS. I thought I had the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. You did not seem as if you wished to occupy it. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNESS. Mr. President, with great respect to the Chair, I have noticed that there was a kind of indisposition to let me occupy the floor this evening; but I rather think the Chair was right in the main, and that it ought not to have been occupied by myself or anybody else as long as it has been.

I desire simply to say a very few words before the vote is taken. I regretted, while listening to the honorable Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] to see an apparent attempt to resolve this debate into a political turn or aspect. One listening to the Senator while he was speaking would have supposed it was the mission just now of the Republican party to keep the tax on whisky at two dollars a gallon, and that the Democratic party were responsible and immoral in endeavoring to reduce the tax to fatten the whisky ring and keep money out of the Treasury. I did not understand, and cannot be made to understand, I think, the drift or pertinence of my honorable friend, who generally speaks with so much ability. I have a different view of this case. I believe that it is our legislation, dictated, I might say, by the committees of Congress, the Committee on Finance of this body, and of Ways and Means of the other House, that has organized the whisky ring in the Republic, by putting the tax at two dollars a gallon.

Mr. SHERMAN. I beg to correct my friend there, by saying that the Senate did it against the vote of the Committee on Finance and against their report.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. And the House committee reported in favor of a much less sum; only sixty cents, I think.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Committee on Finance reported in favor of a tax of one dollar, and I stood faithfully by it, and the committee stood by it; but we were overruled by a deliberate vote of the Senate.

Mr. CONNESS. I am very glad to be corrected in that. My mind ought to have been right upon it, for I must have been here. But I am willing to repeat that we, the Congress of the United States, are responsible for organizing this so-called whisky ring by keeping the tax at two dollars a gallon. Experience has taught, and reason might have taught before experience, that two dollars a gallon cannot be collected in this country from whisky.

Mr. FERRY. Nor anywhere else.

Mr. CONNESS. My friend from Connecticut says, "nor anywhere else." An equivalent tax is collected in Great Britain.

Mr. FERRY. No; it is not.

Mr. CONNESS. I believe it is, with great respect to the Senator. But let me say the cases are very different. They have their population within a very small space, and the country is policed in a manner and to an extent that we could never police ours, and I trust never will; and, indeed, I might say here, that when my honorable friend from Kentucky who addressed the Senate shall have ceased, and his associates with him, their opposition to good measures in this country, and to the reign of peace and justice, this country will be, as I hope it will soon, policed to a lesser extent than it is at this time. But, sir, how is it possible to so police a continent, every acre of which, if you leave out your cities, is yet, as compared to European countries, a forest? It is simply impossible. We have undertaken to do it, and what has been the result? Less collections annually.

My honorable friend from Vermont said that those less collections were because of the appointment of bad officers by Andrew Johnson. I am willing to admit that the present President of the United States is very responsible, and his Secretary of the Treasury, for the failure to collect the revenue to an extent. They are responsible from Sheridan Shook down to Sloanaker. It is enough to say that you cannot get a revenue officer removed upon application, with facts sustaining the application, who is engaged in cheating and defrauding this Government. There is the fault there.

But that is not all the fault; nor is it fair or honest to say that it is but Democratic appointees and so-called Johnsonian appointees that do the stealing as officials. There is not integrity enough in the Republican party, nor any other party, to stand up against such a tax. Why, sir, in the State that I in part represent here whisky has not attained the price of your tax in the markets of San Francisco since the tax was imposed. The greatest distillery in that city, conducted by James Dowes & Co., has been closed at least ten months out of every year since the tax of two dollars was imposed. They are honest men, able to conduct their business, anxious to conduct it, anxious to pay the tax even of two dollars, but they could not do it. Between illicit distillations, as was stated here by a Senator to day, in cellars and by-places, the aggregate making a vast amount of spirits, and importations from New York escaping without paying the tax there, but securing the brand of the inspection officers, no establishment could be run in San Francisco or California paying the tax to the Government. The consequence has been a loss of revenue on one hand, an increase of other taxes upon honest and industrious people, and a deprivation of the right to carry on successfully private business on the part of citizens.

I listened to my friend from Kansas who moralized on the subject of whisky, and I imagined for a while that I was hearing a temperance lecture, that we had come together to-night for that purpose. It was a temperance lecture.

Mr. POMEROY. It would not hurt.

Mr. CONNESS. No, sir; and I am sorry to say it could not do anybody any good, for our experience is that those who want whisky will get it, and you cannot tax it away from them. Why, sir, if two dollars a gallon tax was calculated to make sobriety in the country, why does not my friend advocate four dollars, and then try eight dollars, and so go on until the people are universally rendered moral and sober under the legislation of my friend from Kansas? No, Mr. President, while I am not an advocate of the use of spirits as a beverage, and have never practiced it myself, I do not believe in its prohibition. I believe that its manufacture and use are legitimate things, and that we have no right to prohibit them. But that is not in this case; it is a question of revenue that we are discussing; it is a question of the money that we want, and we want to get money as revenue with as little oppression to the industries of the country as possible. We have taken the way, I submit, by keeping this tax at two dollars a gallon, to oppress an industry in the country as much as possible and get the least possible amount of revenue after you have made politicians, important politicians, powerful politicians, out of the whisky dealers of the country—not the legitimate dealers, not the legitimate distillers, and yet many of these have had to engage in the business in self-defense.

There have been, I may say, thousands of barrels seized at San Francisco on their arrival there from New York with false inspection marks or brands, unquestionably the result of a combination between the fellows employed at New York by the Government as officers and the owners or importers of those spirits. They have been seized, and that is all I ever heard of them. The next thing after seizure is a compromise that no man hears anything of, another division of the spoils in which the Government gets little.

Mr. WILSON. And compromises a great deal.

Mr. CONNESS. It compromises its authority away; it compromises its dignity away; it becomes the sport of the worst men in the country. And yet gentlemen insist upon keeping up this condition of things. We have given this whisky combination to the present Administration, so far as they have got it, and they have got it entirely. Why? Because they are the source of appointment, because they are the source for compromise; and if there were a Republican President to-morrow and a Republican Secretary of the Treasury, and this law should be kept in existence, while there might be an honest struggle to administer the law, the whole mass would be corrupted notwithstanding.

It may be said that this is arguing a low estimate of human nature. Well, Mr. President, it is not so with me. I have a high opinion of human nature; but you must not subject it to these unnecessary strains. Nothing is truer than what was stated by my friend from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] when up, that persons do not feel that the evasion of revenue is a crime equivalent to other crimes. The world-wide expression of "a custom-house oath" illustrates this. I am glad, sir, to see the sense of returning reason in the Government, and I hope that this tax will be reduced. I am not willing to launch a new Administration, if it shall be so that we shall get the one of our choice, as I have no doubt we will, upon the problem of government under influences and auspices such as a law of that kind would furnish. I want to begin anew, and I hope that by that time we shall be able to abolish all taxes upon all other industries and collect our internal revenue from the two articles contemplated by this bill, and I think we shall be able to do so.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. Mr. President, I do not wish to make a temperance speech or a political speech on this amendment; but I do wish to reply to two or three arguments which have been made use of here by different gentlemen this evening.

The honorable Senator from Kentucky, to whom I listened this evening, as I always listen with great interest and with great instruction to myself, stated that the difficulty had been that the law was not executed. I agree with him fully in that. Why, sir, the record of this whisky tax has been a path of crime and corruption, blackness and meanness, from the moment the law was passed until this time. But I understood him to intimate that the fault rested with Congress. Now, sir, it is not the function of the Congress of the United States to execute the laws which it passes.

Mr. DAVIS. If my honorable friend will permit me, I meant only in this respect, that it imposed a tax enormously too high.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. If it imposed a tax enormously too high, still it was not the duty of Congress to execute the law which it had passed, but it was the duty of the executive officers of this Government to execute that law or to prevent the manufacture of whisky at all. Where does the difficulty rest? Does it rest with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue? Some of the arguments which have been used here to-day would seem to imply at least a reflection upon that officer. It has been my good fortune to know him from boyhood until this moment. He was a school-mate of mine as a boy, and from that time until now no man ever justly cast a shadow of a reflection upon his integrity, upon his moral character in any particular. Simple in his manners, unimpeachable in his integrity, he stands unscathed and unapproached by any taint of corruption through all this path of crime.

Mr. DAVIS. My honorable friend did not understand me as making any imputation upon him.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. Not at all. I have no allusion to the Senator. If improper officers have been appointed to execute this law the guilt does not rest on his skirts, the fault is not at his door; for I know that when he has protested against keeping in office corrupt and improper men his voice has not been listened to; when he has protested against the appointment of men of notoriously corrupt life and habits his voice has not been listened to, but his counsel has been passed by as a thing of no worth.

It was said by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] that this law could be executed, that the tax of two dollars could be collected, that there were honest men in this country who could collect it. I doubt not there are; but the trouble is you cannot get them into the places where they can execute this law. That class of men receive no appointments under this Administration.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is exactly what I maintained.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. Therefore, if we would collect a revenue from whisky, let us put the tax at a point where we can collect it even under this Administration. It was said here to-day that it was dishonorable in the Government not to collect this tax of two dollars. I do not so understand it. If the law was a penalty, if it was imposed as a penalty for crime, then it would be dishonorable to put the tax at anything less than two dollars; but the tax was put on for the purpose of revenue and not for the purpose of punishment; it is not a penal act; it is a revenue law; and when it fails to secure its object, when it fails to bring revenue to the Government, then it is the privilege and the duty of the Government to put the tax at such a point that it can secure a revenue. That is the philosophy of the whole thing. We must expect corruption always when a tax approaches the point of prohibition. There must be in that case one of two things; either an entire exclusion of the article or corruption to secure it, and this tax is just at that point. We all know that this high tax was put on as a temporary measure; nobody anticipated that the tax on whisky would stand at two dollars. It was simply a temporary measure. The war has passed by, and why should not this extra tax pass down in keeping with the taxes on other matters?

I do not wish to extend this discussion. My judgment is that the tax ought to be about a dollar a gallon upon whisky.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I should like to inquire of the Senator why he states that the two-dollar tax was a temporary measure?

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. Because I supposed that all of our internal revenue taxation was temporary; that when the debt shall have passed away which was incurred by the war we shall then return to our old policy; and I hope that day will some time come.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I would not at this time occupy a single moment but for a remark made by the Senator from California. He seemed to argue that the rate of tax at two dollars had been proposed by the Committee on Finance. I have now the record before me, and it proves that the Committee on Finance were always opposed to this high rate of taxation.

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator knows that I accepted his explanation.

Mr. SHERMAN. But still I wish to refer to the record to show the facts. I have before me the report of the Committee on Finance, made on the 25th of May, 1864, in which it appears that the committee proposed a graduated tax of one dollar, one dollar and a quarter, and finally one dollar and a half at a later period. I immediately, as it seems from the language uttered, stated that I believed that tax was too high; that one dollar was enough; that any attempt to enforce so high a rate of taxation would lead to frauds and defeat the revenue. Then the principal controversy that occurred was as to whether we should continue in the bill then pending the House tax upon spirits on hand. The great controversy was in regard to that point. My own position was, according to the opinion here expressed, to retain a tax of fifty cents a gallon upon spirits on hand, and impose one dollar upon the spirits to be manufactured in future, and I have no doubt if my advice had been followed we should have been receiving twice as much revenue as we have got. It was the action of the Senate, in refusing to approve and sanction the deliberate report of the Finance Committee, that got us into this hobble about two-dollar tax. My impression is that that rate was fixed by the report of a committee of conference, but I am not entirely certain as to that. The tax has been held at that for four years, with a constantly diminishing revenue, and I am satisfied now that if the Senate refuse to sanction the action of the Committee on Finance in reducing this tax to fifty cents the whole thing will be a bounty to the worst men in this country, and the tax will operate on the consumer at the rate of two dollars a gallon; but the whisky thieves will get three fourths of it, and this Government will not get fifty cents a gallon.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. President, I do not feel it to be my duty to occupy the attention of the Senate at any length upon this question. The State that I represent at one time was largely interested in the production of whisky. The last census showed the production of that State for the year 1860 to be about nine million gallons. I suppose it is now less than one million gallons. The policy that has been insisted upon by Congress has substantially destroyed the interest and driven the production almost out of existence in the State of Indiana. I resisted the tax at that time of two dollars with such ability as I could command; but I saw it imposed, and I have not been at all disappointed in the results.

Senators who wish to charge all this upon the public officers, and to excuse some officers and to criminate others, will hardly relieve themselves from the responsibility of a very grave mistake in legislation. It was an unjust tax, because it was not proportioned to the value of the article taxed. A tax of six hundred or eight hundred per cent. is not just upon any production from the labor of the country, and of course the attempt to collect it has been a failure. This bill proposes to reduce it from two dollars to fifty cents. I do not know what fortunes are to be made out of this. I am going to vote for it. I had not expected to see the tax reduced below one dollar. I have believed that one dollar could be collected, and that we ought to realize $30,000,000, perhaps $50,000,000, at a dollar a gallon. But as the committee of this body and also of the House of Representatives have agreed on fifty cents, and as it is a proposition favorable to an interest in the section in which I live, I shall vote for the proposition, but am not prepared to say that it is the wisest. When we increased the tax from sixty cents to two dollars the millions of money that were made it is difficult to estimate. Whether there will be a corresponding profit or corresponding loss now sustained by reason of this legislation I am not prepared to say; but when this becomes the law I hope it will be understood that it is not temporary, but that it is permanent. If there be any one thing demanded now by the interests of this country above all others, it is that there shall be some stability in the financial system and the revenue system of the Government.

The Senator from Kentucky suggests that nearly all the whisky is now in bond, having paid no tax, and therefore there cannot be large losses sustained. How much liquor is now held in the course of trade all over the country that has paid the tax I am not able to say, but there is a very considerable quantity, unquestionably. All the druggists of the country, the retail dealers and the wholesale dealers, have their establishments supplied in as limited quantities, of course, as will carry on their business; but that there is a large amount held by traders that has paid the tax I have no doubt, and that there will be very large losses sustained I have no doubt; but that has got to be endured, because this two-dollar tax cannot be endured. That is a failure; it is a failure, in my judgment, for the reasons assigned so well and so forcibly by the Senator from Kentucky.

I am going to vote to reduce the tax; but so far as the rest of the bill is concerned, this complicated machinery that requires a genius to comprehend it, I do not hold myself at all responsible for. I believe that one of the difficulties in collecting the revenue has been in the complicated machinery connected with it. I do not believe that it requires a book to write down the law for the collection of taxes. Plain, simple, direct provisions, punishing as men ought to be punished for the violation of law can be provided without this complicated machinery.

So, while I vote for the bill, I do not commit myself at all to this machinery, for I do not pretend to understand it, and I suppose it will take a revenue officer some considerable time to become familiar with it. What will be its practical effect I cannot tell. I do not believe any Senator who has not been upon the committee and investigated it can tell. Perhaps it will work very great injustice and hardship in many cases. Perhaps it will prove inefficient in others. I do not undertake to say. I vote for the bill simply because it reduces the tax on whisky and brings it down to something like a reasonable and fair rate, not just what I would have proposed, but what, as the case now stands, presents the question as between two dollars, and fifty cents. I vote for the bill exclusively upon that ground.

Now, Mr. President, I have no desire to discuss this bill with any political purpose in view. If we can collect some revenue it will be well. I am not surprised that the Senator from Vermont upon this, as he does upon almost every occasion, seeks to excuse Congress from the responsibility of any failure in the execution of the laws because of the tenure-of-office bill. That is a child of his begetting, and of course he must take care of it. If anybody reaches out a hand toward it he must guard off, of course; and that is a very considerable labor, let me say to the Senator, that is upon his hands, which he will have to discharge and meet as long as he is in the Senate and that law remains upon the statute-book. A vice in legislation is not to be met and apologized for by charging crime upon officers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question, whether, by the laws of the State of Indiana, the Executive has the power of removal from office, or whether men are elected for a definite term?

Mr. HENDRICKS. In the State of Indiana the people elect and the people reelect. The Governor has not very much patronage under his control.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do you fail to administer your laws because there is no executive power of removal?

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Governor of the State of Indiana, so far as he is held responsible for the execution of the laws, has the power placed in his hands, and where the power is not placed in his hands he is not held responsible. But when by your bill you say that the President of the United States cannot remove a man from office unless you give him permission to do so, you take upon yourself the responsibility of the execution of the laws. That is, in very plain words, the proposition that came from the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My friend does not answer my question, and that is, whether the laws of Indiana fail of fair and honest execution because there is not an executive power of removal?

Mr. HENDRICKS. There is very little difficulty in executing the laws of the State of Indiana.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There seems to be a great deal in answering the question.

Mr. HENDRICKS. We have our revenue system plain, simple, and enforced in the presence of all the people by officers of the counties. I cannot say that there is a failure there at all. The people elect men to discharge the duties of their offices in their immediate presence. So that there is no analogy between the case suggested by the Senator from Vermont and the case of the execution of laws of the United States. The Senator says there has been a failure, and he undertakes to charge the responsibility upon the President of the United States. I say that when he charges the fault upon the President of the United States he charges it upon Congress, and particularly himself as the author of the bill which took from the Executive the responsibility of the execution of the laws.

Now, Mr. President, it is too plain to the Senator from Vermont to need illustration that the present system is most demoralizing. I do not know now whether the whisky tax of two dollars is more demoralizing than the tenure-of-office bill. From my observation for the last year it is very difficult to tell. A man of reasonable honesty and cleverness comes to the city of Washington to obtain an office. He reports himself to the Executive. His duty there is to satisfy the Executive, first that he is qualified, and next that in political sentiment he is in harmony with the President. He succeeds in that, and then he comes down to the Senate for confirmation. You have laid it down as a rule that a man shall not be confirmed merely because he is qualified to discharge the duties of an office and may be honest. That is not enough. You say he must have another qualification: he must be in political harmony with yourselves. So when that man comes here for confirmation he commences the work of satisfying the Senate that he is in harmony with the majority here; and by the time he passes the ordeal of the White House and of the Senate he is ready for almost anything. [Laughter.] And it is difficult for me to see whether the two-dollar tax upon whisky has produced a greater demoralization in the country, or the tenure-of-office bill.

You send men from this capital every day into all sections of the country utterly and hopelessly demoralized. You, Senators, have seen this. It has not been seen by myself alone. You know much more of it than I do. They do not come to consult me much whether they shall be confirmed; for whether they shall be confirmed depends very little upon my wish upon the subject.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. But the appointment does.

Mr. HENDRICKS. And they do not consult me much about the appointments, I will say to the Senator from Maine. I have but very little to do with them, I will say to him.

Now, Mr. President, I am in favor of the earliest possible repeal of the tenure-of-office bill; and without reference to the next incumbent of the Presidency, without any reference to his politics at all, next winter I hope to see that law repealed. I hope to see it for the purity and efficiency of the public service. Then I hope to see this bill passed and have the tax so reduced as that there shall not be this temptation that makes so many villains, as the Senator from Kentucky has so well expressed it.

Mr. President, disclaiming any responsibility for any portion of this bill except that which reduces the tax to fifty cents, I am now ready to cast my vote.

Mr. CONNESS. I wish to say, before the Senator takes his seat, that there is one thing for which he and his friends, in my opinion, are very responsible, and which really covers the whole case that he has described to us. It was through the fascinations and manipulations of the Senator and his friends that the President of the United States was separated from the party that elected him. Had it not been for their cajolery over him I have no doubt that the President and Congress would be together to-day, and the result would be that we should have better officers.

Mr. RAMSEY. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Several SENATORS. Let us vote.

Mr. FOWLER. There cannot be a vote just now.

Mr. RAMSEY. There are several amendments to be proposed, and there is no probability of reaching a final vote to-night. It is nearly eleven o'clock. If I thought there was any chance of getting a vote I would not insist on the motion, but as it is I think we had better adjourn.

Mr. SHERMAN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 18, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cameron, Chandler, Cole, Conness, Davis, Ferry, Fowler, Harlan, Hendricks, McGreevy, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Thayer, Van Winkle, Vickers, and Yates—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Cattell, Conkling, Cragin, Edmunds, Howe, McDonald, Morgan, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Osborn, Patterson of New Hampshire, Sherman, Stewart, Wade, Williams, and Wilson—16.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Bayard, Corbett, Dixon, Doolittle, Drake, Fessenden, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Henderson, Howard, Johnson, Morton, Norton, Nye, Patterson of Tennessee, Rice, Saulsbury, Sprague, Sumner, Tipton, Trumbull, Welch, and Wiley—24.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, July 8, 1868.

The House met at twelve o'clock, Mr. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON.

The Journal of yesterday was partially read, when,

On motion of Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, the further reading was dispensed with.

SALE OF IRON-CLADS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the President of the United States, transmitting a report of the Secretary of State of the 2d instant, together with accompanying papers, in relation to the iron-clads Onecota and Catawba, sold by the Navy Department to Swift & Co.; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

NAVAJO INDIANS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of State, with a communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, relative to the Navajo Indians on the Bosque Redondo reservation; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, by unanimous consent, offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Clerk be directed to inform the Senate that in communicating the action of the House on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 605) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th day of June, 1869, amendment No. 223 was erroneously announced as having been concurred in, the same having been non-concurred in.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the bill reported by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL,] from the Committee on Reconstruction, for the removal of certain disabilities, which was pending at the adjournment last evening.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that the House take up the amendments of the Senate to the civil appropriation bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. Does the gentleman's motion interfere with the morning hour? I hope he will allow us to have a morning hour.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. My proposition is in the line of the public interest. If we expect to get away we ought to take the appropriation bills in order to get them in committees of conference. There are a great many disagreeing votes between the two Houses which will take a great deal of time to consider. The civil appropriation bill ought to be taken up and disposed of this morning. After that we can have a morning hour.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to make one remark in regard to the Military Committee. That committee has not been called for public bills since the 22d of January. We have a large number of important bills, among others a bill now being matured by the committee to reduce the Army of the United States nearly one half. Now, in the regular order, as it appears to be going on, I cannot see that our committee will be called at all. Certainly if the morning hour is dispensed with or interfered with it cannot be called.

EVENING SESSION FOR FRIDAY.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask unanimous consent that a session be held next Friday evening for the sole use of the Committee on Military Affairs, at which time we will try to have the bill ready to which I referred for the reduction of the Army.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. On condition that the business be confined to that bill alone.

Mr. GARFIELD. We may have other bills. Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Then I object.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Military Affairs has not been called since January last, as the gentleman states.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I understand that. The Committee on Commerce have only been called once, and there is a great deal of business before them. I will agree to an evening session if it is understood that it is to be confined to that bill to which the gentleman refers; otherwise I object.

There being no objection, it was ordered that there be an evening session on Friday next for the consideration of the bill for the reduction of the Army.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I now ask that the House proceed to the consideration of the amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 818, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1869, and for other purposes.

The House, pursuant to previous order, proceeded to the consideration of the Senate amendments to the civil appropriation bill, in the House as in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule.

The first amendment of the Senate was read, to strike out "$564,904 32," and insert "$1,500,000;" so that the clause will read:

For necessary expenses in carrying into effect the several acts of Congress authorizing loans and the issue of Treasury notes, $1,500,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Second amendment:

Insert after line thirty-nine the following: For facilitating communication between the Atlantic and Pacific States by electrical telegraph, $40,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Third amendment:

Insert after line forty-six the following: To meet expenses incurred in the prosecution and collection of claims due the United States, $13,000, to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. As the committee have recommended non-concurrence in this amendment, I desire to make a brief statement to the House. I have been informed by the Treasury Department that this amount is for the purpose of carrying on prosecutions which have already been commenced against a large number of persons who are in default. And I am told that if it is expected that these prosecutions shall be carried to a successful conclusion, it is necessary to make this appropriation. Individually, therefore, I am in favor of concurring in this amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fourth amendment:

In lines fifty-two and fifty-three strike out "$250,000," and insert "$150,000;" so that the clause will read:

For supplying deficiency in the fund for the relief of sick and disabled seamen, $150,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fifth amendment:

Insert after line seventy-one the following: Provided, That the building shall be completed without any further appropriation by the Government.

So that the clause will read:

Toward rebuilding the United States Military Asylum for disabled soldiers at Togus, near Augusta, Maine, destroyed by accidental fire, $5,000. Provided, That the building shall be completed without any further appropriation by the Government.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Sixth amendment:

Insert after last amendment the following: For the payment of the Congressional Globe and Appendix, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, $20,000; to be taken from the appropriation heretofore made and unexpended for the purchase of one complete set of the Congressional Globe and Appendix for each Senator and Representative who have not already received them.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Seventh amendment:

In lines eighty-six and eighty-seven, strike out "$300,000," and insert "$ 00,000;" so that the clause will read:

For the survey of the Atlantic and Gulf coasts of the United States, including compensation of civilians engaged in the work, and excluding pay and emoluments of officers of the Army and Navy, and petty officers and men of the Navy employed in the work, $300,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Eighth amendment:

In line ninety strike out "$60,000" and insert "$130,000;" so that the clause will read:

For continuing the survey of the western coast of the United States, including compensation of civilians engaged in the work, $130,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Ninth amendment:

Strike out the following: For continuing the survey of the South Florida reefs, shoals, keys, and coast, including compensation of civilians engaged in the work, and excluding pay and emoluments of the officers of the Army and Navy, and petty officers and men of the Navy employed in the work, $25,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Tenth amendment:

In lines one hundred and twenty-nine and one hundred and thirty, strike out "$150,000" and insert "$208,000;" so that the clause will read:

For the necessary repairs and incidental expenses, improving and refitting light-houses and buildings connected therewith, $208,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Eleventh amendment:

In line one hundred and thirty-five strike out "forty-three" before the word "keepers;" so that the clause will read:

For salaries of keepers of light-vessels, $22,300.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Twelfth amendment, (first clause:)

Insert after line one hundred and eighty-five, the following:

For a first order light-house at Point Año Nuevo, California, or vicinity, $90,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Twelfth amendment, (second clause:)

Insert after line one hundred and eighty-seven the following:

For a new light-house on Half-way Rock, on the coast of Maine, $50,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. LYNCH. I desire to state that Half-way Rock is one of the most important points on the coast of Maine for a light-house. The erection of a light-house there has been recommended by the Light-House Board. I hope, therefore, that the amendment will be concurred in.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope that the amendment will not be concurred in. This is one of several similar items in reference to which the Committee on Appropriations had not before them the facts upon which the Senate committee acted; and it was deemed desirable they should go to a committee of conference.

Mr. LYNCH. I will ask the acting chairman of the committee [Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois,] whether the committee had not before them a letter from the chairman of the Light-House Board in reference to this matter?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. No, sir; none that I saw.

Mr. LYNCH. This appropriation is recommended by the Light-House Board.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Thirteenth amendment:

Insert after line one hundred and ninety-two the following:

For two buoy and light-house tenders for service on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts, $80,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fourteenth amendment:

Strike out in line one hundred and ninety-seven the word "four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "one;" so as to make the paragraph read as follows:

For enabling the Light-House Board to experiment with new illuminating apparatus and fog-signals, in addition to former appropriations, $1,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fifteenth amendment:

Insert after line two hundred and three the following:

For a life-boat and station at the south end of Narragansett beach, Rhode Island, $2,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Sixteenth amendment:

In line two hundred and twenty-two, strike out "fifteen" and insert in lieu thereof "one hundred and fifty;" so that the clause will read as follows:

For repairs and out-fits, $150,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Seventeenth amendment:

Strike out, in lines two hundred and twenty-eight to two hundred and thirty-three, the following:

The six steam revenue-cutters stationed upon the northern and northwestern lakes and their tributaries shall be laid up, and that no more of the money appropriated by this act shall be paid on their account than so much as may be necessary for their safe and proper care and keeping, and that.

Mr. SPALDING. Mr. Speaker, I move concurrence with this amendment of the Senate, and I do so for this reason: a subsequent amendment by the Senate proposes to leave this whole subject to the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, so that he may withdraw any of the revenue-cutters on the lakes or on the sea-coast that are not indispensable to the public service. I think this is the form in which this matter should be left, as it will be by concurring in this amendment and the next. I therefore move concurrence in this amendment; and I shall also move concurrence in the next amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope the House will not concur in the amendment, but will non-concur, and let it go to the committee. There was a strong expression of the House against keeping up these revenue-cutters upon the lakes.

Mr. SPALDING. It is left to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I do not propose to abdicate my judgment to the Secretary of the Treasury or anybody else.

Mr. SPALDING. I do not suppose the House is going to leave everything to the committee, certainly not to the minority of the committee.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 7, noes 56; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. SPALDING, and Mr. BUTLER of Massachusetts.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 44, noes 56.

The Speaker voted in the affirmative to make a quorum.

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

Eighteenth amendment:

Insert the words "The six steam revenue-cutters stationed upon the northern and northwestern lakes and their tributaries, and;" so it will then read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized and directed to lay up and withdraw from commission the six steam revenue cutters stationed upon the northern and northwestern lakes and their tributaries, and every revenue cutter off the Atlantic coast, bays, gulfs, &c., not actually required and needed for constant service.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Nineteenth amendment:

Strike out the words "and so forth" in the preceding paragraph.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Twentieth amendment:

Strike out "fifty" and insert "one hundred;" so the paragraph will read:

For the construction of a custom-house at Portland, Maine, $100,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. LYNCH. I hope, Mr. Speaker, this amendment of the Senate will be concurred in, and for this reason: fifty thousand dollars will leave the building in the fall one half up, while with $100,000 the building will be put under roof and the workmen will be enabled to work during the winter, thus saving the Government a large expense. It will also save the rent of a year. The buildings rented by the Government for the accommodation of the custom-house are inadequate, and the Government is at great expense for rent, because the city having been nearly burned up it is difficult to get buildings fitted for the purpose. If this appropriation of $100,000, as recommended by the Senate, is made, the building can be put under roof this fall and a year's time gained. I hope, therefore, as a matter of public economy, the appropriation will be made.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence in several items. They had better go to the committee on conference to be arranged there. I think we had better non-concur in the amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Twenty-first amendment:

Insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to enlarge the lot in the city of Nashville for the erection of a custom-house, $25,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Twenty-second amendment:

Strike out "twenty-five," and insert "fifty;" so the paragraph will read:

For the construction of a building, to be used as custom-house and post office, at St. Paul, Minnesota, $50,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Twenty-third amendment:

Strike out "twenty-five," and insert "seventy-five;" so it will read:

For the construction of appraisers' stores at Philadelphia, $75,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will vote down the motion to non-concur. The House will recollect that some months ago this appropriation came before us. The Committee on Appropriations then reported $25,000. I endeavored to add $50,000 to that amount, but was voted down, although I had been sustained while in Committee of the Whole. I do not wish to intrude again on the House on this question, and my remarks will not be long. In my opinion the Senate has taken the proper course relative to this building, in appropriating a sufficient sum to almost complete it. It will need an appropriation of only $18,000 more at a future session if we adopt the Senate amendment, and it will then be finished ready for use. This is a building demanded by the necessities of trade. It is to be a large brick structure, not an ornamental one, but a very plain one for business; and I hope the House will concur in the amendment of the Senate, notwithstanding the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations to the contrary. It is better that the Government should finish it, especially as we have now come within $18,000 of the entire amount necessary, should this appropriation be made.

The acting chairman of the committee [Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois] asked on a former occasion how these appropriations ever commenced to be made. Not having had then an opportunity to answer him, I will do so now. They commenced by his own action, in part, by an appropriation of $20,000, recommended first by the Committee on Commerce, of which he was chairman, which was subsequently recommended by the Committee on Appropriations. This amount was intended to be used in removing the old Pennsylvania bank building, then upon the lot. Fifty thousand dollars were added in another bill to go on with the work. A few days ago the House made a further appropriation of $25,000 in the deficiency bill, and now the Senate proposes, for the current fiscal year, $75,000. If that sum is appropriated, when we come here next winter we shall have a fine building almost completed. I learn from the superintendent in Philadelphia, and from the supervising architect of the Treasury here, that unless this appropriation is made the work already done will be greatly injured and the Government will incur great expense in consequence of its interruption. The contracts for brick and iron and other articles to be used in its construction have already been made. Therefore I insist that it is economy to appropriate sufficient money to finish the building, which can be done in the course of the summer and fall. I hope the acting chairman of the committee will let the amendment be concurred in.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. In reply to the speech of my friend I will say that I supposed he was entirely satisfied with the liberal appropriation he received from the Committee on Appropriations, and I am surprised that he should come in here now after having got $25,000 in the deficiency bill, and attempt to get this $75,000 in the civil appropriation bill. I ask the House to look at this matter a moment. When we appropriated a considerable sum of money in the first instance, we thought it was all that was necessary for that building. Now we have appropriated $25,000 in the deficiency bill and $25,000 in the civil appropriation bill, which the Senate has increased to $75,000, making some one hundred and ninety thousand dollars in all if this amendment is concurred in.

Mr. O'NEILL. Not at all.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. We appropriated $70,000 in the first instance. The gentleman can figure up the various sums. The Senate has increased the appropriation by $50,000, and about twenty thousand dollars more it seems will be necessary. Now, the committee recommended non-concurrence in the amendment, so as to let the matter go to a committee of conference; then, if we think the appropriation just and proper, we can concur in the amendment of the Senate or put in any proper amount.

Mr. O'NEILL. The first appropriation of $20,000 was made for the removal of the rubbish of the old building, the old Pennsylvania bank. That was followed by an appropriation of $50,000, making $70,000. Now the deficiency bill which the House passed the other day contained an appropriation of $25,000, and in this civil appropriation bill as it passed the House there was another appropriation of $25,000. The Senate has added $50,000, so that if the amount in the Senate amendment is concurred in the total amount appropriated will be $170,000. That, as I said before, will nearly complete the building. I urge that it is necessary for us to make the appropriation now asked for and that this Congress will be acting unwisely if it permits such buildings as these to remain unfinished and hardly half built. I hope the House will concur in the amendment of the Senate. I have always insisted upon a large appropriation for the appraisers' stores in Philadelphia.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I undertake to say that the Senate had no idea of the amount we had put in the deficiency bill, $25,000, and which will pass. If we also pass this amendment of the Senate we will give more than was asked for in the estimates.

The question was then taken on concurring in the Senate amendment, and upon a division, there were—ayes twenty-one, noes not counted. So the amendment was non-concurred in.

Twenty-fourth amendment:

Insert after line two hundred and sixty-two the following:

For construction of a public building for a custom-house, United States court-room, and post office, at Portland, Oregon, $50,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Twenty-fifth amendment:

Insert after line two hundred and sixty-nine the following:

For completion of the extension and repairs of the custom-house at Bangor, Maine, $20,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended non-concurrence.

Mr. PETERS. I think if the Committee on Appropriations had understood this amendment they would have recommended concurrence in it. The matter was within the knowledge of my colleague, [Mr. BLAINE,] who is a member of the Committee on Appropriations; but he left the city without making that explanation to the committee which was necessary in order to have them all understand it. Now, I believe that I understand the propriety of this amendment as well as any other person, and I will explain it very briefly.

We are already at work on the custom-house at Bangor. The contracts for materials have been made, and the workmen have been engaged upon it. While in the middle of the work a new fact developed itself which was not known to the architect before; and that was that the foundation (which is right in the bed of the river, on both sides of which the city of Bangor is situated) will require a large sum of money, more than was at first supposed necessary. I happened to be at home when that fact was developed, in the last days of the month of May. There was a meeting of the citizens of Bangor in order to sell the building, which has already cost several hundred thousand dollars, and to abandon the location.

And a very strong pressure was brought to bear, in order to have a very large new appropriation for the construction of a new court-house. I opposed that plan, in the present state of our national finances, and also upon the ground that it would be very difficult to get Congress up to such a point.

Now, Mr. Mullins, who is there, the architect, and the assistant architect who is under him, have both come to the conclusion that at least $20,000 additional must be expended on this building. The building cannot be left uncompleted in safety. The idea is to complete the work by September or November of this year. If you give us the $20,000—and you must give it sooner or later—you will save a large additional outlay which will be required if this appropriation is not now made. By making this appropriation the building will be completed, and will not be left to the danger of the elements during the coming fall and winter in that climate and in the stream of that river. As it is now, we are accommodated with an insufficient post office building. With this additional sum we can have all the post office accommodation we want. And we can have all the custom-house accommodation we want; and we can have all the officers of internal revenue supplied with accommodations. And we can also have a sufficient court-house; while so mean and insufficient is the court-house now that it has never been used but once since the building was erected, on which these repairs are being made, the court seeking some other place to hold their terms. I know all about this matter; my colleague [Mr. BLAINE] knows all about it. It is a very strong case.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Is this sum sufficient to complete the building?

Mr. PETERS. It will complete it.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Then let us finish it.

Mr. PETERS. So I say.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I have listened with a great deal of interest to my friend from the city of Bangor, [Mr. PETERS.] I have heard that speech several times before, and I always liked it; it is a good speech of its kind. [Laughter.] His predecessor, Mr. Rice, came before the Committee on Commerce and made just the same speech, and we appropriated the sum of $30,000. It was not so good a speech as this, perhaps, but it was pretty much the same. He told us the same story about the location of the custom house building, for which the United States was not responsible. The good people of my friend's city, having a river running through the middle of the city, could not agree on which side of the river the custom-house and post office should be situated; so they put the building in the middle of the stream. The foundation began to wash away, and they came here and said, "We must have $36,000 to finish this work, and we will never come here again if you will give us this appropriation." I had great doubts about the matter; but the predecessor of my friend from Maine, like the gentleman himself, had a great deal of influence over me, and upon the condition that that appropriation should end the matter I consented to the appropriation of $36,000. Hence I have considered it very extraordinary that at this the very next session of Congress we should be called upon to appropriate $20,000 more.

Now, sir, this appropriation, according to its terms, is not for the purpose which my friend specifies, the building of a foundation. The amendment is "for completion of the extension and repairs of the custom-house at Bangor, Maine, $20,000." Now, sir, what I have protested against so often heretofore, and what I intend to protest against hereafter, is, when an appropriation has been made for a given purpose, allowing the officers to go on and contract for the expenditure of a larger sum. I do not understand that in this case there have been made any contracts which this appropriation is intended to cover; but I protest against making an appropriation like this when we have no official information, no written statement from any authoritative source, on which to act. The statement of my friend from Maine [Mr. PETERS] is no doubt true, but it is not such a statement as we should act upon in a case of this kind. We should have written authority, we should have a full statement of all the facts in some official document. Independently of that, I am opposed to making this appropriation at this time. I hope my friend from Maine will consent to let the matter go to a committee of conference. Perhaps that committee, if they find the facts as stated, may deem it for the public interest to recede from our disagreement.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of making a brief reply to the gentleman from Illinois, I move to amend the Senate amendment by making the amount of the appropriation $25,000. I concur with the gentleman in the opinion that the location of this building was unwise. It was made, as the gentleman has said, for the purpose of pacifying conflicting interests. The mercantile gentlemen of Bangor, residing on the one or the other side of the stream, were very much divided in their notions; and hence this location. This building has been erected and also the approaches to it at an expense of several hundred thousand dollars. Repairs which have become necessary have been commenced, and are now in an unfinished condition. The question is whether they shall be completed. I went before the Senate committee with Mr. MULLINS, and he was very earnest in urging the necessity of this appropriation. Contracts have been made; materials are on the ground; the workmen are at work; and the question is whether these contracts shall be carried out in good faith; whether this work shall be done, my colleague [Mr. BLAINE] having encouraged Mr. MULLINS and the Senate committee to believe that there would be no difficulty in arranging this matter with the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BENTON. Can the foundation of the building be made perfectly secure?

Mr. PETERS. It can be. The only difficulty is that enough money has not been appropriated to do that and to complete the building as it should be completed.

Mr. PIKE. Mr. Speaker, I beg to say that this is no recent matter. This building was erected under a former Administration, not at the instance of my colleague [Mr. PETERS] or his predecessor, but long ago.

Mr. PETERS. Under the administration of Franklin Pierce.

Mr. PIKE. The present Administration is not responsible for the erection of this building. The only question now is whether a small appropriation shall be made for the completion of the work, or whether the whole thing shall be given up.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I desire to inquire by what authority Mr. MULLINS exceeded the appropriation in making these contracts, when Mr. Rice, the predecessor of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. PETERS,] pledged himself that the total expenditure should not exceed $36,000?

Mr. PETERS. I will answer the gentleman. The contract has been made for a certain amount of work and for a certain amount of granite; but additional work is necessary in order to strengthen the foundations. We ask that this small sum be appropriated to complete this work. Now, sir, $36,000 is a small sum.

Mr. MULLINS. Let me interrupt the gentleman with one remark. The foundations laid under the administration of Pierce have to be repaired. [Laughter.]

Mr. PIKE. Then we get off cheap with $20,000.

Mr. PETERS. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

The House divided; and there were—ayes fifty-three, noes not counted.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

Twenty-sixth amendment:

Insert:

For the completion of the custom-house and post office building at Ogdensburg, New York, $40,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. HULBURD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express the hope and belief that this House will concur in the amendment of the Senate. The Department recommends this appropriation as necessary, and this as the requisite amount.

I wish to say to the House and to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN,] who objects that it is "Monsieur Tonson come again" when these appropriations are brought before the House, this does not come within that objection, for it is its first appearance, at all events. This appropriation was recommended before the late war, but it was suspended during the war with the consent of the inhabitants there. It has been revived now, and this additional amount seems to be requisite partly and mostly in consequence of the advanced price of labor and material. It is intended for a custom-house and a post office, and is much needed. There has been a slight change of plan to accommodate the United States court and the internal revenue department in that district. There is the utmost propriety this appropriation asked for should be made. It will complete the building this year. If this appropriation is withheld the building must be stopped where it is. I therefore hope, under all the circumstances, the House will concur in the amendment of the Senate. It is predicated upon the interests of the Government.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. All I have to say is that this is a first-rate chance to get rid of $40,000. As we have just voted $20,000 to Bangor to save a foundation, I suppose the House will vote this $40,000. It will only be a little more of burden to put upon the people.

The House divided; and there were—ayes twenty-eight, noes not counted.

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

Twenty-seventh amendment:

Insert:

For heating apparatus for custom-houses and other public buildings, $35,000. For vaults and safes for depositaries, $25,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Twenty-eighth amendment:

Insert:

For completion of the branch mint building at Carson City, Nevada, fencing the grounds, and for machinery, fixtures, and apparatus, and for putting up the same, $150,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada. Mr. Speaker, in speaking in favor of concurrence with the Senate amendment, I do so in no partisan spirit, but out of consideration for the interests of the whole country. That a mint should be established at Nevada was conceded several years ago. Before that time the mines there were producing only six or eight million dollars. Now the production has increased more than one hundred per cent. An appropriation of $100,000 was made for the purpose of establishing a branch mint at Carson. The mines within fifteen miles have been largely extended. It could not be expected that a mint could be built for $100,000. It would never have been expected that appropriation was a final one, and a mint could be built for that. There is produced within fifteen miles of that branch mint now completed up to the roofing, $16,000,000 a year. The exportation of $16,000,000 every year from there is of vast advantage to all the people of the United States. If it be not desired to have it minted, it would be a great convenience to the people to have the bars of silver marked, and to have that mark received as authoritative in its value. This appropriation of $150,000 will finish the building fitted for the purposes of this branch mint. Now, I think this is really deserving of consideration. Perhaps this House may not agree upon that amount; but I maintain that something is required, and I think $150,000 is little enough.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Let the gentleman come before the committee of conference.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada. I will leave it to the House; but I hope if the House should not concur in the amendment that it will receive the favorable consideration of the committee of conference.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Twenty-ninth amendment:

Insert the following:

Mining:

For collecting statistics of mines and mining, $5,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada. This is simply for a continuation of the collection of statistics, such as Ross Browne has been engaged in furnishing for the last two years, and upon which he has made such elaborate reports. The Secretary of the Treasury has named a gentleman who is reported to be entirely capable and efficient to continue that collection. Now, sir, our mining interest is of great value to this country. It furnishes us $80,000,000 which can be used as circulating medium, and which helps us in our exchange with the world. In that view the product of our mines is of great importance.

Now, there is no necessity for this amendment going to a committee of conference. Members of the House know just as well now as they can at any other time whether they are willing to appropriate $5,000 a year for this purpose. We appropriate $700,000 a year for the Agricultural Department. It strikes me this is a very moderate request for the continuing of the collection of mining statistics. I am not so very anxious about this now, because up to this time we are very well satisfied with the reports that we have received. But $5,000 a year is a comparatively insignificant sum for such an important national object, and it strikes me it is false economy to strike out this appropriation.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The Committee on Appropriations thought it was about time to put an end to this practice of making appropriations of specific sums to these various matters. Now, we have appropriated a large sum for Ross Browne's report. He has made a very thorough examination of the subject, and we supposed it was pretty much exhausted.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Thirtieth amendment:

Insert the following:

For expenses of receiving, arranging, and taking care of copyright books, charts, and other copyright matter, $1,800, to be paid out of the Patent Office fund.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Thirty-first amendment:

Insert after the words "For repairing and finishing the Capitol extension, $100,000," the following:

Provided, That no improvements, alterations, or repairs of the Capitol building shall be made except by direction and under the supervision of the architect of the Capitol extension; and the architect of the Capitol, under the direction of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the two Houses of Congress, is hereby authorized and directed to remove the bronze doors in the southern wing of the Capitol, temporarily to some position where they will be safe from injury.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence, with an amendment striking out all after the word "extension."

The amendment of the committee was agreed to; and the amendment of the Senate, as amended, was concurred in.

Thirty-second amendment:

Insert the following:

For heating the rotunda, the old Hall of the House of Representatives, and the offices and the stairways connected therewith, $15,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Thirty-third amendment:

Insert the following:

For painting the exterior of the eastern portion of city hall in Washington, $1,400.

For resetting steps, calking cornice and painting, $750.

For repairing rough casting and other plastering, $100.

For repairs to tin roof and rain spouts, $200.

For sundry brick and carpenter's work, $350.

For renovating and ventilating court-room, $400; Provided, That the corporate authorities of the city of Washington appropriate and expend a like sum for painting and repairs of the western portion of said building.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Thirty-fourth amendment:

Strike out "$10,000" and insert "$15,000;" so as to read:

For continuing the work on the north front of the Patent Office building, and for improving G street from Seventh to Ninth streets, $15,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Thirty-fifth, thirty-sixth, and thirty-seventh amendments:

In lines four hundred and twenty-six, four hundred and twenty-seven, and four hundred and twenty-eight, strike out "eight dollars" and insert "two dollars;" strike out "seven dollars" and insert "ten dollars;" and strike out "$25,000" and insert "$40,000;" so that the clause will read:

For surveying the public lands in Colorado, at rates not exceeding fifteen dollars per lineal mile for standard lines, twelve dollars for township, and ten dollars for section lines, $40,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendments were non-concurred in.

Thirty-eighth amendment:

Insert after line four hundred and twenty-eight, the following:

For surveying the boundary line between the State of Nebraska and Territory of Colorado, and that portion of the western boundary of the State of Nebraska embraced between the forty-first and forty-third degrees of latitude, estimated three hundred and twenty miles, at not exceeding fifteen dollars per mile, $4,800; to be expended under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Thirty-ninth amendment:

In line four hundred and forty, strike out "$20,000" and insert "$50,000;" so that the clause will read:

For surveying the public lands in Nevada, at rates not exceeding fifteen dollars per lineal mile for standard lines, twelve dollars for township, and ten dollars for section lines, $50,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fortieth amendment:

In line four hundred and forty-eight, strike out "$30,000" and insert "$50,000;" so that the clause will read:

For surveying the public lands in California, at rates not exceeding fifteen dollars per lineal mile for standard lines, twelve dollars for township, and ten dollars for section lines, $50,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Forty-first amendment:

In line four hundred and fifty-two, strike out "$25,000" and insert "$40,000;" so that the clause will read:

For surveying the public lands in Oregon, at rates not exceeding fifteen dollars per lineal mile for standard lines, twelve dollars for township, and ten dollars for section lines, $40,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Forty-second amendment:

Insert after clause last amended the following: Provided, That out of this appropriation the Commissioner of the General Land Office may pay a sum not exceeding $1,000 for surveys of last year.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Forty-third amendment:

In line four hundred and sixty-seven strike out "$15,000" and insert "$25,000;" so that the clause will read:

For surveying the public lands in Montana Territory, at rates not exceeding fifteen dollars per lineal mile for standard lines, twelve dollars for township, and ten dollars for section lines, $25,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Forty-fourth amendment:

In line four hundred and seventy-one strike out "$15,000" and insert "$5,000;" so that the clause will read:

For surveying the public lands in Utah Territory, at rates not exceeding fifteen dollars per mile for standard lines, twelve dollars for township, and ten dollars for section lines, $5,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Forty-fifth amendment:

Insert after line four hundred and seventy-one the following:

For surveying public lands in the State of Florida, $20,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Forty-sixth amendment:

In lines four hundred and seventy-six, four hundred and seventy-seven, and four hundred and seventy-eight, strike out "fifteen dollars" and insert "twenty-five dollars;" strike out "$6,375" and insert "$10,625;" so that the clause will read:

For surveying the eastern boundary of Nevada, estimated four hundred and twenty-five miles, at not exceeding twenty-five dollars per mile, $10,625.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada. I hope that some of the members of the Committee on Appropriations will listen for a moment to what I may say, because I can hardly believe that they wish to make an invidious distinction against the State of Nevada in this matter of boundary survey. It was conceded that a survey of at least the eastern boundary of Nevada was necessary. The Commissioner of the General Land Office recommended the survey of the northern and eastern boundaries. But when I appeared before the Committee on Appropriations I agreed to waive the survey of the northern boundary, because we have not many settlements there. But it is necessary to have the eastern boundary surveyed, because our officers, in levying taxes and collecting them, come in contact with the Mormon authorities for some distance there. We fixed it at fifteen dollars per mile. The recommendation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office was twenty-five dollars a mile.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Are these amendments of the Senate according to the recommendation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada. Certainly they are.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I think the Committee on Appropriations will not object to the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada. Very well; then I will not say anything further.

The amendment was then concurred in.

Forty-seventh amendment:

Add to the clause just read the following:
To be expended under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Forty-eighth amendment:

Strike out after line five hundred and twenty-three the following paragraph:

For care, support, and medical treatment of sixty transient paupers, medical and surgical patients, in some proper medical institution in the city of Washington, under a contract to be formed with such institution, $12,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Forty-ninth amendment:

In line five hundred and thirty-six strike out "five" and insert "three;" so as to make the paragraph read as follows:

For purchase of trees and tree-boxes, to replace, when necessary, such as have been planted by the United States, to whitewash tree-boxes and fences, and to repair pavements in front of the public grounds, $3,900.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fiftieth amendment:

Insert after line five hundred and forty-four the following paragraph:

For continuing the United States twenty-inch water main from its present terminus in north B street on the east side of Delaware avenue, to the United States twelve-inch main on First street east, $10,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Although perhaps it may not be proper for me to state what took place in the committee, I wish to say that on this question there was a tie, and the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SPALDING,] who came in afterward, voted to non-concur, although I considered his vote too late. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to state whether this is not the fact.

Mr. SPALDING. I think my vote against concurrence decided the question in committee. But I now prefer that the amendment should be concurred in.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fifty-first amendment:

Add the following new paragraph:
To enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay for fitting necessary shelving, and for record books furnished or ordered for the office of register of deeds of the District of Columbia, during the period when Edward C. Eddie was such register, $550.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fifty-second amendment:

Add the following new paragraph:
To enable the Secretary of the Senate to complete the alphabetical list of private claims to the end of the second session of the Thirty-Ninth Congress, and to pay outstanding claims for services rendered in the preparation of said work under a resolution of the Senate of March 16, 1866, $2,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fifty-third amendment:

Add the following new paragraph:
That the sum of $15,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the expenses of the Joint Committee on Ordnance, and that the same shall be drawn from the Treasury, upon the order of the Secretary of the Senate, as it shall be required; and any portion of the amount hereby appropriated that shall be allowed by the said joint committee to witnesses attending before it, or other persons employed in its service, for per diem, traveling, or other necessary expenses, and paid by the Secretary of the Senate, in pursuance of the orders of said joint committee, shall be accordingly credited and allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fifty-fourth amendment:

Add the following new paragraph:
To enable the joint Committee on the Library to pay Mrs. Sarah F. Ames an additional compensation for her marble bust of President Lincoln, $500.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fifty-fifth amendment:

Add the following new paragraph:
For expenses of the trial of the impeachment of Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, $6,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, to be paid into the contingent fund of the Senate.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fifty-sixth amendment:

Add the following new paragraph:
For the purchasing of suitable sites for the erection of additional school-houses, and for the maintenance of schools in the county of Washington, outside of the limits of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, the same to be expended under the direction of the levy court of the county of Washington, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, $10,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fifty-seventh amendment:

Insert:

For experiments in the cultivation and preparation of the madder root, $10,500, to be expended under the direction of the Commissioner of Agriculture.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fifty-eighth amendment:

Insert as an additional section the following:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $9,233 85, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay balance due for the survey of lands embraced in the Osage Indian reservation, in the State of Kansas, under contract dated August 14 and 16, 1866, the said sum to be returned to the Treasury out of the proceeds of the sale of said lands, as provided by treaties with said Indians.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fifty-ninth amendment:

Insert the following as an additional section:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the sum of $7,775, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay for the balance due for surveying several Indian reservations in Utah Territory; the survey of which was provided for by act of Congress approved May 5, 1864.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Sixtieth amendment:

Insert the following as an additional section:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the sum of $39,014 63, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not heretofore appropriated, to pay for the survey of the Osage Indian trust lands ceded to the United States under treaty concluded September 29, 1865, upon a contract made with the General Land Office under date of September 18, 1866, and another contract for another portion of said trust lands, dated May 28, 1867; which survey is according to the provisions of the second article of treaty concluded with said tribe September 29, 1865.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Sixty-first amendment:

Add the following as an additional section:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That there be, and is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,362 08, to pay the balance due for the survey of the lands embraced in the Omaha and Winnebago Indian reservation in the State of Nebraska, under contract dated August 14, 1866, as provided by a treaty with the Omaha Indians, and authorized by act of Congress approved July 28, 1866.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. TAFTE. This ought to be concurred in. The survey has been made, and ought to be paid for.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, we have gone over this question in a separate bill, and the House, after full consideration, paid what they found to be deficient. What we struck out of that bill the Senate have put into this. For that reason we have not concurred in that action. The House have, by a large majority, sustained the action of the committee on the other bill.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Sixty-second amendment:

Insert the following as an additional section:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the Commissioner of the General Land Office is hereby authorized to continue the extension of the geological explorations as begun in Nebraska under the provisions of the second section of the deficiency act of Congress, approved March 2, 1867, to other portions of the public lands; and for that purpose the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

Mr. PAINE. I move to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$5,000." I hope the House will agree to that.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I do not agree to that amendment. I do not see the necessity for it.

Mr. PAINE. Gentlemen say if I do not make a speech they will adopt the amendment and then concur in the amendment of the Senate.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and the Senate amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

Sixty-third amendment:

Insert the following as an additional section:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the Commissioner of Patents be authorized to rent, under the direction of the Committee on Patents of the Senate and of the House of Representatives, such rooms as may be necessary for the speedy and convenient transaction of the business of the office, and to pay for the same out of the patent fund.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Sixty-fourth amendment:

Insert the following as an additional section:

SEC. —. Be it further enacted, That the city of Georgetown, the city of Washington, and the levy court of the county of Washington, District of Columbia, be, and they are hereby, authorized to levy and collect a special tax on the taxable property within their respective jurisdictions, for the erection of school-houses and the support of public schools, not exceeding fifty cents on each $100 for any one year, to be assessed and collected as other taxes.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Sixty-fifth amendment:

Insert the following as an additional section:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That all laws and parts of laws that regulate the price of labor in the Government Printing Office be, and the same are hereby, repealed; and it shall be the duty of the Congressional Printer to contract with the persons in that employment at such prices as are for the interest of the Government, and are just to those employed.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Sixty-sixth amendment:

Add the following as a new section:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That for the purpose of executing the fourth article of the treaty of Washington, concluded on the 9th day of August, 1842, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the State of Maine for ninety-one thousand one hundred and twenty-five acres of land assigned by said State to settlers under said article, a sum equal to $1 25 per acre; and to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts for twenty-six thousand one hundred and fifty acres of land a sum equal to $1 25 per acre: Provided, That before said sums are paid the States of Maine and Massachusetts shall agree with the United States that the settlers upon their public lands in the late disputed territory in Maine entitled to be quieted in their possession, as ascertained by commissions heretofore instituted by said States, shall have been or shall be quieted by a release of the title of the said States.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I would like to know from the gentleman from Massachusetts whether that State did not assign all her interest in this land to the State of Maine or to the railroads within that State?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope the House will not concur in that amendment.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the following words:

And to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts for twenty-six thousand one hundred and fifty acres of land a sum equal to $1 25 per acre.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I desire to make a plain statement of the facts relating to this matter which compelled the judgment of the committee in their report in its favor. By the conventional line established by what is known as the "Ashburton treaty" two several parcels of land were taken from the jurisdiction of the treating parties. One from Maine, which was added to New Brunswick, and the other came into Maine from New Brunswick by the line of the treaty. The same line running westward gave large amounts of land to New Hampshire, Vermont, and New York, and four million acres to the United States northwest of Lake Superior. By the fifth article of the treaty Maine was to have a certain specific sum for the land taken from her domain that was given to New Brunswick. By the fourth article of the treaty the United States agreed to quiet the titles of the British settlers and maintain them thereon on the land which came within the jurisdiction of that State from the territory of New Brunswick. The United States could not do that without the consent of the States of Maine and Massachusetts because by establishing the line it was declared that this land was the property of those States. Maine and Massachusetts therefore have undertaken to quiet the titles of these British settlers upon the State lands according to the terms of the treaty as soon as the United States will perform its part of the contract under the treaty by giving to these States the ordinary price of public lands, namely, $1 25 per acre for the lands which they must give up to these settlers to carry out the terms of the treaty. The States thus will give titles to these settlers which the United States by the Ashburton treaty agreed to give, but which the Government had not the power to do without the action of the States who owned the land, and therefore the Government must in fact buy these lands of the States to fulfill its treaty stipulations. This question has been pending now twenty-three years. Estates of deceased persons cannot now be settled in that territory. Land titles cannot be passed. Improvements are stopped simply because these titles cannot be quieted. This question has been before Congress very frequently. There are eight several reports of committees in its favor. The claim has four times passed the Senate. There has never been a majority report of a committee against it, though there has been a very able minority report. There cannot be a report against it with any show of justice. The reason why we have not been able to get a hearing before in this House is that being a claim calling for an appropriation of money, and therefore contained in an appropriation bill, it has always come before the House in the last hours of the session, and has failed to be acted upon; and so, never having been open for discussion, it has not yet passed. But every committee that has examined the subject has reported in favor of the payment of the claim.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. A single question. I had but one moment to look at it; but in one of these reports I could not find that they gave anything to Massachusetts.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. When Massachusetts gave up the district of Maine to be a State she had certain public lands in common with Maine, so that a portion of her lands were taken at the same time that the lands of Maine were taken. The United States have already admitted the justice of this claim by paying for the title of a township and one half of these lands which had been granted before the treaty. They settled for and paid for the land, the title to which did not stand either in Maine or Massachusetts. But for the land, the title to which stood in Maine and Massachusetts, has not been paid for by the United States, although gone to their benefit in carrying out their treaty with Great Britain according to its terms. Now, I appeal to the justice of this House, to which I trust no man will ever appeal in vain, to give to Maine and Massachusetts this money to which they are entitled, so that they may be enabled to quiet those titles.

Now, in regard to the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] whether Massachusetts has not assigned her portion of this money to a railroad company, and therefore he has made his motion to strike out the Massachusetts portion, I appeal to his fairness if this money belongs to Massachusetts will he not allow Massachusetts to do what she pleases with it? What has Massachusetts done with it? With her accustomed liberality, with her usual public spirit, she has devoted this amount and much more to building a line of railroad inter-communication between the British provinces and the United States, an iron band to bind them to us and to bring them in sooner or later as a part of our territory. And is that action of hers to be raised as an objection against her or against Maine in this House of Representatives as a reason why either of them should not have what is their just right? Massachusetts, instead of desiring the money from our Treasury to help pay her burdens of debt arising out of the war, which debt she counts by millions—although this money is her just due, for which she has waited twenty-three years—she only desires it for the purpose of contributing it to aid a great line of public improvement between the United States and the British provinces. Will you not give her her own, that with it she may benefit you?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I was not able to concur with the nominal majority of the Committee on Appropriations in recommending a concurrence in this amendment of the Senate. My first reason was that it was a private claim in favor of a State on an appropriation bill, and against every just rule of legislation. We have, I think, invariably cut off all private claims from our appropriation bills, for the reason that it is unfair to give one claimant the advantage over another, which he would have by putting his claim upon an appropriation bill. Now, here are Maine and Massachusetts with an old claim which, according to the statement of my friend from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] is of twenty-three years' standing; a claim which Congress has refused to pay over and over again. This claim is now thrust upon an appropriation bill, and we are asked to pass it.

Mr. PETERS. When did Congress ever refuse to pay this claim? The gentleman says Congress has refused over and over again to pay it. Will he state when?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Well, we have not paid it; we have refused to pay it by not paying it. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] says there have been eight reports in favor of this claim. Well, sir, all those reports have not been able to convince the Senate and House both together that this claim was just and proper and ought to be paid. I will not go into the merits of this claim, because I have not time for it, although my friend from Indiana, [Mr. ORTH,] while a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the last Congress, made a conclusive report against the justice of the whole matter. I protest against putting on this appropriation bill this private claim in favor of the States of Maine and Massachusetts; hence I am against concurring in this amendment of the Senate. I now yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. ORTH.]

Mr. ORTH. It must be apparent to every member of this House that in the course of two or three minutes, or even five minutes—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has two minutes of the remaining time of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN.]

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I will move to amend the amendment, and yield my five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana.

The SPEAKER. There is now pending an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope that will be withdrawn.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I will withdraw my amendment to the amendment if the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ORTH] will renew it.

Mr. ORTH. I will renew the amendment to the amendment. It is utterly impossible, in the space of five minutes, to give anything like a correct history of this claim. I think my attention was first called to it some two years ago in connection with a bill which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. That bill had the specious title of "A bill to provide for the defense of the northeastern boundary of Maine." Upon examining the bill I found that it was in the interest of the European and North American Railway Company, and that a claim was preferred against Congress for $2,300,000, growing out of the treaty of Washington, of 1842. This claim now comes up before the House again, having grown "small by degrees and beautifully less." But I warn the members of this House that while this section states it is for the purpose of carrying out and executing the fourth article of the treaty, and that only $146,000 are now desired, yet when that is acknowledged you will be called on to execute the fifth article of the treaty, and then the amount will reach the neighborhood of its original proportions, $1,000,000. The claim upon which it is alleged this money is due is, first, for lands assigned to settlers under the fourth article of the treaty of Washington; second, for loss of timber upon the "disputed territory," between the years 1832 and 1839; third, for the correction of an error in the computation of interest on moneys advanced by the State of Maine in protecting and defending her territory under the treaty aforesaid; and, fourth, for interest upon Maine's third of the advances made by Massachusetts in the war of 1812-15.

The gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] who has advocated this claim, has stated very correctly that some seven or eight reports have been made either in the Senate or the House of Representatives in favor of this claim; but if the gentleman would examine all these reports, as I did some two years ago, he would find that there is a very close resemblance between them—sufficient to enable one to trace their paternity to the same source. He would find, furthermore, that each one of those reports is in favor of the payment of what is called the "disputed territory" claim, when the fact is as stated for the first time in the minority report which I presented to this House, that there is a receipt in full from the States of Maine and Massachusetts for everything growing out of that claim with regard to the "disputed territory," that receipt being given as far back as the administration of James Buchanan—a receipt in full for every dollar which was due to the States of Maine and Massachusetts for that claim.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I agree to that.

Mr. ORTH. Yet in every one of those eight reports to which the gentleman from Massachusetts has alluded, that claim is put forward as a valid claim arising under the fourth article of the treaty. Now, then, we come to this fourth article of the treaty, the only one now under consideration. What was the object of the treaty of 1842 between the United States and Great Britain? It was to correct the disputed boundary between our territory and that of Great Britain upon this continent. That dispute arose as far back as the early history of the French colonists upon this continent, and it was never definitely settled till the treaty of 1842.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. With the permission of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ORTH] I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] a question. This treaty provided for something to be done hereafter. I would like to know whether the treaty is now of binding force?

Mr. ORTH. Mr. Speaker, prior to the ratification of the treaty of 1842 there was, as I have stated, a disputed question of boundary between Great Britain and the United States. A convention was held, and this treaty was agreed upon to correct the boundary. New Brunswick claimed that a part of her territory had gone to the State of Maine, while Maine claimed that a part of her territory had gone to New Brunswick. Pending the struggle, settlers from New Brunswick acquired title to certain lands within the disputed territory. The citizens of Maine likewise acquired lands within that disputed territory. The object, then, of this fourth article of the treaty was simply to say to the citizens of New Brunswick, who had come upon the American side of the line, that they should be protected in the rights which they had acquired from the province of New Brunswick; and to say to the citizens of Maine who had settled north of the line that they should be protected by the British Government in the rights which they had acquired, as they supposed, under the authority of the State of Maine. The whole scope, object, and intent of the fourth article of the treaty was simply to quiet the titles of private individuals in the possession of the lands which they had acquired either from the province of New Brunswick or from the State of Maine. The treaty did not create or recognize any obligation on the part of the United States to pay one dollar of any such claim as this.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, it is almost impossible to discuss a subject of this kind in the allotted time of five minutes. In the first place the acting chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois] would prejudice this appropriation by criticising the action of the Senate in allowing it to be inserted as a part of this appropriation bill. I can only say that the Senate (and I read the proceedings carefully) came almost unanimously to the conclusion, after a full ventilation of the subject, that as the matter arose under a treaty it was properly included in a bill of this character. However, that question is foreclosed.

Mr. Speaker, if there ever was an honest claim presented to Congress, this is such a claim; and I venture to say it will be met on this floor only by an appeal to prejudice, an appeal which is too often made by gentlemen on this floor under the guise of economy. The utmost scrutiny of fact, and the fair construction of the treaty of 1842, must irresistibly lead our minds to the conclusion that this claim is exactly right. Heretofore this claim has been associated with other claims which made in the aggregate two or three millions of money. There may be some question about some of these claims. There may be some question honestly raised about some of them; but on this question the people of the State of Maine have supposed from previous legislation, or attempted legislation on the subject, if it stood isolated and alone it would meet with no objection, not even from the distinguished and earnest member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs [Mr. ORTH] who has just taken his seat, who made the minority report in the last Congress. What, in a word, is the history of the whole matter? I have not time in the few moments allotted to me to present it as I would like to. Maine claimed a certain tract of land. Bear in mind that Maine claimed not only State sovereignty, but Maine owned the fee in connection with Massachusetts. A treaty was made by which we surrendered and lost three million acres of land. This land was ceded by the United States to Great Britain, and she proposed to give the United States as an equivalent for the same certain disputed land in New Hampshire, Vermont, and New York, and certain land not claimed by us at Rouse's Point, in New York, and certain mineral land upon Lake Michigan. Great Britain virtually acknowledged that the territory was ours, but wanted to traverse the northern part of it from province to province, and give a consideration for it. The United States gave to the State of Maine $300,000 for the lands we lost; that is for the territory we gave up and which went on the other side of the line.

There is another article in the treaty alluded to, and that is that the Government of the United States shall quiet the titles of whatever British settlers there were upon our side of the line as the treaty has established the boundary to be. Now, according to the treaty, those occupants or squatters are to have a release of title of the lots occupied. From whom are they to have a release? The fee is in Massachusetts and Maine. Maine and Massachusetts are ready to give the releases. The settlers are anxious to receive them. These persons, by force of the treaty, have become citizens of the United States, and I have no doubt have intelligence enough to vote next fall for the Union and the country. They are in my district, and I know them pretty well. It is for the interest of my section of country that this pacification of this question shall take place. Now, the United States have promised these men, they have promised the Government of Great Britain that these men shall receive their release of title to their lands. Release from whom? Why, of course, from the parties owning the lands in fee, from Massachusetts and Maine. Shall we call upon the States of Massachusetts and Maine to make such releases without a fair compensation for the lands which they will thereby give up?

But, sir, the question has been already foreclosed and settled. Individuals owning tracts in this formerly disputed territory upon which squatters have settled have come here, and Congress has paid them. Why, then, not pay this similar claim of the States. The whole question now at issue has been decided over and over again in the Senate. It was never reached before to-day in the House. There was never any adverse report or any adverse action. Eight favorable reports have been heretofore made in the two Houses. It has never met with any serious opposition in the other branch. It was sustained by the majority report of the Committee of this House on Foreign Relations in the Thirty-Ninth Congress. All the action of Congress heretofore, and all the precedents, favor our present proposition. The Senate have sent it to us with hardly any substantial opposition after the fullest debate.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BANKS. I move to strike out the amount named and to insert $91,125. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me this claim is appropriate to this bill in every respect. A bill affecting the rights of a State is a public bill. The State is not a person, and its claims are not private claims. They have never been so held. I understand it was always held, at least formerly, wherever a State presented a subject for legislation it was never classed among private bills.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BANKS. Certainly.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. This arose under the treaty of Washington?

Mr. BANKS. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Is there not an express rule of the House that no claim arising under a treaty shall be put into an appropriation bill?

Mr. BANKS. I do not so understand. It is proposed to complete the action of the Government under the treaty of 1842. Now, there is no objection to this claim which has not been met. It has not been refused. Negative votes against this proposition cannot be found. It has failed of support, and every member of this House knows it would be almost impossible for a claim to be presented by anybody, however just its merits may be, and acted on and approved immediately. A great number of claims lie over from year to year without impeaching their justice in any manner whatever, and this is one of those claims.

Now, sir, the fourth article of this treaty requires that Massachusetts should satisfy the claims of citizens of the British Government. They were situated on our side by the new line of partition. Massachusetts did that. There is no provision in the treaty that made it incumbent upon the United States to do this. On the contrary, the United States required Massachusetts to do it. Massachusetts having done it is therefore entitled to the consideration which she may justly claim for having extinguished titles in behalf of the interest of the United States, which the treaty required the United States to do.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] inquired whether this being to execute a condition of a past treaty that condition was not extinguished? Certainly not, no matter how long it may continue. Here the condition is involved in the execution of the treaty, not by the United States, but by the State of Massachusetts; and the obligation being upon the United States to requite Massachusetts if it runs a hundred years, it still remains.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman allow me to read the parliamentary rule on this subject?

Mr. BANKS. Certainly.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. The rule is this:

"In preparing bills of appropriations for other objects the Committee on Appropriations shall not include appropriations for carrying into effect treaties made by the United States; and when an appropriation bill shall be referred to them for their consideration which contains appropriations for carrying a treaty into effect, and for other objects, they shall propose such amendments as shall prevent appropriations for carrying a treaty into effect being included in the same bill with appropriations for other objects."

Mr. BANKS. I understand that rule. It does not affect this appropriation. This is not to carry a treaty into effect. The treaty has already been carried into effect. Massachusetts has done that which the United States ought to have done, and now claims that she should be made whole for the expenditure she has incurred. If it were proposed to carry into effect a treaty in regard to Alaska, for instance, I would concede the point made by the gentleman. I made the same point myself once on this question. But this treaty is executed so far as the United States is concerned, and neither Great Britain nor any other party has any claim whatever. Massachusetts asks to be made good for that which she has done in behalf of the United States.

Mr. MULLINS. Do I understand the gentleman to claim that Maine has carried out any treaty which the United States ought to have done, thereby recognizing the right of a State to treat with a foreign Power? Keep close to the moorings.

Mr. BANKS. The Government of the United States required Maine and Massachusetts to carry out the treaty. It did not offer to do it itself, because those States had jurisdiction of that question.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BANKS. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. I move to strike out the last word. I desire to say that my impressions were against this appropriation until I looked at it within the last twenty-four hours. I am now satisfied that there is no claim that can be presented that is more just than this. The State of Maine owned a large tract of land, several million acres, which the overshadowing treaty-making power which we have been discussing somewhat during the last few days, undertook to and did deprive her of. The United States received from Great Britain in exchange for that territory several million acres on Lake Superior, at Rouse's Point, and in New Hampshire and Vermont, to settle the dispute. This Government having received this exchange agreed to pay the States of Maine and Massachusetts $300,000. Those States being under restraint and having no power to do otherwise, accepted the $300,000. That settled the matter so far. But there were certain settlers located upon the land south of the conventional line whose lands came within the limits of Maine. Their land belonged as much to that State as my house belongs to me. Yet, to settle the difficulty, the Government of the United States—the treaty-making power—agreed that those settlers should be quieted in their titles, and that the States of Maine and Massachusetts should convey to them the property which belonged to the States of Maine and Massachusetts. That is the whole question as I understand it. You take lands that belong, beyond any question, to the States of Maine and Massachusetts, and give them to these settlers to quiet their titles. They ask you now to pay for some of the most valuable lands in the State of Maine. That is the whole story, as I understand it. And understanding it in that way, and believing this amendment to be entirely equitable and just, I shall vote for it.

Mr. ORTH. Even admitting the position taken by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WASHBURN] to be correct, what data has this House to act upon? Is there a scintilla of evidence before this House—that is to-day asked to vote $147,000 to a railroad company in the State of Maine—that the State of Maine has ever granted a title to a single quarter section of this land? What is the "title" referred to in the fourth section of the treaty of Washington? It is notorious that this disputed territory was squatted upon. Men went there and took possessory rights, and it is those rights which are alluded to and guaranteed by this treaty. The squatter not only had to take possession of the land, but to make payment for it. Now, without showing that a single dollar has been paid for this land, we are called upon to-day to vote to the State of Maine an enormous sum of money when we have no evidence that the State of Maine has ever granted one single acre of land to a settler without that settler paid for it. The object of that provision of the treaty was to prevent the settler from being driven from the piece of land he had selected for his home. It said to the settler, "You have selected your homestead and you may remain there, so far as the United States and Great Britain are concerned; but you must pay for the fee-simple of your land before you can ask the State of Maine or the province of New Brunswick to give you a title to it." It was simply the possessory right which was guaranteed by this treaty. It was not agreed that without any payment for the land we would give to the settler a guarantee deed for the land he has selected for his homestead.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. I now withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. PIKE. I renew the amendment to the amendment. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ORTH] seems to have forgotten the proviso to this section, which is as follows:

Provided, That before said sums are paid the States of Maine and Massachusetts shall agree with the United States that the settlers upon their public lands in the late disputed territory in Maine entitled to be quieted in their possession, as ascertained by commissions heretofore instituted by said States, shall have been or shall be quieted by a release of the title of the said States.

Mr. ORTH. In other words, the United States are expected to give these lands to those settlers without payment.

Mr. PIKE. There was an influx of these British settlers during the time this disputed territory was actually within the possession of the British Government; and, as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ORTH] said, these settlers went upon land, a part of which belonged to private individuals and a part of it to the States of Maine and Massachusetts. When the treaty came to be made it was thought advisable on the part of both Governments that those titles should be provided for. Now, in July, 1862, Congress gave compensation to owners of the private property so squatted upon, to Munroe and others, I forget the names now. But Congress recognized their title by giving to Munroe and others compensation for the lands so taken by these squatters, thus carrying out so far the provision of the treaty.

And this amendment is simply to carry out the provision of the treaty, so far as Maine and Massachusetts are concerned, as it was carried out in July, 1862, so far as private individuals are concerned. And even prior to that, in the case of Josiah S. Little, of Portland, the provision of the treaty was carried out in the same way. Therefore Congress has twice been committed to this idea of carrying out the provision of the treaty in this way. The State of Maine by that treaty sacrificed lands the value of which, if $7,200,000 is a correct estimate of the value of Alaska, cannot be less than fifteen or twenty million dollars, and this, too, without our consent, for although there was a nominal consent on the part of our commissioners, Judge Little, when he went home, said that he had been in "durance vile," and had been coerced into giving his consent. Yet, although we sacrificed by that treaty lands of this immense value, Congress at this late day is higgling about giving us this small compensation for those lands, while at the same time it is willing to give Russia $7,200,000 for Alaska. Now, I submit that if this Congress can pay $7,200,000 in gold for the friendship of Russia, it can as a matter of justice pay to the State of Maine $140,000, which has for years been due her. As my colleague, [Mr. PETERS,] whose district is more particularly interested in this matter, knows these men personally, knows that they are good and faithful citizens, willing to do the fair thing upon all occasions, [laughter,] I submit it is proper that this amendment of the Senate should be concurred in.

Mr. MAYNARD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Maine how much of this general claim has been paid? I took occasion to examine the matter some years ago, and I believe there has been a considerable amount paid.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ORTH] misconstrues the fourth article of the treaty. He seems to suppose that these persons, who were British squatters, or who held the land under British claims, must pay the State of Maine for their land. That is not the construction which has been put upon that article. If he will read the diplomatic correspondence which took place at the time the treaty was formed he will see that the idea was that those persons were to be protected because they had bought lands and paid for them to Great Britain. Now, that treaty stipulates that these men, who were British subjects and had bought their lands of Great Britain and paid her for them, should still hold them; and that inasmuch as the land came within the sovereignty of the United States the United States should confirm and quiet their title—should make their titles valid to the lands which had already been granted to them under British deeds. That treaty further provides the means by which this was to be done. It says it shall be done by releases. Releases from whom? Releases from the parties owning the fee. Who are the parties owning the fee? They are the State of Maine and the State of Massachusetts. And in reply to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] I will say that these lands were owned a part by the State of Maine, a part by the State of Massachusetts, and a part by private individuals. The private individuals who had been ousted by this treaty, which is a law executing itself, came here and asked compensation. Compensation was granted them; and the honorable gentleman who makes the inquiry once made a report to this House favoring the grant.

Mr. MAYNARD. I ask the gentleman whether an appropriation of this kind was not made in the Thirty-Fifth or Thirty-Sixth Congress to the States of Maine and Massachusetts as States?

Mr. PETERS. Yes, sir; it was reported, but never reached so as to be passed.

Mr. MAYNARD. The gentleman will recollect that George M. Weston was claiming a bonus as the agent of the State of Maine, and Simon P. Hanscom as the agent of the State of Massachusetts.

Mr. DAWES. That was to pay the expenses incurred by Massachusetts in the war of 1812, an adjusted account, adjusted in the War Department and found to be due, a claim which had laid there forty years and was only paid in the Thirty-Sixth Congress.

Mr. PETERS. There have been reports time and again in favor of the payment of this claim; but there being at that time no Court of Claims in existence, the bills for the payment of this money went on the Private Calendar and were there buried. Reports in favor of the payment of the claim were made in the Senate by Mr. WADE, by Mr. CLARKE of New Hampshire, by Mr. DOOLITTLE, by Mr.

SUMNER, and by Mr. Simmons; and in the House by Mr. Walton of Vermont, and also by the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the Thirty-Ninth Congress. All these reports except one were unanimous, so far as I recollect. Yet although bills for the payment of this claim have passed the Senate over and over again without a division—although such a bill was passed in the Thirty-Ninth Congress, and again the other day by an overwhelming majority, the claim has never come before this House for action before to-day; no vote has ever been taken on it, nor any voice heard in debate for or against it. We are seeking pay for land we are willing to grant to the settlers, which they are entitled to under the treaty, provided we shall have compensation for it. The settlers are uneasy about their titles. They should, as soon as possible, be quieted. Our Government solemnly plighted its faith to Great Britain to do so. But are the United States to use the property of Maine and Massachusetts to make good a promise only of the United States and not pay us for such property? We have already released a portion of these lands, trusting to Government for compensation, but we will make no further steps in that direction till we get sufficient assurance that we shall not bear out of our own pockets what is strictly and honorably an obligation of the United States. Our own losses have been too great already.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I rise to oppose the amendment; but first, I ask unanimous consent to close debate on this section in ten minutes, five of which I will give to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DELANO.]

Mr. BANKS. I want two minutes.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I will say twelve minutes, then.

A MEMBER. Say fifteen.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I ask, in order to bring this discussion to a close, that by unanimous consent debate shall terminate in fifteen minutes.

The SPEAKER. That can be done by a majority vote.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Then, I make the motion that it be closed in fifteen minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

The amendment to the amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. BANKS. I renew it; and I do so for the purpose of making a statement in reference to the report. It embraced a variety of considerations, and upon many grounds might have been sustained. These persons present a single point upon which there can be no doubt at all. I want to say a word in reply to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. MAYNARD.] He inquired as to what part of this claim was satisfied. The fourth article of the treaty, in order to settle the question of boundary, required the States of Massachusetts and Maine to give up that portion of territory beyond the new line; and secondly, to surrender to the squatters that portion of territory which the British then occupied within the new line. They surrendered the territory beyond the new line, for which it is understood they were paid; but for the surrender of the territory within the line and the release to the squatters, nothing whatever has been paid. This was a concession for the peace of the country, to carry out a treaty made between the United States and Great Britain, for which Massachusetts and Maine have been paid nothing whatever. It is only proper and just they should have this amount.

Mr. MAYNARD. I find provision was made in 1858 for satisfying the claims of the States of Maine and Massachusetts under the stipulations of a treaty between the United States and Great Britain, concluded the 9th day of August in the year 1842, a sum not exceeding $11,496 81 in satisfaction of such claims of the State of Maine; and $92,156 13 in satisfaction of like claims of the State of Massachusetts to be paid by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury.

Mr. LYNCH. For what? Read the whole of it.

Mr. MAYNARD. I have given the whole of it. It is for the purpose of satisfying the claims of the States of Massachusetts and Maine under this treaty.

Mr. LYNCH. What were those claims?

Mr. MAYNARD. Claims under this treaty.

Mr. Speaker, I also find an act approved July 12, 1862, appropriating money for the purpose of quieting titles under this same treaty. There has also been other legislation making appropriations under this treaty. I have brought forward these facts for information. I want further information on the subject. Here are appropriations for satisfying claims under this treaty with Great Britain, and I have had a strong impression this was one of those things that had been finally settled and closed up.

Mr. DELANO. I rise to oppose the amendment. If it were in my power consistently with my sense of public duty to vote for this appropriation I should do it. I have several friends who feel a desire to have it passed, but knowing something about the transaction officially I cannot remain silent while this claim is attempted to be passed. In the first place, I want the House to understand this is part of a claim of over one million dollars which is said to grow out of the Ashburton treaty, and rests upon four grounds. They are stated in the able report of Senator PATTERSON, of New Hampshire, made in the other branch of Congress. Those points are as follows:

"First. A claim for lands assigned to settlers under the fourth article of the treaty of Washington.

"Second. A claim for the loss of timber upon their territory during the suspension of State jurisdiction between 1882 and 1899.

"Third. A claim for the correction of an error made at the Treasury in computing the interest on the expenditures made by the State in defending her territory.

"Fourth. A claim for interest upon advances made by Massachusetts in the war of 1812-15."

On those four claims the gentleman has reported in favor of this, and made out the balance due $691,694. The present appropriation is for one branch of this quadrilateral claim.

Mr. PETERS. Allow me to say they have no connection with each other.

Mr. DELANO. That is matter of opinion. I think directly otherwise, and I think whenever this appropriation is made you have got the iron wedge in and are prepared to open the log with what the farmers call the clog. Now, sir, I want to say to this House that it is utterly impossible in a five-minutes' debate to discuss and analyze these claims so as to arrive at a correct conclusion in reference to any one of them. It is worse than idle, it is almost a crime, for this House, under such circumstances as these, to attempt to pass upon these large amounts. This ought to go to the Committee of Claims, where all claims go. That committee is represented now by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. WASHBURN;] and I am willing to say in advance, that for so much of it as he will report in favor of I will vote blindfolded, I know his integrity and his intelligence so well. This claim was presented to me while I was a member of that committee in the Thirty-Ninth Congress, and it is upon the knowledge that I derived from a preliminary examination, upon the supposition that it would have to come before me, that I assert that no man in this House can understand its merits in any discussion that may be had at this time. I am not now saying that it ought not to be passed, though such is my present opinion. But I want to enforce upon this House the wrong that would be done in attempting to pass this claim in the limited debate that can be had under these circumstances. It is a large claim, it involves intricate questions of international law, it involves important questions touching implied contracts, and it ought to receive careful examination before a deliberative body. Now, is there anybody here who will say that this is a deliberative consideration which we are giving the subject at this time? I pray this House, therefore, in respect to the rights of the nation, not to pass upon this claim, either in whole or in part, upon an appropriation bill with the limited discussion that it can have under the rules of debate that apply to it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I have listened with unflinching attention to this debate, and I have heard only one class of arguments against this claim, and that is an argument to prejudice. The whole speech of my friend from Ohio [Mr. DELANO] is only that and nothing more. He says we cannot understand enough about this question in a five-minutes' debate to pass upon it. Yet the amount is only $100,000. The rules of this House for many years have confined us to five-minutes' debate only upon every item of an appropriation bill by which we can understand how to appropriate millions. We cannot debate any question appropriating money more than five minutes at a time on each question. My friend has, therefore, thus stated a very good reason why this House should follow its Committee on Appropriations and sustain its report. The committee have examined this subject and have reported upon it favorably. Now, while the House follow your committees everywhere else in matters of great moment which it has not time to examine, whenever a matter affecting the intent of the East is brought up, why, then, do gentlemen seem to try to find some reason for not following the committee? You vote with your committees for anything except when a matter comes up in favor of somebody at the East. Now, I appeal to gentlemen to do us justice. The United States took nearly four million acres of land from Maine and Massachusetts by the conventional line established by this treaty, which was an inheritance from our fathers, and we agreed to it without a murmur. And now we ask only to have returned to us what we have had to pay to the settlers on the lands given us in exchange for ours, whose titles the United States agreed to maintain and to extinguish our claim thereon.

Now, I desire to call attention to what was urged by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. MAYNARD.] He has brought in here an appropriation to pay for the survey of those lands which the States of Maine and Massachusetts had to make because the United States would not do it. The appropriation is $9,000 for Maine and $11,000 for Massachusetts. He says he thinks that this was an appropriation to satisfy our claims for the lands themselves. Is this just?

Mr. MAYNARD. Is not the language "to satisfy the claim?"

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. To satisfy certain claims, but not the claim for land.

Then the gentleman brings up again the fact that in 1862 the United States paid James Munroe, Benjamin Sewall, Rufus Mandell, and James A. True for a portion of this land. That is exactly what we did do, sir. Why? Because Maine and Massachusetts had ceded, had sold these parcels of land to those parties before the treaty; so that the lands were theirs, and those States had no further or other title in them; those private parties came here and got their money, as they ought to do. We are now asking for the money for the land which belonged to us, and which we had not ceded, and which is as much ours as that land which the United States paid for was theirs. Again, my friend [Mr. ORT] says: "What examination has this claim had?" It has had the examination of eight committees, and no committee has ever yet reported against it, and my able friend from Indiana [Mr. ORT] could get from his committee only three members to agree with him in his minority report, with all his ability in argument. And there has never been found at any other time during the twenty-odd years since this claim has been pending three men upon any committee that has examined this claim so unwise as to go against it. And it is not until some man prejudiced against it starts out to find reason why it should not be paid that any ground can be found upon which he can make a specious argument, however great his ability.

Sir, this is a plain case. The Government of the United States took this land for its own purposes. The Government exchanged this land for four million acres of land beyond Lake Superior, and it has that land now. We must yield this land to settlers. We are bound by treaty to do so, and this appropriation is to be paid only when we have done so.

This is a just claim; and I appeal once more to the justice of this House to stand by the friends of the Government, and to stand by the faith of the Government.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. Debate is exhausted on the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. PETERS. I would inquire of the Chair whether, if we vote to concur in this amendment of the Senate, we do not vote to sustain the report of the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I will tell the gentleman.

Mr. PETERS. I asked the Speaker; not the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURNE.]

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence in this amendment.

The question recurred upon concurring in the amendment of the Senate, to add to the bill the following:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That for the purpose of executing the fourth article of the treaty of Washington, concluded on the 9th day of August, 1842, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the State of Maine for ninety-one thousand one hundred and twenty-five acres of land assigned by said State to settlers under said article, a sum equal to $1 25 per acre; and to the commonwealth of Massachusetts for twenty-six thousand one hundred and fifty acres of land a sum equal to $1 25 per acre: Provided, That before said sums are paid the States of Maine and Massachusetts shall agree with the United States that the settlers upon their public lands in the late disputed territory in Maine entitled to be quieted in their possessions, as ascertained by commissions heretofore instituted by said States, shall have been or shall be quieted by a release of the title of the said States.

The question was then taken upon concurring in the amendment of the Senate; and upon a division there were—ayes 57, noes 43

Before the result was announced, Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered. The question was again taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 64, nays 47, not voting 87; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnell, Bates, R. Ashley, Bailey, Baldwin, Banks, Benton, Boies, Boutwell, Benjamin F. Butler, Chandler, Churchill, Dawes, Dewesse, Donnelly, Eckley, Ela, Eliot, Ferriss, Garfield, Griswold, Hamilton, Hitzig, Hinds, Hooper, Hopkins, Chester D. Hubbard, Hubbard, Hunter, Jencks, Alexander H. Jones, Julian, Kelsey, George V. Lawrence, Loan, Lynch, Marvin, McClurg, Miller, Nicholson, O'Neill, Paine, Perkins, Peters, Pike, Platts, Pomroy, Price, Sawyer, Smith, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Stokes, Stone, Taffe, Twichell, Robert F. Van Horn, Cadwalader C. Washburn, William B. Washburn, James F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—64.

NAYS—Messrs. Axtell, Baker, Beatty, Beck, Blair, Bromwell, Cary, Cobb, Coburn, Cook, Cullom, Delano, Farnsworth, Ferry, French, Golladay, Gravelly, Grover, Hawkins, Hill, Holman, Judd, Kitchen, Knott, Koontz, William Lawrence, Loughridge, Maynard, McCarthy, McCormick, Mercer, Moore, Moorhead, Mullins, Nunn, Orth, Phelps, Poland, Shanks, Spalding, Thaddeus Stevens, Taber, Thomas, Trowbridge, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, and John T. Wilson—47.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Archer, James M. Ashley, Barnes, Barnum, Beaman, Benjamin, Bingham, Blaine, Boyer, Brooks, Broomall, Buckland, Burr, Clarke, R. Butler, Cape, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cornell, Coyole, Dixon, Dodge, Driggs, Eggleston, Eldridge, Fields, Finney, Fox, Getz, Glossbrenner, Haicht, Halsey, Harding, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Johnson, Thomas L. Jones, Kelley, Kerr, Ketcham, Lufkin, Lincoln, Logan, Mallory, Marshall, McCullough, McKee, Morrill, Morrissey, Mungen, Myers, Newcomb, Niblack, Pile, Polsley, Prayn, Randall, Raum, Robertson, Robinson, Roots, Ross, Sehenek Scofield, Selye, Shellabarger, Sitzgreaves, Stewart, Taylor, John Trimble, Lawrence S. Trimble, Upson, Van Aernam, Van Auker, Burt Van Horn, Van Trump, Van Wyck, Ward, Welker, Thomas Williams, William Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, Wood, and Woodward—87.

So the amendment was concurred in.

Sixty-seventh amendment:

Add to the bill the following as a new section: SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, is authorized to expend the appropriation heretofore made for the purpose of erecting a penitentiary for the Territory of Colorado, on the site belonging to and provided by the said Territory for the purpose.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, obtained the floor.

Mr. MAYNARD. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to yield to allow a motion to be made to reconsider the vote by which the amendment making an appropriation for the custom-house at Nashville was rejected. It is desired that a brief explanation upon that point may be made. The amendment was voted upon without attracting the attention of those more particularly interested in the matter.

Mr. MULLINS. I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURNE] will give us a little time to discuss that matter.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I hope there will be no objection to allowing the motion to reconsider to be made.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I yield to allow the motion to be made.

Mr. ARNELL. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House non-concurred in the twenty-first amendment of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after line two hundred and forty-two the following new paragraph:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to enlarge the lot in the city of Nashville for the erection of a custom-house, $25,000.

Mr. ARNELL. Mr. Speaker, I feel sure that if the House understood the facts in regard to this amendment of the Senate they would concur in it. By act of August 18, 1856, an appropriation was made to this effect:

"At Nashville, Tennessee, for the accommodation of the custom-house, post office, United States courts, and steamboat inspectors, a building of like materials, eighty-five feet long by sixty deep and sixty feet high, to cost not more than $95,000."

An additional appropriation was afterward made of $20,000 to buy a site for this building. The lot was purchased in a very desirable and suitable part of the city of Nashville. Owing to various reasons, the war among others, the erection of the building was prevented. The ground purchased is much too small for the proposed custom-house, which is greatly needed. One hundred and twenty-four thousand five hundred dollars has been appropriated, but, as I understand, it cannot be used for the purchase of additional ground. In the report of the Secretary of the Treasury for 1861-62, I find the following tabular statement:

Location.	Custom-house.	Post Office.
	Revenue collected.	Revenue collected.
Nashville, Tenn.	$18,022 00	$20,336 07

This statement, the latest that I can find, is for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1857. From personal inspection, I know that additional ground is needed. My colleague who represents this district [Mr. TRIMBLE] is not in his seat, or he could state the necessity for this appropriation more forcibly and in detail than I can. The amount is small, is necessary, and I trust it will be granted.

Mr. MAYNARD. I ask my colleague [Mr. ARNELL] whether the officer having charge of this subject has not recommended this appropriation, and whether, from his knowledge of the property, he does not consider the amount named a very moderate price for the lot in question.

Mr. ARNELL. My understanding is that the appropriation has been recommended by the proper officer, and it is certainly a very moderate sum for property in the locality of the original purchase.

On the motion to reconsider, there were—ayes twenty-three, noes not counted.

Mr. ARNELL called for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the motion to reconsider was not agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I move to reconsider the votes on concurring in the various Senate amendments; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I move that the House ask the appointment of a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

SECURITY OF PASSENGERS ON STEAMBOATS.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1372) for the better security of life on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, ordered, with the accompanying papers, to be printed, and recommended.

THOMAS W. WARD.

Mr. ELIOT. I want to report back from the Committee on Commerce Senate bill No. 542, for the relief of Thomas W. Ward, collector of customs at Corpus Christi, Texas.

Several MEMBERS. Let us hear the bill first.

The bill was read. It proposes to direct the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to settle the accounts of Thomas W. Ward, late collector of customs for the district of Corpus Christi, Texas, from March 5, 1867, to July 31, 1867, and to allow him the same compensation and emoluments as if he had been legally collector of customs for that district for that period. It further proposes to recognize the deputy collector appointed by Thomas W. Ward on the 7th of March, 1867, as the legal deputy collector of the district, and the accounting officers are to settle his accounts in the same manner as if he had been legally appointed and all his acts were legal.

Mr. MULLINS. I do not understand that. I should like to know upon what ground this is proposed to be done for this gentleman?

Mr. BENJAMIN. I object, and call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. Then the bill is not before the House.

REMOVAL OF POLITICAL DISABILITIES.

The SPEAKER stated the regular order of business to be the consideration of House bill No. 1353, for the removal of certain disabilities from the persons therein named, reported yesterday from the Committee on Reconstruction by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL.]

The bill was read. It provides (two thirds of each House concurring therein) that the several persons hereinafter named shall be severally relieved from all disabilities imposed upon them, or either of them, by the act passed March 2, 1867, entitled "An act to provide for the more efficient government of the rebel States," and the acts supplementary thereto, and the amendment of the Constitution of the United States known as article fourteen:

Jacob Kibler, Henry Summer, John P. Kinard, E. P. Luke, and W. W. Houseal, of Newberry county; H. P. Hammond, Greenville; Elihu Moore, Lancaster; S. B. Clowney, Fairfield; Lewis Dial, Laurens; H. H. Kinnard, Newberry; J. C. Miller, Charleston; A. P. Kinnard, Newberry; H. Beatie, Greenville; S. W. Maurice, Williamsburg; D. L. Thomas, Beaufort; F. C. Gowen, H. C. Markley, Thomas Cox, and John D. Ashmore, of Greenville; William B. Johnson, Richland; M. C. Williams and G. W. Williams, of York; R. M. Wallace, Richland; John Twitty, Lancaster; Matthew McDonald, Abbeville; A. G. Baskin and E. B. Miller, of Richland; C. R. Rutland, J. Botton Smith, and Daniel Burton, of York; Walter W. Herbert and Thomas Jordan, of Fairfield; Thomas E. Dudley, Bennettsville; Alexander McBee, Greenville; J. B. Tolleson and B. F. Bates, of Spartanburg; William M. Thomas, Greenville; James A. Black, Abbeville; Willis Allen, Spartanburg; John S. Green, Sumter; Elijah U. Horner, Edgefield; H. W. Lawson, Abbeville; Doctor Robert Lebbey, Charleston; James Gibbs, Columbia, all of South Carolina.

Jacob Keichler, San Antonio; Jacob Eliot, Navarro county; Jacob Schmitz, Comal county; Richard W. Davis, Goliad; John Blair, Houston county, and Thomas Ochiltree, all of Texas.

P. M. B. Young, Cartersville; R. W. Bell, Banks county; H. H. Took, Thomas county; Walter Brock, thirty-eighth congressional district; W. C. Daniel, Savannah; William T. Martin, Banks county; John W. H. Underwood, Augustus Wright; Charles E. Broyles, Dalton, all of Georgia.

John F. Conoley, Dallas county; Henry C. Sanford, Cherokee county, all of Alabama.

Zenon Labauve; John E. Frudean, parish of Jefferson; Theodule Drouet and Rufus King Howell, of New Orleans; Wade H. Hough, W. W. Handlin, all of Louisiana.

George W. Marshall, Lafayette, Tennessee. Robert H. Gumble, Tallahassee; Thomas T. Long, Lake City; Josiah E. Lee, Sumterville; A. C. Blount, Pensacola; Benjamin Neal, Marion, all of Florida. Charles W. Helm, Leavenworth, Kansas.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. Speaker, that bill provides for the removal of political disabilities from about seventy-four men from Florida, South Carolina, Tennessee, Alabama, Louisiana, Georgia, Texas, and one from Kansas. We have given in the report for the purpose of placing in the records of the House the recommendations in each case. Most of the persons named in this bill are members-elect of State governments in these States. P. M. B. Young, elected to this House from Georgia, is, I understand, a Democrat. He has been recommended by General Grant, General Meade, and others of the Union Army. He was a colonel of cavalry in the rebel army. He is engaged at present in helping forward reconstruction. I know no other name to be found in this bill which it is necessary to call particular attention to, that is to say, there is nothing to distinguish them from those heretofore reported. I move to amend by inserting the names of William M. Moore, of Yancey county, and Leonidas C. Edwards, of Oxford, Alabama. I yield now to my colleague on the committee.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I observe in this bill the name of John D. Ashmore, of South Carolina.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was about to state the fact that he has been already relieved. His name was in the other bill. If there be no objection, it will be stricken out.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I move to insert the names of James L. Seward, of Thomas county, Georgia, and Edward Cropland, of Graves county, Kentucky.

Mr. PAINE. I move to add the name of William E. Vaughn, of North Carolina. I send to the desk a letter which I have on the subject, the writer of which is well known by reputation. The gentleman from the first district of North Carolina, [Mr. FRENCH,] I believe, understands something about the merits of this individual, and will state to the House what he knows on the subject.

Mr. MULLINS. Who proves this?

Mr. PAINE. In the first place the writer of this letter, in the next place the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. FRENCH,] who, I believe, is not now in his seat. I will ask when he comes in that he have an opportunity to state the facts.

Mr. MULLINS. Has the gentleman related all the evidence he has received why this gentleman should be relieved?

Mr. PAINE. I have not related anything yet. I propose to have the letter read by and by.

Mr. MULLINS. Are you acquainted with the gentleman who writes this letter?

Mr. PAINE. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. FRENCH] knows this gentleman by reputation or personally, and will inform the House about him as soon as he comes in?

Mr. MULLINS. You do not want the name acted upon then now?

Mr. BOUTWELL. I ask that a vote be taken on the several amendments already proposed. I shall allow some to be offered but I do not like to have the bill complicated with various amendments.

Mr. MULLINS. Before the question is put I desire to ask who is the gentleman from Tennessee that you propose now to relieve.

Mr. BOUTWELL. George W. Marshall, of Lafayette, Tennessee.

Mr. MULLINS. I do not know him.

Mr. BOUTWELL. But your colleague recommends him.

Mr. STOKES. I state to my colleague that I know the man and those who recommended him. He is a worthy man.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I call the previous question on the amendment to insert the names of William M. Moore and Leonidas C. Edwards.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I now call for a vote on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. FARNSWORTH,] to insert the names of James L. Seward and Edward Cropland.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I desire to say that Mr. Seward is known to several members here, and I have no hesitation in vouching for him myself. I know him well, and have seen him recently, as have many members of the House. He is a fit and proper person to be taken into the church. As for Mr. Cropland, his petition was presented to the House this morning, and he is vouched for by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. McKEE.]

Mr. BOUTWELL. I call the previous question on the amendment.

Mr. BANKS. I wish to say a word in favor of placing the name of Mr. Seward, of Georgia, on the list. I agree with what the gentleman from Illinois has said in regard to him.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. These names had better go to the committee and be examined. It may be the opinion of the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Massachusetts that these men ought to be relieved, but we are called upon to act simply upon the individual opinion of gentlemen who assign no reason; and when the House knows nothing about the particular cases at all. I shall not vote to relieve any man upon the simple opinion of one member of this House without any facts upon which to act. I think these cases ought to go to the committee for examination, and I hope the House will vote down all these names that are sent in with some letter written by somebody about whom we know nothing vouching for the parties. It will be a very cheap pardon if rebels can come in and have a bill passed for their relief merely because some gentleman at the South writes a letter saying that they are worthy gentlemen.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CULLOM.]

Mr. CULLOM. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] if the Committee on Reconstruction know anything about the history of Charles W. Helm, of Leavenworth, Kansas? I understand that he is a northern man, who voluntarily went South and got on Bragg's staff, and is now one of the worst rebels in the South.

Mr. BOUTWELL. We know nothing except what is in the report.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope, then, that his name will be stricken out of this bill. I make that motion.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I now call the previous question on the amendments of the two gentlemen from Illinois, [Mr. FARNSWORTH and Mr. CULLOM.]

Mr. JUDD. Will the gentleman allow me to present a name in connection with those already offered?

Mr. BOUTWELL. I would prefer to have the question taken separately on those amendments.

The previous question was then seconded and the main question ordered.

The first question was upon the amendment of Mr. FARNSWORTH, to insert "James L. Seward, of Thomas county, Georgia, and Edward Cropland, of Graves county, Kentucky."

The amendment was agreed to, there being, on a division—ayes 54, noes 46.

The next question was upon the amendment of Mr. CULLOM, to strike out "Charles W. Helm, of Leavenworth, Kansas."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next question was upon the amendment of Mr. PAINE, to insert "William E. Vaughn, of Pasquotank county, North Carolina."

Mr. PAINE. When I moved that amendment I stated that when the Representative from the first North Carolina district [Mr. FRENCH] should appear on the floor I would ask to have a letter read by the Clerk, and that then I would ask that gentleman to state to the House what he knows about Mr. Vaughn; for I have no knowledge of him except what I have obtained from this letter and from the honorable gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. FRENCH.] He, however, is not here; but another member from North Carolina is here, [Mr. DEWESEE,] who can state about this man. I now ask the Clerk to read the letter I send to him.

The Clerk read as follows:

ELIZABETH CITY, N. C., June 30, 1868.

DEAR SIR: In looking over a printed list of North Carolinians whose disabilities have been removed, I discover that the name of William E. Vaughn, of Pasquotank county, is omitted. His name was included in the list sent up by the constitutional convention, and in addition we had sent previously a petition numerous signed by Republicans, asking a removal in Mr. Vaughn's individual case. He has recently been elected (first choice in nomination) to the most responsible office in the county. He has been constantly loyal and extremely Radical. At his request I drop you this, hoping that you will be able to do something for him soon.

Yours, &c.,

C. L. COBB.

Hon. R. C. SCHENCK, Washington, D. C.

Mr. PAINE. I now ask the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DEWESEE] to make a statement to the House.

Mr. DEWESEE. I know very well, indeed, the gentleman referred to in the letter just read by the Clerk. He has been a good, quiet citizen and a loyal man ever since I first obtained a residence in the State, now well on to three years. I have always heard Mr. Vaughn spoken of as a man who was bitterly opposed to the rebellion, and who did everything he could to break down Jeff. Davis and his oligarchy. I know he warmly supported the reconstruction measures of Congress, and did everything in his power to assist in carrying them out. He was a Radical candidate upon the Republican ticket in the late election in North Carolina, and did good service in carrying the election. He was elected to the office of clerk of the superior court.

Mr. MILLER. What part did he take in the rebellion?

Mr. DEWESEE. He was holding a civil office when the war broke out, and continued to hold it for some time afterward.

Mr. MILLER. Did he take the oath to support the confederate government?

Mr. DEWESEE. I do not know whether he did or not; perhaps he did. The office of magistrate, which was the one he held, carries no emoluments with it.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I now call the previous question on the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. PAINE.]

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I move to insert the name of John F. Alexander, of Cleveland county, North Carolina. He is a man well known to me. He has never held any office, does not seek any office now, and is quietly at home attending to his business. He is fully and thoroughly in favor of the Union, and as a man of probity and honesty of character, I know of no superior to him. He is under the employ of a northern company, carrying on a large business to their great satisfaction, enjoying their entire confidence.

Mr. MULLINS. If the gentleman knows, will he please state what part this man took in the rebellion, making it necessary that disabilities shall be removed from him now?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. He was in the rebel army in some capacity.

Mr. MULLINS. As an officer?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. He was, I believe, at first conscripted, and afterward held an office, as I remember it.

Mr. MULLINS. What evidence has the gentleman, beyond what he has stated, of this man's returning sense of crime and of his penitence thereof? [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I know from letters from him, and from the report of a gentleman formerly a member of this House, who has spent some time with him, that he is thoroughly "reconstructed."

Mr. MULLINS. Well, if he is thoroughly "reconstructed," no act of ours can give him any further relief.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Oh, yes; for he is technically under disability.

Mr. DEWEESSE. Will the gentleman give us the name of the ex-member of this body who recommended Mr. Alexander?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. General Marston, of New Hampshire, who is one of the company employing Mr. Alexander.

Mr. DEWEESSE. If there is in North Carolina any man named Alexander who is loyal we have never been able to discover the fact. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The gentleman may probably know this man when I state that he is a resident of the town of Selby.

Mr. DEWEESSE. I have no acquaintance with him; but so far as I have been able to understand, there is no loyal man in North Carolina named Alexander. On the contrary a by-word with us is, "You are as disloyal as the Alexander family." [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I think I can relieve the difficulty of my friend from North Carolina. This gentleman went from Virginia to North Carolina to take the superintendency of a business in the latter State.

Mr. DEWEESSE. Virginia is a very bad State to come from. [Laughter.] And I will say that while I am willing to go as far as any man in this House to relieve the political disabilities of men deserving such relief, I do not want to see the gate thrown open so that all these rebels whose hands are red with the blood of my fellow-soldiers shall be brought in. If this thing is to be carried to such an extent that every man who can get a letter written for him is to be relieved from political disabilities we might as well adopt at once a sweeping resolution relieving all the unrepentant rebels of the South.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman know this man at all?

Mr. DEWEESSE. No, sir.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I do.

Mr. DEWEESSE. If I have the evidence that this man is loyal I will vote for his relief; if I have not such evidence, I will vote against relieving him or any other man.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I wish simply to say that I know this gentleman; he has been in the employ of a company with which I am connected. I know him as well as I can know any man. He is as loyal as any gentleman in North Carolina or out of it. I think I have not given any evidence of being so forgiving to these people that I cannot be trusted to distinguish a rebel from a Union man. If I did not know this man, or if my friend from North Carolina [Mr. DEWEESSE] knew him and declared him an improper person to be relieved, I would not say a word in favor of such relief. But I do know him.

Mr. MULLINS. I do not; and I have been asking for information.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I think the disposition of the House is to go no further in the way of receiving amendments. I must therefore decline to give way for any further amendments. I am willing that a vote shall be taken on the amendment of my colleague, [Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts.] I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment of Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, was agreed to, there being—ayes 56, noes 45.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I find that I promised the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JUDD] to allow him to propose an amendment. I yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. JUDD. I move to amend by inserting the name of A. J. Yorke, of Concord, Cabarrus county, North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say this gentleman is a personal acquaintance of mine. He is a merchant of high standing, and a man of high character. Under the old government and under the government existing there at the time of the rebellion he held the position of a justice of the peace. For that reason it is necessary he shall be relieved from political disability.

Mr. MAYNARD. We have a delegation now upon this floor from North Carolina, and it seems to me if there are any applications from that State they had better come backed by that delegation. The gentleman from Illinois will pardon me for saying so. I intend no reflection upon any member of the House. I intend to state a general proposition for myself. They have better local information than any one else.

Mr. JUDD. I will simply remind the gentleman how recently North Carolina has been represented in any manner upon this floor. Bills were pending before the House for the purpose of removing political disabilities long before that State was represented upon this floor. The particular district in which this gentleman resides is not yet represented upon this floor. I made his acquaintance when I was in North Carolina for five or six weeks, and my colleague will indorse all I have stated in his behalf. He has favored the congressional policy of reconstruction. He is a man of high standing and character. He addressed a note to me on the subject of his relief. I also received a letter from persons as thoroughly radical as any can be, stating if there was ever any one entitled to be relieved of disability it is this gentleman. That is the reason for presenting his name for insertion in this bill.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. The case is exactly as my colleague says.

Mr. BOUTWELL demanded the previous question on the amendment.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment was adopted.

Mr. MAYNARD. I notice names from Texas, which is not yet reconstructed, while there are none from Virginia or Mississippi.

Mr. PAINE. I have not yet brought up the bill for the relief of the citizens of Mississippi, as there was no necessity for immediate action for the purposes of the State government. The bill is ready.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I will say that, with the exception of a very few names of citizens of Texas, and one in Tennessee, and one in Kansas, which has been stricken out, this bill embraces only the names of those who are connected with offices in the States about to be reorganized and admitted to representation. We act upon the general principle that from time to time bills should be reported relieving persons from disability in order to carry on these State governments. I believe I cannot yield for further amendment. I now demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BOUTWELL demanded the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 77, nays 23, not voting 92; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Bailey, Baker, Beatty, Benjamin, Benton, Blair, Boies, Boutwell, Benjamin F. Butler, Calkins, Churchill, Cook, Cullom, Dawes, Deweese, Donnelly, Driggs, Eli, Eliot, Farnsworth, Ferriss, Ferry, French, Garfield, Griswold, Higby, Hinds, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Jenckes, Alexander H. Jones, Judd, Kelsey, Kitchen, Koonz, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Lou Bridge, Lynch, Mallory, Marvin, McCarthy, McClurg, Moore, Moorhead, Morrell, Myers, O'Neill, Paine, Perham, Peters, Pile, Platts, Poland, Pomeroy, Rogers, Schenck, Scofield, Selye, Smith, Stewart, Stokes, Taylor, Thomas, Twichell, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, John T. Wilson, and Windom—77.

NAYS—Messrs. Arnett, Bromwell, Cary, Chanler, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Golladay, Hamilton, Hawkins, Holman, Hopkins, Hunter, Julian, Loan, McCormick, Mercer, Miller, Mullins, Nicholson, Orth, Price, Sawyer, Shanks, Spalding, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Taber, and Taffe—29.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Ames, Archer, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Baldwin, Banks, Barnes, Barnum, Beauman, Beck, Bingham, Blaine, Beyer, Brooks, Broomall, Buckland, Burr, Roderick R. Butler, Reader W. Clarke, Cornell, Covode, Delano, Dixon, Dodge, Eckley, Eggleston, Eldridge, Fields, Finney, Fox, Getz, Glossbrenner, Gravely, Grover, Haight, Halscy, Harding, Hill, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Johnson, Thomas L. Jones, Kelley, Kerr, Ketcham, Knott, Ladlin, Lincoln, Logan, Marshall, Maynard, McCullough, McKee, Morrissey, Munger, Newcomb, Nickles, Nunn, Phelps, Pike, Polsley, Pruyn, Randall, Raum, Robertson, Robinson, Ross, Shellabarger, Sigreaves, Thaddeus Stevens, Stone, John Trimble, Lawrence S. Trimble, Trowbridge, Van Aernam, Van Aiken, Van Trump, Van Wyck, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Welker, Thomas Williams, William Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Wood, Woodbridge, and Woodward—92.

So (two-thirds voting in the affirmative) the bill was passed.

During the roll call,

Mr. KELSEY said that Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana, was confined to his room by sickness.

The vote having been announced as above recorded,

Mr. BOUTWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has now commenced, unless the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] calls up the election case of which he has given notice.

Mr. POLAND. I said I would call it up after the morning hour. I supposed, however, the morning hour would be in the morning. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman to decline to call it up.

Mr. POLAND. I yield for the morning hour.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. GORHAM, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a bill (H. R. No. 1156) authorizing the Commissioner of the General Land Office to issue a patent to F. N. Blake for one hundred and sixty acres of land in Kansas.

The message further announced that the Senate had indefinitely postponed the following bills of the House:

An act (H. R. No. 1313) granting an increase of pension to Sarah Hackleman, widow of Brigadier General Pleasant A. Hackleman;

An act (H. R. No. 293) to regulate and limit the admiralty jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States;

An act (H. R. No. 90) to authorize and require the administration of oaths in certain cases, and to punish perjury in connection therewith; and

An act (H. R. No. 1194) to provide for the inauguration of State officers in Arkansas, North Carolina, South Carolina, Louisiana, Georgia, and Alabama, and for the meetings of the Legislatures of said States.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 49) to revive and continue in force the act of the 29th July, 1850, and the act amendatory thereof of the 2d of April, 1852; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

STEAMER WAMPANOAG.

Mr. PIKE. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to furnish this House with a copy of his order of the 13th of April, 1868, directing a trial of the United States steamer Wampanoag, together with the reports of the trial of said vessel made previous or subsequent to said order, and such other information as the Department possesses relative to the efficiency or non-efficiency of that particular vessel or that class of vessels.

Mr. CHANLER. What is the object of that?

Mr. PIKE. To get at information about that class of vessels.

Mr. CHANLER. I have no doubt of that; but who owns this vessel?

Mr. PIKE. The Government.

Mr. CHANLER. Is she for sale?

Mr. PIKE. She is not.

Mr. CHANLER. What is the specific object?

Mr. PIKE. To learn the efficiency of this class of vessels.

Mr. CHANLER. Is she an isolated instance?

Mr. PIKE. She is a steamer of about three thousand tons, and made a trial trip the other day. We want information in relation to that trial trip. That is all there is of it.

Mr. CHANLER. All right.

The resolution was agreed to.

GOVERNMENT OF THE ARMY.

Mr. GARFIELD, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Military Affairs a bill (H. R. No. 1873) establishing rules and articles for the government of the armies of the United States; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommended to the committee.

On motion of Mr. GARFIELD, by unanimous consent, the foregoing bill, together with other bills reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, were allowed to be considered at the evening session ordered by the House on Friday next.

Mr. GARFIELD moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TREATY WITH THE CHEROKEES.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be and is directed to furnish to this House as soon as practicable the appraisals of lands made in pursuance of the treaty of July 19, 1866, between the United States and the Cherokee nation of Indians.

Mr. VAN HORN, of Missouri. I object.

CITIZENSHIP OF INDIANS, ETC.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has now commenced, and the regular order is the call of the committees for reports. If there are no further reports from the Committee on Manufactures, the Committee on Indian Affairs is next in order.

Mr. WINDOM, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back the petition of J. G. Olney, and others of New York, in reference to extending the rights of citizenship to Indians; also, the petition of the Peace Society of Pennsylvania for more peaceful relations with the Indians; also, fifteen other petitions on the same subject; all of which were laid on the table, and the committee was discharged from their further consideration.

SAMUEL KELLY.

Mr. MILLER moved that the Committee on Invalid Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Samuel Kelly for an increase of an invalid pension under the act of June 6, 1866, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and of the War of 1812.

The motion was agreed to.

SARAH A. BRIGGS.

Mr. MILLER also moved that the Committee on Invalid Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Sarah A. Briggs for an increase of pension, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and of the War of 1812.

The motion was agreed to.

DENT, VANTINE & CO.

Mr. WINDOM, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1374) for the relief of Dent, Vantine & Co., for provisions furnished to the Indians of California during the years 1851 and 1852; which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Dent, Vantine & Co., for provisions furnished to the Indians of California during the years 1851 and 1852, the sum of $25,327 30, the same to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. CULLOM. I make the point of order that this is an appropriation bill, and must receive its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WINDOM. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon his point of order.

Mr. CULLOM. This is an old claim; I insist upon my point of order.

Mr. WINDOM. Because this is an old claim, and these parties have been kept out of what was justly due them all this time, that is no reason why they should not now be paid.

Mr. CULLOM. I insist upon my point of order.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole.

CONTROL OF INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. WINDOM, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, also reported a bill (H. R. No. 1375) to transfer to the Department of the Interior certain powers and duties now exercised by the Secretary of the Treasury in connection with Indian affairs; which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill, which was read, provides that the powers and duties devolving upon the Secretary of the Treasury, under and by virtue of the fourth section of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1849, and for other purposes," approved July 29, 1848, and the powers and duties devolved upon him under and by virtue of the laws relating to the investment of moneys in behalf of the Cherokee Indians from the sales of land under the treaties concluded at Pontotoc, October 20, 1832, and at Washington city, May 24, 1834, as also all other supervisory and appellate powers and duties in regard to Indian affairs which may now by law be vested in the Secretary of the Treasury, shall, from and after the passage of this act, be exercised and performed by the Secretary of the Department of the Interior.

Mr. CHANLER. I would inquire of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] in what stage is the present condition of these Indian affairs, whether in the hands of the military power or the civil power, and whether this bill relates in any way to the struggle about this matter now going on between those two powers?

Mr. WINDOM. I will state all there is in this bill as I understand it, and I think I fully understand it. By some anomaly the Secretary of the Treasury now has charge of about fifteen hundred Indians in North Carolina, while the Secretary of the Interior has charge of all the Indians in every other portion of the United States. I hold in my hand a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, asking that these Indians in North Carolina may be transferred to the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior. Those two Cabinet officers have drawn up a bill for the purpose of accomplishing that result, which bill I have simply copied, and now report to the House by the direction of the Committee on Indian Affairs, who have examined it, and think it should pass.

Mr. ALLISON. As this bill was read I noticed something in it in reference to an investment of the Cherokee trust fund. I would ask the gentleman to give the House some explanation of that matter.

Mr. WINDOM. At the time the Cherokees were removed from North Carolina a provision was made that those who remained behind should have fifty-three dollars each set apart to them as a permanent fund, the interest of which was to be paid annually. About fifteen hundred of them remained behind, and they have been under the charge of the Secretary of the Treasury, who has been paying to them the interest on that fund of fifty-three dollars each. The desire on the part of both the Interior and the Treasury Department is that these Indians shall be transferred to where the others are.

Mr. ALLISON. How are those funds invested?

Mr. WINDOM. They are simply in the Treasury of the United States; they are not invested in bonds at all. We make no provision with reference to that.

Mr. ALLISON. I would like to ask the gentleman another question—whether or not the Secretary of the Interior can draw upon this fund under this bill except through the Secretary of the Treasury? How can he reach this fund which is set apart?

Mr. WINDOM. He can reach it, I suppose, as he reaches all other funds that are in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. By requisition?

Mr. WINDOM. By requisition.

Mr. MULLINS. Mr. Speaker, it seems that this treaty was made twenty or thirty years ago with these Cherokee Indians; and by the action of the Government of the United States, certain funds were allowed to remain in the Treasury subject to the order of the Secretary of the Treasury. This is not a fund to be now created anew, but it is, as I understand, proposed to draw from the fund that has already been appropriated years ago for this object. It seems to be now the determination of those Indians to remove, and to reside with their fellow Indians who have gone to the country allotted them in the Indian territory. These Indians who remained in North Carolina have been the victims of the most atrocious swindling. Agents have come here pretending to represent them. One gentleman by the name of Thomas came here years ago and drew the amount due to each Indian and bought some fifty thousand acres of land and held it in his own name; and these Indians are now deprived of every dollar of the interest upon that money, the property being now levied upon to be sold for the individual indebtedness of Thomas. The man has been deranged for two or three years, and is now, or was recently, in a lunatic asylum. These Indians do not ask for reimbursement of that money; but they ask this expenditure out of the interest due to them upon the appropriation heretofore made, which, under the contract by the Government, was to inure to their benefit if they remained in North Carolina, and they have remained there. I will say further, that during this dreadful and bloody rebellion, which is costing this House so many days of labor in pardoning the men who were engaged in it, those Indians were under the stars and stripes of the United States; and now they come up as the wards of this Government and ask that this allowance shall be granted to them out of the original fund; so that they may go and reside with their fellow Indians.

Mr. WINDOM. Gentlemen misapprehend, to some extent, this bill. It contains nothing with reference to the payment of this money. The Secretary of the Treasury can now pay it just as the Secretary of the Interior could do; but the Indian department is not under the control of the Secretary of the Treasury, and he has no means of managing properly this money. It is, therefore, desired that these Indians shall be placed with the other Indians. It may be said that there may be abuses under the provision now proposed; but there can be no worse abuses than those which we have heretofore had; and these Indians had better all go together. I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WINDOM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK,] upon the condition that the business which he may introduce shall give rise to no debate.

REMISSION OF DUTY.

Mr. SCHENCK, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a joint resolution (H. R. No. 327) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to remit the duty on certain meridian circles; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution directs the Secretary of the Treasury to remit the duties on a meridian circle imported for the Observatory at Cambridge, State of Massachusetts, and on a meridian circle imported for the Observatory connected with the Chicago University, at Chicago, State of Illinois.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LOYAL CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW INDIANS.

Mr. WINDOM, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1376) for the relief of the loyal Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read as follows:

A bill for the relief of the loyal Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians.

Be it enacted, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to adopt and ratify the compromise and agreements entered into and executed on the 20th and 21st of April, 1868, between the legally-authorized representatives of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations of Indians, and the legally-authorized representatives of the loyal Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians, claimants under the forty-ninth article of the treaty of April 28, 1866, between the United States and the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians, as a full and final settlement of all claims under the aforesaid article of said treaty. And the amounts, as stipulated in the aforesaid agreement, to be paid to the loyal Choctaw and Chickasaw claimants, to wit: To the Choctaw claimants the sum of $109,742 08, and to the Chickasaw claimants the sum of $231,000 [$150,000] shall be paid by the Secretary of the Interior to said claimants, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States belonging to or held in trust for said nations of Indians; but in case there is not a sufficient amount of money in the Treasury of the United States belonging to or held in trust for said nations of Indians to discharge their respective obligations to the loyal Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians, claimant, or in case [the representatives of] the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations of Indians shall request it, then the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to sell such bonds or other securities held in trust by the United States for the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations of Indians as may be necessary to discharge their respective obligations to the aforesaid loyal Choctaw and Chickasaw claimants, as stipulated in the aforesaid compromise and agreements: Provided, That no bonds or securities shall be sold for less than par.

Mr. SHANKS. I wish to file a minority report in this case.

Mr. KELSEY. I make the point of order that this bill, under the rules, must go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, as it appropriates money.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides this is not an appropriation bill. It provides for the sale of bonds or other securities of these Indian nations for a certain purpose. An appropriation bill is to appropriate money of the United States out of the Treasury of the United States, and the rules require that such a bill should have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole, so that every person representing the people of the United States may have an opportunity to debate it.

Mr. WINDOM. I wish the House to understand this bill. It does not appropriate any money out of the Treasury of the United States belonging to the United States. It does appropriate money belonging to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians, but is no charge upon the Treasury of the United States. Mr. Speaker, in 1866 a treaty was made with these Indians. By one of the articles of that treaty it was agreed that a commission, to consist of a person or persons to be appointed by the President of the United States, shall be appointed immediately on the ratification of the treaty, who shall take into consideration and determine the claim of such Choctaws and Chickasaws as allege that they have been driven during the late rebellion from their homes in the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations on account of their adhesion to the United States, for damages, with power to make such award as may be consistent with equity and good conscience, taking into view the circumstances; and their report, when ratified by the Secretary of the Interior, shall be final, and authorize the payment of the amount from any moneys of said nations in the hands of the United States as said commission may award. At the time this treaty was made there were certain claims of persons denominated as loyal Choctaws and Chickasaws presented against the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations. The treaty provided this commission to ascertain the amount of damage due them. That commission went into the Indian Territory, examined witnesses, and reported a certain amount due to these parties for damages committed by the disloyal Indians during the war upon those who were our friends, stood by us, and fought manfully for the stars and stripes. I believe I have had occasion heretofore to refer to some of the sufferings which these people endured when they were driven out of the Indian country into Kansas. Many of them were frozen to death. The Choctaw and Cherokee nations have a considerable fund, amounting to about five hundred thousand dollars, I think, in the Treasury, upon which we pay them interest annually. They have also certain bonds which we hold in trust for them.

A MEMBER. To what amount?

Mr. WINDOM. I do not remember; but enough, at all events, to cover this bill. After the report of the commission finding a certain amount due to these loyal Indians had been made, it was found that there were certain persons in the nation opposing it, and it was difficult to get the ratification of the Secretary of the Interior. The attorney of the loyal claimants being present, and a delegation from the Choctaws and Cherokees properly authorized to make a settlement, being in this city, they met together and made an agreement, which I hold in my hand, in regard to the amount which should be paid. As I said in the outset, it is not a sum of money to be paid out of the Treasury, but simply a sum to be paid by the nation of Indians to certain individuals among themselves. These loyal Indians have agreed, and the nation has agreed by their delegates here in this city, upon a contract which is now ratified by the Secretary of the Interior, and all that is asked is that we shall confirm that ratification and authorize the money to be paid according to the agreement which they have made among themselves, and which, it seems to me, we ought to carry out. Both sides have agreed to it, and are satisfied.

Mr. CHANLER. I desire to ask the gentleman this question: whether this does not divert from the specific purpose to which these funds which are now in bonds were appropriated by express law of this Government; whether, instead of appropriating the money which was given by the United States for educational purposes you are not taking this money and converting it to settle a question of contract, agreement, or treaty, whatever it may be, and not for the purpose originally specified when the money was appropriated?

Mr. WINDOM. I believe a portion of these funds was set aside for school purposes; not by treaty, however, but by simple act of Congress. But the nation, by its properly authorized delegate, Mr. Pitchlin, acting in its behalf, desire this thing to be done.

Mr. CHANLER. How can this Government be a party to the violation of a trust? How can we as trustees of these wards violate the law by diverting this property from the purpose originally designated by the Government to some new purpose?

Mr. WINDOM. I suppose if the parties in interest agree to it we have no right to object.

Mr. CHANLER. I do not profess to be aware of the exact relation of those Indians to this Government. But as I understand it, from what I have read in the books, certainly as held by Chancellor Kent and other excellent authorities—I think Story in his Commentaries holds the same—an Indian is a ward of this Government. Now, I hold that it does not become the Government of the United States to violate a trust, when the Government is the trustee and those Indians are our wards. It looks to me as if this matter should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary before the House passes upon it.

Mr. PETERS. Will the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WINDOM. Certainly.

Mr. PETERS. I would inquire of the gentleman whether all the treaties which protected these tribes were not lost by their declaring war against the Government of the United States; and whether there has not been a new treaty made with them since the rebellion; and whether there is not a clause in that treaty compelling these Indian nations to pay the loyal Chickasaws and Choctaws what they lost by reason of the rebellion.

Mr. WINDOM. The gentleman has stated the facts in the case.

Mr. CHANLER. Then I would ask the gentleman another question.

Mr. WINDOM. Very well.

Mr. CHANLER. Are the Indians themselves to be the recipients of this money, or the Indian traders? This is in relation to the destruction of the property of a citizen of the United States.

Mr. WINDOM. The gentleman is referring to another bill which has not yet been reported, but which will be soon reported.

Mr. CHANLER. Very well. Then I would ask the gentleman in what relation the Indians embraced in this treaty stand to the Government of the United States?

Mr. WINDOM. I have not time now to go at length into that question, because the Committee on Indian Affairs have several reports yet to make. But in reply to what has been said by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CHANLER,] in relation to these Indians being the wards of the Government, I will say that these Choctaw and Chickasaw nations of Indians are very nearly as intelligent as white people. They have their own governments, their Legislatures, their printed statutes and laws; their governors, their attorney general, who is here in this city to-day—they have all the forms of government we have, and are just about as sharp and intelligent as white men, and if they make an agreement such as we have in this case, and desire us to carry it out, I do not think that we should refuse to do it, on the ground that the ignorant Indians are our wards.

Mr. ALLISON. It is proposed that if there should be a deficiency the Secretary of the Interior shall be allowed to sell a portion of these securities upon the request of the representatives of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations. Now I do not know who their representatives may be.

Mr. PETERS. Their Legislatures.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I should say their "Legislatures," or "the Chickasaw and Choctaw nations," so that the representation may be legal and authorized.

Mr. WINDOM. I have no objection to the amendment the gentleman suggests; although I think the bill is correct now.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to amend this bill by striking out the words "the representatives of;" so that that portion of the bill will read:

Or in case the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations of Indians shall request it, then the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to sell such bonds or other securities held in trust by the United States for the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations of Indians as may be necessary to discharge their respective obligations to the aforesaid loyal Choctaw and Chickasaw claimants, &c.

Mr. WINDOM. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment of Mr. ALLISON was then agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. I will add one or two words more, and then yield to my colleague on the committee [Mr. SHANKS] for some remarks he desires to make on this subject. In making this compromise of settlement the amount found due to the Chickasaw Indians has been reduced somewhat from the amount reported by the commission. The committee felt that as the claimants were anxious that this bill should pass it was better to report upon the compromise as they had made it. I now yield for a few moments to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. SHANKS.]

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHANKS. I hope the gentleman will not limit me as to time.

Mr. WINDOM. I have not much time left of the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can yield indefinitely, and resume the floor when he pleases.

Mr. WINDOM. I will yield to the gentleman for ten minutes.

Mr. SHANKS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the House for a few moments to the facts of this case. Under the provisions of the forty-ninth and fiftieth articles of the treaty of April 28, 1866, between the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians and the United States, it was provided that there should be appointed by the President a commission whose duty it should be to investigate, by taking testimony, and determine the amount of damages done to the loyal Choctaws and loyal Chickasaws by the disloyal Choctaws and disloyal Chickasaws during the late rebellion. When I say "loyal Choctaws and loyal Chickasaws" I speak of the relation which individual members of these nations bore to this Government. The Choctaw and Chickasaw nations were both disloyal, and as such gave all the assistance in their power to the confederacy; but a portion of the people of both nations decided to stand by the Government. For this they were oppressed by those two nations; their property was seized and sold; and in the case of the Chickasaws especially, was put into the Treasury and the money arising from the sale of the property was used to carry on the rebellion. The commissioners appointed under the provisions of the treaty took testimony in both those nations after giving due notice, and they have rendered their awards to the Secretary of the Interior. The amount found to be due by the Choctaw government to the loyal Choctaws was $109,742 08. That award was filed with the Secretary of the Interior; but for some reason not known to myself and not known to the world he has seen fit to decide that the award was too high, and that he would not confirm it.

The provision of the treaty is that the award shall only become final when it has been confirmed by the Secretary of the Interior. The further provision was that interest should be charged from the time the injuries had been done, which would amount to $34,020 14 from June 28, 1863, to June 28, 1868. The amount due to the loyal Choctaws would be, principal and interest, $143,762 22. But when the Secretary of the Interior decided not to confirm that award he carried his proposition further. He had no power to change the award, but he suggested—mark you, he suggested—to these parties that they should make a compromise. A decision had been rendered and an award brought in after the taking of sworn testimony; but the Secretary suggested that there should be a subsequent agreement made between these parties, and there has been between the agents of these Indians, not the Indians themselves. There was, in the first instance, a solemn treaty between the Government and these Indians in relation to this money; and an award was made in accordance with that treaty; but now the Secretary of the Interior suggests that the agents of those parties shall, forsooth, make another agreement, which he proposes to confirm. Now, I take it that these parties have no power to make that agreement. They have no power to depart from the provisions of that treaty and change the award which has been made. The Secretary of the Interior has no such power. But how is it proposed to change the award? In the case of the Choctaws it is proposed to strike off the interest, amounting to $34,020 14. In the case of the Chickasaws the amount found to be due by the award was $234,000, the interest upon that amount from August 1, 1862, being $88,070. It is proposed not only to strike off this interest, but also to deduct $84,000 of the principal.

Now, I want to call the further attention of the House to the facts of this case. These loyal men have been robbed. The Government has provided in its treaty that they shall be reimbursed by the people who have wronged them. Yet these agents propose now to reduce the award which has been made by making a deduction in the aggregate of $201,090 14. That is the form in which the matter now comes before the House; and the Secretary of the Interior finds it to be convenient to recommend the approval of this scheme, by which it is proposed to strike off nearly one half the amount found to be due to these loyal Indians.

A MEMBER. One half?

Mr. SHANKS. Yes, sir; nearly one half is stricken off.

I here speak for the loyal Indians. I speak for the loyal Indians, who sacrificed their property in the war rather than be false to the Government. I wish to protect them against a combination—I believe that it is a combination against them—to take from them $84,000, besides the interest in each case, in all $201,090 14.

Mr. STEVENS, of New Hampshire. I desire to ask the gentleman if there was any evidence before the committee that the agents or attorneys of these loyal Indians were authorized to compromise this claim by reducing the amount of the award?

Mr. SHANKS. Not that I am aware of; there was none. I have filed a minority report, in which I have set forth the facts in reference to these claims. These commissioners were to report to the Secretary of the Interior their award. That was as far as they could go.

I am asked to state the reasons assigned by the Secretary of the Interior for not having the award of the commission. The only reason assigned was that there were parties here from these Indian nations who opposed it.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. Speaker, I should be glad, if it were possible, to carry out the views of the gentleman from Indiana. I think these loyal Indians will not thank him for acting as their friend here. They have been here for two years trying to get their claims adjusted, and they have been unable to do so. They have had their attorney here for two years. They have been unable to get a bill through Congress, and they have been unable to get the award ratified. If the over-zealous friendship of the gentleman from Indiana succeeds in carrying the House with him they will have to wait and wander up and down here for years longer. I believe when this commission went to take proof in reference to these Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians they had no attorney to resist, and this deduction is perhaps not more than ought to be made.

Mr. SHANKS. The gentleman is in error.

Mr. WINDOM. I am not.

Mr. SHANKS. The attorney for the loyal Indians, General Blunt, told me that they had an attorney, and the papers so show it, who cross-examined the witnesses. The testimony is on file in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, and shows the facts. The Choctaw nation had three attorneys and the Chickasaw nation one.

Mr. WINDOM. I am informed by the agent who acted for the loyal Indians that they did not have. The Choctaws did have an agent to resist this, but the Chickasaws did not. I hope the House will not follow the advice of the gentleman from Indiana, and leave these men to suffer for years longer simply on account of his over-zealous friendship for them. If the gentleman will offer an amendment, and the House will adopt it, requiring the Secretary of the Interior to pay the whole amount awarded, I will have no objection; only if that be done this will be the result: the treaty which authorized the commission to go out and make the award also provided that it shall only be paid upon the ratification of the Secretary of the Interior. If you declare for the whole amount he will not ratify the award. I prefer, therefore, they shall have this amount which they have agreed to accept than go without anything at all.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. Have these loyal Indians, by agents or otherwise, agreed to the deductions which have been made?

Mr. WINDOM. They have.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. By what authority?

Mr. WINDOM. By their attorney, who has been here for two years.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. Did I understand the gentleman from Indiana to say that the agent receives fifty per cent. of the amount of deduction?

Mr. WINDOM. If the gentleman says so he knows more than I do. I do not know what percentage is received.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. What agent receives fifty per cent. of this deduction?

Mr. SHANKS. The agent of the disloyal Indians. They give fifty per cent. on every dollar the agent gets.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. There seems to be a question between the gentlemen, and I wish to know which is right. The gentleman from Minnesota says the loyal Indians by their attorney, have consented to this deduction.

Mr. SHANKS. They have not.

Mr. WINDOM. There are several hundred, and they all may not have done so, but their agent agrees to this deduction.

Mr. SHANKS. I do not deny these Indians may have some agent outside, but I am not in favor of it.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. Will the gentleman allow me another question?

Mr. WINDOM. I will yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHANKS] to make a motion that they be paid the whole amount. I desire to make a further statement, however, on the subject.

Mr. SHANKS. I move to amend by increasing the amount payable by the Chickasaws to $231,000. That is the amount of the principal. I leave the interest off in both cases.

The SPEAKER. That amendment will be regarded as pending.

Mr. PETERS. I desire to say a word.

Mr. WINDOM. I yield three minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. PETERS. I have taken an interest in this matter because I have long known the agent of the loyal Choctaws and Chickasaws. I refer to General Blunt, of Maine, a man who helped to fight our battles in Arkansas and in the southwest. All these loyal Indians were in his army; they were, as it were, children of his. They fled from persecution; they were driven from their homes, their houses were burned over their heads, and their property confiscated. When the new treaty was to be made he came here and befriended them. He knows them personally, their wants, and their condition. They have unlimited confidence in his integrity, as have I and every other man who knows him. He was anxious that there should be a clause in that treaty by which these men should be protected. He has a power of attorney from these men to look to their interest. He has been here two years acting in their behalf. He has been unable to have his action confirmed by the Department. They have made motions for a new trial and for reopenings, have brought witnesses and taken testimony, and there seems to be no end to the delay. Now, he understanding it all, and having the interest of these loyal Choctaws and Chickasaws intrusted to him, and having full power to act on their behalf, has made this compromise. Ay, sir, he has made it upon the belief that there must be a reduction in a part of the claim. Upon looking over all the legal evidence he has come to the conclusion that there would be a reduction, and that it was to the interest of these people to take what they can get and as quick as they can get it, and have an end to the matter. They have been waiting here two years, and may wait twenty before they can get it all. I appreciate the motive of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. SHANKS.] He not only favors the bill, but he wants to go further in the same direction. But, sir, his efforts will not subserve their interest, and I feel sure it will be an injury.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WINDOM. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. I cannot in the time allowed me by the chairman of the committee discuss this question as I would like to. Many circumstances connected with the exodus of the loyal Indians from the Indian territory into Kansas are known to me personally. Sir, one of the most affecting sights my eyes ever beheld was that of one thousand one hundred women and children of those loyal Indians who fled into Kansas during the progress of the rebellion in a state of destitution and suffering such as I trust I shall never witness again. If I had time I could read from documents, contained in the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs of 1862, facts related by responsible parties, which would not only excite sympathy, but which would compel, it seems to me, every member of this House to do this simple act of justice to the loyal Choctaws and Chickasaws included in the provisions of this bill. I have here letters from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs at that time; also, a letter from Surgeon A. B. Campbell, addressed to the Surgeon General of the United States, an extract from which I will read. Speaking of the condition of these loyal Indians he says:

"They are extremely destitute of cooking utensils, and axes or hatchets; many can with difficulty get wood to make fires, either to warm themselves or to cook with, which, together with the want of cooking utensils, compels many of them to eat their provisions raw. They greatly need medical assistance; many have their toes frozen off, others have feet wounded by sharp ice or branches of trees lying on the snow; but few have shoes or moccasins. They suffer with inflammatory diseases of the chest, throat, and eyes. Those who come in last get sick as soon as they eat. Means should be taken at once to have the horses which lie dead in every direction, through the camp and on the side of the river, removed and burned, lest the first few warm days breed a pestilence among them. Why the officers of the Indian department are not doing something for them I cannot understand; common humanity demands that more should be done, and done at once, to save them from total destruction."

There is also a letter here written by Hon. George W. Collamore, formerly of Boston, and who, I doubt not, was well known to some of the honorable members from Massachusetts. At the time of the celebrated Lawrence massacre he was mayor of that city, and was murdered by Quantrell's band. I ask attention to the following extract from his letter, giving a minute description of the condition of these Indians from his own personal observation:

"In company with Dr. Coffin I visited nearly fifty patients in one afternoon. Not a few he pronounced incurable, their diseases being consumption and pneumonia, brought on from exposure and privations of the common necessities of life. Dr. George A. Culter, agent of the Creeks, informed me that in two months two hundred and forty refugees of that nation had died. Those of other tribes suffered in like degree. Dr. Coffin informed me that upwards of one hundred amputations of frost-bitten limbs had taken place. Among them I saw a little Creek boy, about eight years old, with both feet taken off near the ankles; others lying upon the ground whose frost-bitten limbs rendered them unable to move about. Five persons in a similar situation the physician pronounced past recovery. Sickness among them on account of their exposure and lack of proper food was on the increase. The following day I visited almost every lodge of several of the largest tribes, and found the same destitution and suffering among them. A cold drenching rain fell on the last day of the visit, and for eight hours I went from lodge to lodge and tribe to tribe, and the suffering of the well, to say nothing of the sick, is beyond description. Their numbers, as ascertained, are as follows: Creeks, 5,000; Seminoles, 1,096; Chickasaws, 140; Quapaws, 315; Uchees, 544; Keesies, 83; Delawares, 197; Ironeyes, 17; Caddoes, 3; Wichita, 5; Cherokees, 240—making an aggregate of 7,000 persons."

I have no hesitation in saying that if the true history of the retreat of these Indians into Kansas in the midst of winter could be written it would present one of the most graphic pictures of the great rebellion that could be shown during the whole of that strife.

In addition I will say this only: this case is a very simple one. These loyal Indians were driven out of the Indian territory, and their property taken and destroyed or confiscated. And what this bill asks is that they shall be remunerated for this property so taken and destroyed or confiscated by the governments of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations. The representatives of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations, under the instructions of their Legislature, have been here in Washington for more than two years resisting the claims of these loyal Indians. But at last this compromise has been effected.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WINDOM. I now call the previous question on the bill and pending amendment.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. WINDOM. I move that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. BECK: The petition of Coleman Short, of Harrodsburg, Mercer county, Kentucky, for a pension as a soldier in the war of 1812.

By Mr. ELA: The petition of Lemuel Worster, of Lebanon, Maine, for a pension, from 1858, when an act of Congress passed both Houses for his relief, but failed to reach the President.

By Mr. PAINE: A memorial of millers of Milwaukee, against taxation of breadstuffs.

By Mr. SCHENCK: A remonstrance of the manufacturers of flour of Montgomery county, Ohio, against tax of two dollars on manufacture of flour in addition to a tax of ten per cent. on sales.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, July 9, 1868.

Prayer by Rev. E. H. GRAY, D. D.

On motion of Mr. HARLAN, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Interior, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 8th instant, information in relation to the public buildings at Santa Fé, New Mexico; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented papers in relation to the claim of Miss Sue Murphy, for compensation for damages done her farm by reason of the same being occupied for military purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HARLAN presented resolutions of the Legislature of Iowa, in favor of the passage of an act declaring the Iowa river not navigable from the city of Wapello, in Louisa county, north; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MORTON presented a petition of citizens of Indiana, praying for an appropriation for the improvement of the St. Mary's river and the St. Mary's ship-canal; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. NYE presented a report of the directors of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company for the year 1867; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HARLAN, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 631) amendatory of an act approved July 20, 1866, entitled "An act to authorize the construction of certain bridges, and to establish them as post roads," reported it without amendment.

Mr. WILLEY, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 231) for the relief of Dr. John Templeton, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 257) for the relief of Clement T. Rice and Chauncey N. Noteware, late registers and receivers at Carson City, Nevada, reported adversely thereon.

Mr. HOWARD, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Valentine H. Voorhees, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 72) for the relief of John M. Broome and others, the band of the twelfth Kentucky infantry, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1099) for the relief of Wait Talcott, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 565) to authorize the Secretary of State to adjust the claim of Gustavus G. Cushman for office rent, while commissioner under the reciprocity treaty, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1275) relating to the Alexandria canal, reported it with amendments.

Mr. DRAKE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R.

No. 941) to amend certain acts in relation to the Navy and Marine corps, reported it with amendments.

Mr. VAN WINKLE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment:

A bill (H. R. No. 1179) granting a pension to Mary A. Falardo, widow of Onesimus Falardo, deceased, late a private in company K, of the twelfth regiment of New York volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 1180) granting a pension to Phoebe McBride, mother of Thomas McBride, deceased, late a private in company B, of the eighty-seventh regiment of Illinois volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 1181) granting a pension to Harriet E. Shears, widow of John T. Shears, deceased, late a private in company H, of the fifty-seventh regiment of Illinois volunteer infantry;

A bill (H. R. No. 1182) granting a pension to William H. Blair, late a private in company G, of the twelfth regiment of Maine volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 1183) granting a pension to Christopher M. Cornmesser, late a private in the independent Iowa home guards;

A bill (H. R. No. 945) to place the name of Ellen Curry, widow of James Curry, deceased, a private soldier in company F, thirty-ninth regiment Illinois volunteers, upon the pension-roll of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 1220) granting a pension to Kate Higgins; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1221) granting a pension to Sarah J. Rogers.

Mr. Tipton, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 379) to establish a new land district in the State of Nebraska, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 349) granting aid in the construction of a railroad from the town of Vallejo to Humboldt bay, in the State of California, reported it with amendments.

BILL RECOMMENDED.

On motion by Mr. STEWART, it was Ordered, That the bill (S. No. 356) for the relief of Messrs. Gelott and Moore be recommitted to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HARLAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 605) to declare a part of the Iowa river not a navigable stream; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FOWLER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 606) granting a pension to Robert Watson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. NYE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 607) to amend an act incorporating the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ROSS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 156) authorizing the appointment of commissioners to examine the claims of citizens of Douglas, Johnson, and Miami counties, Kansas, for spoiliations committed in what is known as the Quantrell raid in August, 1863; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, and ordered to be printed.

FOURTEENTH CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

Mr. EDMUNDS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, requested to communicate to the Senate, without delay, a list of the States of the Union whose Legislatures have ratified the fourteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States, with copies of all the resolutions of ratification in his office.

And resolved further, That he communicate to the Senate copies of all resolutions of ratification of said amendment which he may hereafter receive as soon as he shall receive the same, respectively.

MIDWAY ISLANDS.

Mr. DRAKE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to communicate to the Senate all information in the Navy Department in relation to the discovery, occupation, and character of the Midway Islands in the Pacific ocean.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 1353) for the removal of certain disabilities from the persons therein named:

A bill (H. R. No. 1375) to transfer to the Department of the Interior certain powers and duties now exercised by the Secretary of the Treasury in connection with Indian affairs; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 327) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to remit the duty on certain meridian circles.

IMPROVEMENT OF MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. POMEROY. I ask leave to withdraw a motion that I made the other morning to reconsider the vote on the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 554) making a grant of land to the State of Minnesota to aid in the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi river. I thought, at the suggestion of several Senators, that there was a mistake about it, and I made a motion to reconsider that I might look into it. I am satisfied by the map which I hold in my hand, made by General Warren, and from a further investigation, that the bill was right and ought to have passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider will be withdrawn if there be no objection. No objection being made, it is withdrawn.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolution, received from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

A bill (H. R. No. 1353) for the removal of certain disabilities from the persons therein named—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (H. R. No. 1375) to transfer to the Department of the Interior certain powers and duties now exercised by the Secretary of the Treasury in connection with Indian affairs—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 327) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to remit the duty on certain meridian circles—to the Committee on Finance.

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I ask permission to make a report from a conference committee. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain pensions, submit twenty-two reports. I will state that the committee was full on both sides, and there was a perfect agreement between them. There is nothing to be submitted to the Senate but the mere question of adopting the reports, and perhaps it may be done by one vote to save time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia moves that the Senate concur in these reports. They are pension bills on which there is no disagreement, and they may be taken separately or collectively. How shall it be done? ["All together."] The question is on concurring in the reports of the committee of conference on these various pension bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The following are the bills covered by the reports of the committee of conference:

A bill (H. R. No. 273) to place the name of Mahala A. Straight upon the pension-roll of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 456) granting a pension to the minor children of Pleasant Stoops;

A bill (H. R. No. 518) granting a pension to George F. Gorham, late a private in company B, twenty-ninth regiment Massachusetts volunteer infantry;

A bill (H. R. No. 521) to place the name of Solomon Zachman on the pension-roll;

A bill (H. R. No. 522) granting a pension to W. W. Cunningham;

A bill (H. R. No. 525) granting a pension to Jeremiah T. Hallett;

A bill (H. R. No. 661) granting a pension to the widow and minor children of William Craft;

A bill (H. R. No. 662) granting a pension to the widow and minor children of George R. Waters;

A bill (H. R. No. 663) granting a pension to Cyrus K. Wood, the legal representative of Cyrus D. Wood;

A bill (H. R. No. 664) granting a pension to the minor children of Charles Gouler;

A bill (H. R. No. 666) granting a pension to Henry H. Hunter;

A bill (H. R. No. 669) granting a pension to the widow and minor children of Myron Willkow;

A bill (H. R. No. 670) granting a pension to the widow and children of Andrew Holman;

A bill (H. R. No. 672) granting a pension to the widow and minor children of Charles W. Wilcox;

A bill (H. R. No. 673) granting a pension to the widow and minor children of John S. Phelps;

A bill (H. R. No. 675) granting a pension to the widow and minor children of Cornelius L. Rice;

A bill (H. R. No. 676) granting a pension to Thomas Connolly;

A bill (H. R. No. 677) granting a pension to the minor children of James Heatherly;

A bill (H. R. No. 770) granting a pension to John H. Finlay;

A bill (H. R. No. 771) granting a pension to John H. Lay;

A bill (H. R. No. 773) granting a pension to William H. McDonald; and

A bill (H. R. No. 825) granting a pension to John W. Hughes.

TEMPORARY LOAN CERTIFICATES.

Mr. CATTELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 543.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 543) to provide for a further issue of temporary loan certificates for the purpose of redeeming and retiring the remainder of the outstanding compound-interest notes was considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. For the purpose of redeeming and retiring the remainder of the compound-interest notes outstanding, the bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to issue an additional amount of temporary loan certificates, not exceeding $25,000,000; such certificates to bear interest at the rate of three per cent. per annum, principal and interest payable in lawful money on demand, and to be similar in all respects to the certificates authorized by the act entitled "An act to provide ways and means for the payment of compound-interest notes," approved March 2, 1867; and the certificates may constitute and be held by any national bank holding or owning the same as a part of the reserve, in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 2, 1867.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I ask for the reading of that bill. It is a very important bill to be considered in the morning hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will not be heard. I do not suppose a member of the Senate has heard it read.

Mr. EDMUNDS: I heard it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I want to hear it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless order can be preserved, there is no use of reading bills or anything else.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. CONKLING. In addition to hearing the bill read, I should like to hear from the Senator who has it in charge some statement or information in regard to it.

Mr. CATTELL. The statement in regard to the bill is a very simple one; it can be made in a very few words. There are now outstanding about thirty millions of compound-interest notes, all of which will mature prior to the 15th of the coming October, and of course must be paid by the Government, as they are obligations falling due. The Secretary of the Treasury is of opinion that the Treasury is not in a condition to pay out of its own resources this amount in addition to the current expenses of the Government, and the necessary amount to be laid aside for the sinking fund in accordance with law. It is evident, therefore, that some provision of law must be made to take care of the obligations of the Government falling due, and necessarily to be paid.

At the last session of Congress there were some eighty millions of these notes outstanding, and upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury the Finance Committee unanimously recommended the passage of a law issuing these temporary certificates to the amount of $50,000,000, which would cover the sum falling due up to the meeting of the present Congress. The Secretary of the Treasury at that time recommended the issue of these certificates to the extent of $100,000,000, for the purpose of redeeming the whole of these notes. There are now $30,000,000 outstanding, and the Finance Committee, in considering the subject, have unanimously arrived at the conclusion that the simplest, cheapest, and easiest form of meeting this indebtedness is in the way of these temporary loan certificates at three per cent. I hold in my hand a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, to whom this bill was sent, and whose opinion was asked upon it by the Finance Committee. He says:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 18, 1868.

DEAR SIR: I have merely time to acknowledge the receipt of your favor of the 17th instant, and to say that Senate bill 543, to provide for a further issue of temporary loan certificates, &c., has my hearty approval.

Very truly yours,

H. McCULLOCH,

Secretary.

Hon. A. G. CATTELL, United States Senate.

It is the cheapest form of loan, Mr. President, that the Government now has, and it is a loan which in my judgment, being held as a portion of the reserves of the banks, may be continued during the whole time of the existence of those bank charters, if the Government shall so desire—a loan at three per cent. in currency; the cheapest and most desirable loan, in my judgment, which the Government can possibly have. I have also inquired of the Comptroller of the Currency in regard to this loan in its relations to the banking institutions, and I hold in my hand a letter from him on the subject, which I beg permission to read to the Senate.

Mr. Hulburt replies to a note I addressed him, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY,
WASHINGTON, June 26, 1868.

DEAR SIR: I am just in receipt of a copy of the bill introduced by you June 13, "to provide for a further issue of temporary loan certificates," &c.

I am glad to see this action on your part, and hope you will succeed in getting it through the Senate. When the act of March 7, 1867, was introduced, which provided for the issue of $100,000,000 of three per cent. certificates, it was cut down by a committee of conference of the two Houses to one half the original amount. I was then, and am still, of the opinion that the national banks of the country could carry with ease $100,000,000 of these certificates, and would be glad to do it probably for the whole duration of their corporate existence. I should regard the loan as quite as permanent as if it were made redeemable in twenty years, and as advantageous and affording a most valuable reserve to the banking interests of the country.

I notice that your bill contemplates the issue of $25,000,000. I hope the Senate will increase the amount to $50,000,000, as I have no doubt that amount would be readily taken, and that it would prove the cheapest loan ever made by the Government.

Very respectfully, yours,

H. R. HULBURT,

Comptroller.

Hon. A. G. CATTELL, United States Senate.

I will only add that this measure received the hearty assent of every member of the Finance Committee; and the distinguished Senator from Maine, [Mr. FESSENDEN,] who was at the head of the Finance Committee at the last session, approved and advocated the bill for the issue of $50,000,000 then, as I understand he does the issue of the present $25,000,000.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I was not aware that so important a bill as this was to be called up this morning, and am not prepared with facts and figures this morning to present my objections to it. I hope, therefore, that it will go over. I will state in a word, what my objections is, and I wish to refer to the documents to show exactly the basis upon which my opposition to such a bill as this rests.

We have had in the Treasury of the United States for some two years—and it is to get the precise facts that I prefer the bill should go over—some seventy-five or one hundred millions in gold lying idle. I made an effort in this body a year ago, perhaps more, to have some scheme adopted by which this gold lying idle while the Government of the United States is paying interest upon its indebtedness should be taken from the Treasury. At that time I was met by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] with the statement that all the gold we had would soon be needed to pay interest and maturing obligations of the United States; that there would be no surplus. A reference to his remarks at that time will show that his opposition to any scheme to deplete the Treasury of this amount of gold was based upon a statement that all the receipts from duties in gold would be required to meet the obligations of the United States which had to be paid in gold. Now, a year has transpired. We find that in the statement made at the time the Senator from Ohio was mistaken.

Now, I wish to ask the Senate, and I wish it to go to the country, to know why it is that the Government of the United States has lying idle in its Treasury, year after year, seventy-five to one hundred million dollars in gold, worth in paper from one hundred and twenty-five to one hundred and fifty millions, and at the same time we are paying interest at six per cent. in gold upon bonds that this gold would take up at any time. I am sure that such management cannot be justified.

Mr. CONKLING. Without some explanation.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Without some explanation, certainly, and I do not know what explanation there can be. I cannot conceive how it can be possible that a business man who owed large debts amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars should retain in his vaults, useless, a twentieth part of all he owed. If a man owed $20,000, and kept lying in his vaults year after year $1,000 in money, paying interest upon what he owed, we would think that he was a very bad manager. Now, here is a proposition, when our bonds are falling due—

Mr. CATTELL. Will the Senator allow me to say a word right here?

Mr. TRUMBULL. Certainly.

Mr. CATTELL. Would it not be better to let this bill pass now, and make a loan of three per cent., and then use the money in the Treasury, if the Senator from Illinois can bring the Senate to a realization of his views on the subject for the retirement of the six per cents.? Would there not be good policy in that, I inquire?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I apprehend not. I apprehend it is bad policy to borrow money to pay an obligation when you have the money in your vaults ready to pay. I suppose you can pay it at three per cent. Use your gold to pay it off, and your gold will command a premium. These compound-interest notes are not payable in specie. I think it is miserable policy to be borrowing money. But, Mr. President, there is another serious objection. We have been discussing here in this body for the last two or three days whisky frauds. We have been talking about the demoralization that exists throughout the land in the revenue department. What so well calculated to produce demoralization in all the departments of this Government as to allow $100,000,000 of money to lie idle year after year in the vaults of your Treasury, subject to be used by the officers having charge of it? I do not say that it is used; I do not intimate that it has been used; but I say that it is there where it might be used by dishonest men; and I say, as I said a year ago, it is dangerous to the liberties of any people to hoard up millions and tens of millions of money in the hands of any individuals. Certainly the Committee on Finance can find some way to dispose of this gold in the Treasury; and when our debts fall due can make use of it to pay them rather than borrow again for the purpose of paying them. But, in order to present my views upon this subject, I wish to have the precise figures, and I wish to read to the Senate the remarks of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SHERMAN. I can give the Senator the precise amount of gold.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I want to read for the benefit of the Senate and the country the reasons which were given why no action could be taken a year ago to deplete the Treasury of this gold. If those reasons were unsound, I trust that they will not be adhered to by the Senator from Ohio. I hope this important measure may go over until to-morrow with a view of affording an opportunity of inquiring into the subject; and I make that motion that the pending proposition be postponed until to-morrow with a view of taking up the measure which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARLAN] has particularly in charge in regard to the bridge at Rock Island.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have but a few words to say in reply to the Senator from Illinois. If the Senator really desires time to look into this measure presented by the Senator from New Jersey, I certainly will give him the opportunity, if the Senator from New Jersey consents. This three per cent. certificate bill has been pending for a month or two, and it seems to me a very simple measure. It substitutes a three per cent. certificate payable principal and interest in lawful money, for a compound-interest note that must be paid. There are but two modes of paying the compound-interest notes. There is no surplus revenue to pay them, and the only mode now provided by law will be by the sale of bonds; and the Committee on Finance, as a matter of course, are unanimously of the opinion that it is better for the Government to use these three per cent. demand certificates rather than to issue bonds.

The question now raised by the Senator from Illinois for about the tenth time is, whether or not the Government of the United States ought to sell the gold on hand. That is an independent question. We can use that gold either in the purchase of bonds or in the payment of debts; but it has been the general opinion among the wisest men of this country that it was important to maintain in the Treasury this large reserve in gold, now about seventy millions, varying from seventy to one hundred millions. That is a question in no way connected with these three per cent. certificates. If Congress directs the sale of this gold, or the application of this gold to the payment of the national debt, it can be very easily disposed of; but such is not the opinion of the Committee on Finance. They think it would be better to keep the gold in the Treasury, where it is perfectly safe, where it cannot be used, to keep it as the great safety-valve, I may say, the power the United States hold over gold gamblers. But for that large mass of gold in the Treasury the fluctuations of gold would be very great indeed. I have no doubt that that amount of gold in the Treasury, by maintaining at a pretty nearly equal balance the present price of gold, has prevented fluctuations that would be very injurious to the people of the United States.

But certainly it is not worth while to discuss that question on this bill. The Senator from Illinois, who seems to be troubled about this gold, drags it in in regard to every proposition. If he will introduce a proposition directing the Secretary of the Treasury to sell this gold, and will have it referred in the ordinary way, I promise him that a report shall be made promptly upon the subject, and then the Senate may do what they please in regard to the disposition of this gold. But whenever a collateral measure is brought up he seeks to bring forward this discussion about the gold. If the Senator will introduce a joint resolution directing the sale of this gold and refer it to the Finance Committee, I promise him that at the very next session a report shall be made, and the opinion of the Senate may be taken as soon as possible on the question of the policy of selling the gold. That has nothing to do with the temporary provision for the payment of compound-interest notes, unless the Senator desires to present the question that the gold shall be sold to redeem the compound-interest notes. If so, he can do it in the form of an amendment, and then the sense of the Senate can be taken on the question of the sale of gold on hand.

I have nothing to say in regard to the postponement. I leave that entirely to the Senator from New Jersey. This bill has been pending a month or two, and it is very important that it should be acted on at an early day. I do not want to interfere with the management of the bill.

Mr. COLE. Mr. President, I have some objections to this measure. I believe it to be another plan for drawing more interest from the Treasury. The idea of asking for this addition to the three per cent. certificates is in order that they may be used by the national banks as a part of their reserve, instead of non-interest-bearing United States notes or greenbacks. That I believe to be the object aimed at. It is therefore a plan for the benefit and the profit of the national banks. They seem to be unwilling to have any form of securities or money that is not producing some revenue in the form of interest to be drawn out of the United States Treasury. Their bonds that are left on deposit draw interest in greenbacks at the rate of about seven and forty hundredths per cent. Their loans draw interest. A part of their reserve fund draws interest. But as there are not enough three per cent. certificates to supply all of the reserve fund at present, this proposition goes to the extent of asking for the privilege of issuing more three per cent. certificates; in order that all this reserve fund may draw some interest as well. I am, therefore, opposed to the measure. If these compound-interest notes have ceased to bear interest, let them remain in that condition until we can make some disposition of them. I do not think it absolutely necessary that we should supply their places by issuing these three per cent. certificates.

Mr. CATTELL. Ordinarily I would not object to a postponement of this bill at the request of a Senator; but really I cannot see that there is any relevancy in the point made by the Senator from Illinois in regard to this bill. The chairman of the Finance Committee has sufficiently explained that that is an entirely different question. I ask again whether it would not be infinitely better for the Government of the United States, if they are disposed to sell this gold, to redeem the obligations upon which they are paying six per cent. interest, and then obtain this $25,000,000 at three per cent. currency? I think that is the simplest proposition that can be submitted to anybody, that they will take $25,000,000 at three per cent., and then, if the views entertained by the Senator from Illinois should prevail, and the Congress of the United States should determine that there is too much gold in the Treasury, and should direct it to be sold in any form, the outstanding obligations of the United States, upon which we are paying six per cent. in gold, could be redeemed therefrom. I hope the Senator from Illinois will withdraw his objection and allow this bill to be disposed of. It is near the close of the session, and it must go to the House of Representatives. It has been upon our tables for nearly a month, and I trust the Senate will finish it this morning.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Mr. President, I will not undertake to combat the ideas of my friend from Illinois with regard to the gold in the Treasury. I leave that entirely to the Finance Committee. But I really hope that this bill will be acted upon now and passed, simply because I wish to save the credit of the Government, without exposing the Government to any extra and unnecessary effort to get funds for a purpose which must be accomplished.

The Senator from California says, if these notes have become payable, or are about to become payable, and the interest on them has ceased, all we have got to do is to let them lie until we can conveniently pay them. That applies to the public debt. That is repudiation; that is bankruptcy—nothing more nor less. These obligations become due at a certain date. We have promised to pay them at that date with interest accumulated upon them. But says the Senator from California, "It is not convenient to pay them; let them lie;" thus having $30,000,000 more of this paper out, not taken up by the Government.

Now, I want to say to my honorable friend that doctrine will not do. We must pay them in some way or other, and we must pay them when they become payable, because they were not issued as currency at all. We do not propose to pay them by issuing more six per cent. gold-bearing bonds, or bonds with gold interest. Therefore I cannot consent with him, if these $30,000,000 become payable, to let them lie, and simply say, "It is not convenient to pay them." That will not do for the Government of the country.

Mr. COLE. I need hardly remind the honorable Senator from Maine that we owe a great deal of indebtedness that we are utterly unable to pay. We are able to pay only a very small proportion of what we owe, at best.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We pay every dollar that is payable—everything except the notes which are issued as currency. Everything else we meet. But the Senator's proposition is to let our obligations to a large amount lie and take no notice of them, pay neither principal nor interest. That is what my friend says. I say to him again that that will not do. No Government on the face of the earth can deal upon those principles with its creditors. We must pay them in some way or other. Now, the question is, how? The Secretary of the Treasury says he will not have funds to meet the ordinary expenses of the Government and at the same time to pay $30,000,000 out of the Treasury for the redemption of this paper. What, then, will you do? Will you borrow more money by the issuing of more six per cent. bonds? We shall have to do that if we cannot do any better. But what is this proposition? This proposition is simply to issue a quantity of paper, $25,000,000, bearing three per cent. currency interest, which is sight paper, which may be taken up at any time. How much have you heard in this Hall about the necessity of reducing our interest? Is there any Senator in this Hall who does not recognize that necessity? If he does, here is an opportunity. I wish we could put the whole of our debt in the same condition and let it run at three per cent.

If the banks are willing to take $25,000,000 more and hold it as part of their reserve, why not allow them to do so? The Senator says it will liberate so much of these United States notes. What if it does? It does not take them out of circulation because they cannot be taken out of circulation by law. He must keep $360,000,000, as the law stands, in circulation. They cannot be retired.

Mr. CATTELL. They are virtually out of circulation when they are held as a reserve in the banks.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I suppose they are. They are now used as a reserve; but suppose the banks put them out and substitute these $25,000,000 for them, what then? They come into circulation, do they not? Then they come to the Treasury, and the Treasury must do what with them? It cannot retire them; the law prohibits it. It must put them out again. May they not as well be in the circulation of the country as in the vaults of the banks? I do not appreciate the force of that argument.

Then this is nothing but a simple proposition, and a very plain one, to pay off a six per cent. note which we must pay with a three per cent. note payable in currency. If that does not recommend itself to the common sense of everybody it is very strange to me. I was very glad when this bill was brought in increasing the amount of three per cent. certificates, and I hope the Senate will pass it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am a little surprised that a bill of this kind should be called up and its passage insisted upon in the morning hour, when a Senator asks to have it go over until to-morrow. The Committee on Finance are unanimous, it is said. They have been pursuing this policy for some years; and I am reminded by the Senator from Ohio that for the tenth time I have objected to retaining this amount of gold in the Treasury. I wish to show that the reasons that he gave for retaining the gold in the Treasury have proved by the lapse of time not to be well founded. I think, instead of its being such a plain proposition that we should issue notes bearing three per cent. interest, and take up those that are bearing six or more, that it is an equally plain proposition that when we have got the money we should pay off our indebtedness as it falls due, and not pay either three per cent. interest or any other rate of percentage, and that it would be a much wiser policy to sell some of this gold and pay these compound-interest notes than to issue another species of indebtedness in lieu of them. If the Finance Committee get up a loan bill by which they can reduce the rate of interest from six to three per cent. on such portions of the indebtedness as we cannot pay off, that will be very well; but it would be miserable economy, let me say to the Senator from Maine, to borrow money at three per cent. interest when we had no occasion to borrow it at all. When you have money in your vaults you do not want to pay any interest.

I trust that this bill will not be forced to a vote this morning, the first moment of its consideration, but that it will be suffered to go over. However, I will not place myself in the way of the action of the Senate by attempting to delay it unreasonably by taking up time. If the Senator from New Jersey considers it his duty to press such a bill as this to a vote in the morning hour when it is asked that it may go over until to-morrow morning, and the Senate sustain him in it, of course I have nothing to do but to submit to the decision of the Senate. I trust, however, the vote will not be taken upon it to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore put the question on the motion to postpone the bill until to-morrow, and declared that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. CATTELL. I ask for a division on that question. There were but two or three responses.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Let us have the yeas and nays, then, and see if the Senate will refuse to give a Senator an opportunity to look into the bill.

Several SENATORS. Oh, no; another division will do.

The question being again put, there were—ayes twenty-two, noes not counted.

So the motion to postpone was agreed to,

DROPPING OF ARMY OFFICERS FROM ROLLS.

Mr. WILSON. I move that the Senate take up the joint resolution (S. R. No. 151) to drop from the rolls of the Army certain officers absent without authority from their commands. It is a small matter.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It directs that the following named officers of the Army reported by the Secretary of War absent from their commands without authority, be, and they are hereby, dropped from the rolls with loss of all pay and allowances, namely, First Lieutenant D. H. Weiland, sixth infantry; First Lieutenant H. H. Lanty, fourth infantry; First Lieutenant A. J. McDonald, fifth artillery; First Lieutenant Richard Wilson, third artillery; Second Lieutenant J. W. Godman, sixth infantry; Second Lieutenant Guy Morrison, tenth infantry. This resolution is to take effect from the dates at which they absented themselves from their regiments.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am, of course, not familiar with legislation of this kind, but it seems to me singular to drop officers from the rolls without any trial. Why cannot it be done by a court-martial?

Mr. WILSON. These men cannot be found through the country. We had during the war a law that authorized the President to dismiss officers without trial from the Army; but it was thought that that was a power which ought not to exist in time of peace, and after the war it was repealed. These officers have absented themselves from the Army; in other words, deserted; they cannot be found in the country, cannot be brought to trial by court-martial, and they stand in the way of other officers; and the Secretary of War recommends this resolution as the only mode to get rid of them.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NEW LAND DISTRICT IN NEBRASKA.

Mr. THAYER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 579.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that that bill is not reported from the committee.

Mr. THAYER. It was reported this morning by my colleague.

Mr. JOHNSON. With the consent of the honorable member from Nebraska, I move that the Senate take up Senate bill No. 588.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That may be done by common consent, pending another motion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the title of the bill?

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (S. No. 588) for the relief of the Mount Vernon Ladies' Association of the Union."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being no objection, the bill is before the Senate.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Howe] has been paying some attention to this matter, and has been looking up the charter. He was here a moment ago. I think the bill ought not to be disposed of until he is in.

Mr. JOHNSON. I did not know that he had objected to the bill in any way. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. Morrill] thought the bill ought not to be passed in the shape in which it was originally presented to the Senate; but the amendment which was proposed, and which will be adopted, relieves the bill of the objections to which it was subjected before, as it is supposed. I only ask that it be taken up now because I am obliged to leave the Senate to-day.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I stated some objections that I had to the passage of the bill the other day, and in conversation with the Senator from Wisconsin, not now in his seat, but who has been here—he has probably stepped out for a moment—he informed me that he had been looking up the charter to see what the character of this association was, and I know it was his intention to present some remarks upon it when it came up. I trust the Senator will let it lie until he comes in.

Mr. JOHNSON. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The other bill, taken up on motion of the Senator from Nebraska, is before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 579) to establish a new land district in the State of Nebraska. It provides that all that portion of the Omaha land district in the State of Nebraska included within the following limits: on the east by the line dividing ranges eight and nine east; on the north by the line dividing townships twenty and twenty-one north; on the south by the south bank of the Platte river; and on the west by the west boundary of the State, shall constitute an additional land district, to be called the "Grand Island" district, the location of the office for which is to be designated by the President of the United States, and by him, from time to time, to be changed as the public interest may seem to require.

The President is authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a register and a receiver for the land district, who are to be required to reside at the site of their office, have the same powers, responsibilities, and emoluments, and be subject to the same acts and penalties which are or may be prescribed by law in relation to other land officers in the State.

The President is also authorized to cause the public lands in the district, with the exception of such as may have been or may be reserved for other purposes, to be exposed to sale in the same manner and upon the same terms and conditions as other public lands of the United States; but all sales and locations made at the office of the old district of lands situated within the limits of the new district which shall be valid and right in other respects up to the day on which the new office shall go into operation, are confirmed.

The Committee on Public Lands reported the bill with an amendment in section one, line five, after the word "ranges" to strike out the words "eight and nine" and to insert "six and seven."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate, as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERNAL TAXES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, the unfinished business of yesterday, being the bill (H. R. No. 1284) to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to amend the tax on banks, is before the Senate, the pending question being on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Pomeroy] in section one, line five, to strike out the words "fifty cents" and to insert "two dollars;" so as to read:

That there shall be levied and collected on all distilled spirits on which the tax prescribed by law has not been paid a tax of two dollars on each and every proof gallon, to be paid by the distiller, &c.

On this question the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Fowler] had the floor. He does not appear to be present.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think he wants to speak upon it.

Mr. POMEROY. I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 14, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Cole, Edmunds, Harlan, McDonald, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Nye, Osborn, Pomeroy, Ross, Thayer, Tipton, and Wade.—14.
NAYS—Messrs. Cattell, Chandler, Conkling, Cragin, Davis, Drake, Ferry, Fossenden, Fowler, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, McCreery, Morgan, Morrill of Vermont, Patterson of New Hampshire, Ramsey, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Vickers, Welch, Williams, Wilson, and Yates.—27.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Buckalew, Cameron, Conness, Corbett, Dixon, Doolittle, Frothinghuysen, Grimes, Henderson, Howe, Norton, Patterson of Tennessee, Rice, Saulsbury, Sprague, and Wiley.—17.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORTON. I move to strike out "fifty cents," in the place already referred to in the first section, and to insert "ninety cents." That, with the ten cents, I believe, provided for in the tax on the barrel, will make it a dollar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I believe this proposition meets the real opinion of most of the members of the Committee on Finance, and I therefore ask for the yeas and nays upon it. I hope they will be able to help us to carry it.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is very unjust to the Committee on Finance.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Ohio says that what I said is unjust. I did not say that I was authorized to speak for the committee. I said I believed it met the real opinion of most of the members of the Committee on Finance. I infer that, speaking of the chairman, from what he stated last night in debate and read from his former remarks, in which he insisted then, I believe, upon $1 25 as the rate.

Mr. SHERMAN. In justice to the Committee on Finance, I desire to say distinctly that this very question has been discussed in the Committee on Finance, and a very large majority of them think it wise and best to retain the tax at fifty cents. I myself have always favored the one-dollar tax; but out of deference to the arguments that have been made, especially on the subject of molasses whisky, and the impossibility of breaking up the trade in the distillation of molasses whisky by a tax at a higher rate than fifty cents, I shall vote for the fifty-cent tax, although it is against the general course I have pursued. I have generally stood for a one-dollar tax, but I shall now vote for fifty cents as being the highest rate that can be collected. However, I do not wish to speak for other Senators. They will vote according to their conscientious convictions.

Mr. MORTON. From all I know about it I think the molasses consideration is a very small one, hardly enough to sweeten the objections to this amendment. If we can collect fifty cents on the gallon we can collect ninety cents. That is such a plain proposition, I think, that we would hardly be justified in throwing away forty cents of revenue from each gallon.

Mr. MORGAN. As one member of the Committee on Finance, I wish to say that the Senator from Vermont who spoke last does not represent me.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not profess to represent anybody. I expressed it as my opinion founded on what had taken place in open Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. From the very fact that the tax is now collected by this bill at the distillery, I should favor a small tax. The distilleries are not permitted to bond their whisky; but this tax is to be paid at the distillery warehouse, as will be seen by the first section of this bill:

A tax of fifty cents on each and every proof gallon, to be paid by the distiller, owner, or person having possession thereof, before removal from distillery warehouse.

That makes it necessary, in my judgment, to have but a moderate tax. I think the Government will obtain far more by the tax of fifty cents, or sixty cents, as it is with the other charges—

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Sixty-four or sixty-five.

Mr. MORGAN. Sixty-four or sixty-five cents, than they would from a higher tax. Besides, I am sure it would be called very unjust to certain sections of the country to require them to pay a tax of a dollar a gallon without giving them the privilege of bonding. We do not propose by this bill to allow that privilege, and we therefore reduce the tax so that it will not be too great a hardship upon the distiller. Instead of increasing it to a dollar, I should be disposed rather to reduce it even below fifty cents, inasmuch as the tax is to be paid at the distillery.

I only wished to make this explanation, as I understood the Senator from Vermont to say that he believed this amendment met the views of a majority of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. EDMUNDS. "The real opinion" I said.

Mr. MORGAN. I have always understood that the bill as reported met the opinions of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. The Committee on Finance are not all Seymours. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORGAN. The bill as reported met the views of the members of the Committee on Finance, and I think it is better for their report to speak for them than it is for Senators not on the committee.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I am in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana. I differ with great reluctance from the Committee on Finance, to whom this bill was referred, but it is a subject to which I have given some little attention. While I have no doubt they have expressed their opinions fully in regard to the propriety of their course of action by their report, I entertain just as little doubt that this reduction of the tax has been brought about by the operation of distillers as I do that I am now here. I think that the reduction of this tax before the opposition that is made will have a bad effect. In the first place, it shows the weakness and impotency of the Government—a concession which, for one, I am unwilling to make. I deny that this Government, through its proper agents, is unable to collect two dollars a gallon upon every gallon of distilled spirits. To acknowledge that is to acknowledge that a band of associated distillers or a combination of thieves is stronger than the Government itself, and that in the face of the terrible frauds perpetrated upon the Government we must yield to their strength the power of the Government itself.

Sir, there has been but very little realized from this commodity to the revenue. That little was little enough; but there will be nothing now under this bill. I know that some put forth the theory that you cannot collect a tax upon a manufactured article where the tax is greater than the price of producing it; but, sir, against that theory I interpose the fact that England has done it for half a century, collecting a tax of seven shillings on the gallon.

Mr. HARLAN. Ten shillings.

Mr. NYE. Ten shillings upon a gallon, and it costs their distillers no more than it does ours; and yet they collect it. How do they collect it? They collect it by having honest, efficient, capable officers. They have reduced it to a system that defies fraudulent combinations, and their coffers are filled from this revenue.

Now, Mr. President, there are some things that we learn as well from observation as from theory. I lived in a vicinity in my early life where there were small duties collected upon every bushel of salt manufactured. They finally got it down to a penny a bushel; five cents a barrel, I think it is now, is it not?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. NYE. The penalty for not paying the duty was the forfeiture of the vehicle in which the salt was found, and there were some other penalties beside; and yet not a single season rolls around but what canal-boats are forfeited for one hundred barrels of salt, when the whole tax would not cost them five dollars. There seems to be a natural propensity to steal from the Government. No matter what tax you impose upon any article, be it great or small, it seems to be the disposition of the world to resist it, and resist it by fraudulent and dishonest means. If you cannot collect a penny on salt in the State that my honorable friend

[Mr. MORGAN] represents, how are you going to collect fifty cents upon whisky? Men are no more honest in the commodity of whisky than they are in others. That is quite apparent. The secret of our failure lies in the inefficiency of the agents we have had to collect the tax.

There are other considerations that I desire to present to the Senate on this subject; but I suppose they have all been discussed before, and I am not going to take up time. I wished to be here in time to put in my protest against the reduction of this tax. Almost every other kind of merchandise and manufacture is taxed, and the tax is honestly collected. Men in legitimate business as it is called—and I do not know but that distilling should be just as legitimate as anything else—pay their full tax. Every little box is stamped, every yard is stamped, and every article is numbered by the assessor and the tax collected. I insist upon it that the Committee on Finance made a great mistake when they yielded to the pressure of the persons who have carried on these frauds, for the purpose of making their sins lighter, though more numerous. It gives them now a right to steal four gallons where they stole but one before. I hope that this amendment of the Senator from Indiana will be adopted. It will be a burning shame if we have got to stand up here and plead our inability to collect the tax upon this commodity. Sir, if we kept the collection of this tax out of the political arena, if it had not been a struggle to steal the most from this traffic for the purpose of enhancing the prospects of political parties, instead of receiving $18,000,000 we would have had $100,000,000 in the Treasury. Reducing it is not going to take it out of that arena.

I think the tax ought to be two dollars; but as that has been voted down I shall vote for this amendment. I think it ought to be at least a dollar. I think, in justice to other trades, in justice to the dignity of this country, in justice to ourselves, we ought to impose at least a tax of one dollar a gallon upon this traffic, every gallon of which is freighted with death. If we are to tax anything, let us tax this.

Now, sir, I smoke. What reduction is there on tobacco? Nothing. There is not near as much trouble about tobacco as there is about whisky. The truth is this whisky ring has got its finger upon every interest in this country. It makes Presidents and it unmakes them. It piles up frauds mountain high, and yet you cannot get at it by the impotency that this Government has manifested in the collection of this tax.

I hope that we shall put this tax at a dollar. I trust the Committee on Finance will agree to do that. Let us put it a dollar and see to it that it is collected. It is due to the other business interests that this traffic should pay its portion. Such a tax has been adopted in other countries successfully, and can be here if persistently followed out.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I wish to present one consideration in reference to this subject which I do not think has been presented as forcibly as it might have been, although, perhaps, it would come much better from some other person. It is known to every member of the Senate that one evil of this high tax has been the demoralization, I might almost say, of the community; certainly of a very unusual number of persons in the community. It is true that such a chance will gather all the scoundrels in the country to the prey, for where the carcass is there will the eagles be gathered together; but the melancholy part of it is that so many men heretofore standing high in the regards of their fellow-citizens have yielded to this temptation. I have in my mind the case of two, who, within a few days past, have been sent to the penitentiary. I had in the course of business here in the Senate in connection with their names, a number of letters in my hands, and I saw several persons who had known them from their youth, all testifying that previous to their appointment as officers of the internal revenue their characters stood as fair as that of any person now before me; and yet, sir, they yielded. They yielded at first, I think, for the sum of $5,000 a year, and in a year or little more they had become so bold in crime that they demanded an increase of this infamous compensation. Nor did it stop there. It is evident to my mind from the facts that have been made known to me that they subsidized many of those who held office under them; so that in two cases of crime by the principal officers in the collection of the revenue, perhaps a dozen became criminal.

Now, sir, the consideration that I wish to present to the Senate, and which, as I have already stated, might come better from some other person, is that we are taught to pray "Lead us not into temptation." It is the only sentence in that admirable petition that relates to our own protection. "Lead us not into temptation." We have the further rule that we should do unto others as we would that they should do unto us.

Mr. President, I contend that there is some other object even in the passage of a tax bill than merely gathering money into the Treasury. We should always have reference to the morals, the happiness, and the permanent welfare of the community. In this case, it seems to me, that if we adopt this amendment, even in the form in which it now presents itself, we are ignoring that petition which all are commanded to use.

I am aware that by reducing the tax from two dollars to one dollar a portion of the temptation is taken away. But I have been of opinion for two or more years past that this tax ought to be reduced to fifty cents or less. I was afraid that there was almost too much temptation even in a tax of fifty cents. I am sure that the difference between the cost of this commodity and one dollar still affords a very broad temptation, which will be acted on. It is no use to talk of laws as certain prevention of crime. It is no satisfaction to punish these poor men of whom I have spoken. If we could have restrained them from the commission of their offenses, it would have been something to be proud of. But it is but a very sorry satisfaction to know that these men, in the prime of life, are now expiating their offenses in the penitentiary.

However feeble an advocate of this Christian principle is before you, and although, as I have already said, not being a professing member of any Christian church, I do not feel that it comes best from me, still I hope it will be taken into consideration, and that those of us who call ourselves Christians, will, as far as possible, prevent unnecessary temptation from being laid before our fellow-citizens.

Mr. NYE. If I understand the honorable Senator from West Virginia, his opinion is based upon the hypothesis that a man will steal two dollars who would not steal fifty cents. I do not believe a word of it.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I did not intend to reply especially to the Senator from Nevada, but I did not say what he has attributed to me. I said that a tax of fifty cents will present less temptation than a tax of one dollar; that there will be less to act upon. I will tell the gentleman this: that the dependents, the subordinate officers, are not seduced by small sums; and not only they but even the laborers—every man that is connected with the removal of this whisky illicitly—has to be paid a large compensation. I do not suppose that the business could be carried on very profitably by these whisky operators if the tax should be placed at fifty cents. I wish it could be made less; but every one must be aware that the whole of the profit does not go into the hands of those who are at the head of the movement. They subsidize, they tempt, they make felons of a number of men by compensation such as they have never received before in their lives; one or two thousand dollars, perhaps, to a laborer for a few weeks' work.

Mr. NYE. I understood the honorable Senator to say, and I understand him now to say, that he favors the reduction of this tax upon the ground that the smaller tax is less of a temptation to those who are inclined to steal. That is the point of his argument. I stand here to say that any man who will steal two dollars will steal fifty cents. When a man makes up his mind to steal at all, he will steal coppers as quick as he will silver coin any day.

But, Mr. President, is the Senate of the United States ready to make this concession which the honorable Senator from West Virginia makes, to get down before the majesty of these offenses and cry that men are unable to resist this temptation? Sir, that was the cry, that the rebellion was too large, we could not punish it; a doctrine that I repudiated as well in arms as in civil life. If we cannot collect two dollars we cannot collect two cents. My honorable friend from West Virginia will remember that this horde that has been upon the Treasury now for two or three years have got pretty well supplied. Now, there will be a lot of lesser thieves at it certainly, who will be as well content to steal from the fifty cents on the gallon as these older ones now are from two dollars.

I insist upon it that this reduction is a concession to rascality and villainy. The legislative power of the country get down on their knees and say: "Gentlemen, the only way we can save you from stealing everything is to make less for you to steal." Sir, I would make these men feel the power and the majesty of the law of the land. I would collect the tax; and it can be done. It is shameful, it is disgraceful to make that confession to the world. It goes all over the world that we as a nation are unable to collect our taxes because all of our agents will steal. The trouble has been, and is now, that these stealing agents are shielded by their masters who use them. Whenever the Executive, as recent events show, is in trouble he sounds the alarm and an agent is sent to go and settle seizures already made.

I comprehend all the embarrassments of this thing; but, sir, let not the legislative power, at least, of this Government say that they cower and shrink away before these frauds. Sir, I would clean out the revenue department from A to Z; I would put in more efficient men and hold them responsible for the discharge of their duty; and when they fail to return the revenue, let it be prima facie cause of removal. That is what I would do. I would not only bring the distillers, but I would bring my own agents up to the standard of honesty and make them collect this revenue. I repeat, it is disgraceful for us to say that we cannot collect this tax. We all know better. Get an honest fountain, an honest head, and the stream will be pure, when I hope in God we shall get sometime or other in the changes and mutations of life.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, I regret to say that I have not been able to give this subject the consideration which its merits seem to command, in consequence of other engagements; but I cannot allow the final vote to be taken on the bill without saying a word.

I do not regard the reduction of the tax upon whisky from two dollars to fifty cents is any concession to what is known as the whisky ring, or as any cowering on our part before that combination of men whose purpose has been thus far to violate the law. The only question for Congress to decide is a very simple and a very plain one, according to my ideas, and that is, how can we raise most conveniently and with the least expense a rich revenue from the article of distilled spirits? That is the question for us to determine, and that is the only question. We are not here to decide upon a question of mere pique between Congress, the law-making power, and the whisky ring, but the simple, practical question, how can we raise the most revenue from distilled spirits with the least expense to the Government and the least inconvenience to the people.

If the Congress of the United States should see fit to resort to the same means which seem to be employed in England for the collection of the tax upon distilled spirits, it is probable we might enforce the tax of two dollars a gallon. In that country, as the chairman of the committee informs us, there are some ten or a dozen distilling establishments, each possessing a vast amount of capital, and all of them together monopolizing the business of distillation within the kingdom, and each of them is under the immediate control of the Government, and the Government derives its revenue upon distilled spirits directly by a direct interference and supervision of this comparatively small number of large establishments.

Mr. ANTHONY. Why can we not do the same?

Mr. HOWARD. The Senator from Rhode Island asks why we cannot do the same. I have no doubt of the constitutional authority of Congress to do the same if they should see fit, because we can resort to any reasonable means to collect the tax; but will the Senator from Rhode Island undertake to say that it would be acceptable to the people of the United States that Congress should declare that no distilled spirits should be made except through such and such and such establishments organized under a law of the United States and under the direct control and supervision of the officers of the Government? Would the people endure such a system? I think not. I may be mistaken; but it would certainly be a great novelty in our legislation to attempt it. I think the thing would turn out in the end to be impracticable. It would produce popular complaints to which we should be compelled to listen. We cannot resort to such a system as that, in my judgment; at any rate, we cannot do so now.

Something must be done to insure the collection of the tax upon whisky and other distilled spirits. We have been losing, wonderfully losing our revenue from that rich source for the last two or three years. I think myself, so far as I can judge, that the bill now before us reducing the tax to fifty cents will in the end produce a larger amount of revenue than the old law imposing a duty of two dollars a gallon. I am satisfied that the House of Representatives, who have had this matter under their consideration for months past, cannot have come to the conclusion of thus reducing the tax without very good reason to influence them in so doing; and I am satisfied that the Committee on Finance of this body has given it their best attention, having in view only the amount of revenue which we are to obtain from this article.

I think we had better try another experiment. Our first legislation was merely experimental. We all knew very well that whisky and other distilled spirits were a mere luxury, and we thought very properly that they could endure a very heavy tax, and we imposed a very heavy tax upon them. The result has been to disappoint our expectations, for we have derived far less revenue from this source than we anticipated. Nobody will deny this. The amount of receipts has been very far less than you and I anticipated when we first enacted the law. Why? For this plain reason, that imposing so high a tax, you really by implication say to the manufacturer, "If you can smuggle your goods into market without the payment of the tax, the tax itself operates as precisely that amount of premium upon the gallon." A gallon of whisky sold in the market without the payment of the tax, sold clandestinely and illegally, is sure to bring the amount of the tax, although it may not cost in its manufacture one half that amount; and here is the great temptation which is held out to this illegal traffic. The law itself necessarily and unavoidably offers a premium for its own violation.

Undoubtedly it must be conceded that a large amount of our loss growing out of the whisky tax has been in consequence of the appointment of unfaithful and corrupt officials to attend to that business. Nobody doubts this; but still it cannot be denied that what ever class of officials may happen to be appointed to supervise this branch of the revenue the same temptation is presented to them; and I should almost distrust an angel from heaven in the exercise of his functions with such a temptation before him. It is the temptation which continues all along and presents itself to the mind of every man connected with this business through which we have incurred our losses.

Now, sir, we have tried the high tax. We have lost by it. We cannot collect it. The officers of the law are not sufficient to the task which we impose upon them. They fail either for want of vigilance or want of honesty and character. No matter what may be the cause of their inefficiency, we do not get money, but we lose money in consequence of the high tax. Now, sir, let us about ship; let us impose a smaller tax, and let us, at least, endeavor to lessen in some degree this enormous temptation to crime and pillage which our former law has held out to the public. I think myself that the bill now before us, imposing a tax of fifty cents on the gallon, will operate much better than the old law, and that from it we shall derive a larger revenue than we formerly derived. I shall, therefore, vote against the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana to raise the tax from fifty to ninety cents.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, much of the argument in favor of this amendment proceeds upon the ground that the Government will subject itself to great humiliation by reducing the amount of this tax; and it is to be with us in our legislation a matter of pride or ambition rather than a matter of revenue; and the question seems to be not so much as to what system of taxation will produce the greatest income as what course will most consist with our pride of feeling or with our self-respect.

Other Governments have been compelled to pursue the same course in reference to this identical subject that we propose to pursue; and to insist at this time upon this high tax upon whisky is not only to shut our eyes to experience in our own country, but is to shut our eyes to what the experience of other countries testifies upon this subject. I hold in my hand a book entitled "Buchanan on Taxation," in which this subject is discussed so far as it relates to Great Britain. I will read a few brief extracts from the book; to which I invite the attention of the Senate; and they will show not only that this cannot be regarded as a concession to the thieves, humiliating to the Government, but they will show that the true policy to be pursued under existing circumstances is to reduce the amount of this tax:

"It was by the smuggler, therefore, that the market was still supplied; and the years 1814 and 1815 were noted for the progress of illicit distillation over the whole country. In 1816 the use of small stills of forty gallons was again permitted; the duty was reduced to 6s. 2d. and 5s. 6d. But the illicit trade had in the meantime received such an impulse from the unwise restraints and heavy duties imposed on the legal distiller, that no vigilance could suppress it.

It was not till the year 1823, when the duty was reduced from 6s. 6d. to 2s. per gallon, that the legal distiller had any chance of a successful competition with his contraband rival. This act was extended to Ireland, and was in all respects a most successful measure. The lower duty increased the quantity of spirits brought to charge in Scotland, from 2,308,286 gallons, its amount in 1823, to 4,350,301 gallons in 1824, and in 1825 to 5,981,540 gallons; and the revenue which it yielded was nearly equal to the produce of the former high duty, amounting in 1825 to £682,848, while the duty of 5s. 6d. only produced, in 1822, £691,136. The efficiency of the measure was further attested by the cessation of the illicit trade, and the erection of legal stills all over the Highlands.

In 1826 the duty was raised in Scotland and in Ireland to 2s. 10d. the imperial gallon, which, making allowance for the difference of measure, was an addition to the tax of 6d. per gallon; and in 1830 it was raised to 3s. 4d.; while the drawback on malt, which had been increased to 1s. 2d. per gallon on spirits, in which it was exclusively used, was reduced in 1830 to 8d. The effect of those impolitic additions to the duty was to revive, to a certain extent, the illicit trade in the Highlands; and to suppress it, new severities were resorted to, namely, penalties and heavy fines, and in default of payment, the jail.

In Ireland similar errors were committed. In 1779 the duty was assessed, as it was afterward in Scotland, on the cubic contents of the still, and with precisely the same effects. The quicker process of distillation that was adopted entirely distanced the erroneous computations of the excise; and the tax, though it was continually increased till at length it was in proportion to its original amount, as thirty-eight to one, never kept pace with the still more rapid increase of spirits which was produced by the improved process of distillation. This mode of assessment was in consequence superseded by a duty of 5s. 6d. on the gallon, at which rate it continued till the year 1823.

"All the evils which necessarily arose from excess of duty were during this interval experienced in Ireland. Smuggling was carried on to an alarming extent. The annual consumption of spirits was estimated at ten million gallons, while the duty in 1822 was only paid on 2,910,483 gallons. But the loss of revenue was by no means the worst evil; the prosecution of the illicit trade gave rise to the most lamentable scenes of violence and disorder; the country, traversed by armed and hostile bands of revenue officers and smugglers, presented in many districts the image of war. It was in vain that increased severities were resorted to; that the guilt of an unlicensed still was visited by a heavy fine on a whole parish; and that the smuggler was punished by transportation. The trade was still actively pursued all over the country until the year 1823, when the duty was reduced in Ireland, as in Scotland, to 2s. the gallon, and was transferred from the cubic contents of the still to the spirit. This measure was entirely successful; the illicit trade was suppressed; and the quantity of spirits brought to charge was increased from 2,910,483 gallons in 1822 to 6,690,315 in 1824, and to 9,262,744 in 1825; while the produce of the high duty of 5s. 6d., which was in 1821 £912,285, and in 1822 £707,518, was nearly equaled by that of the lower duty of 2s. in 1824, which was £776,690, and was exceeded by it in 1825, when it amounted to £1,084,191."

Showing that the reduction of the tax from five shillings sixpence to two shillings per gallon in two years produced an immense addition to the revenue.

"The same effects have still followed every reduction of duty on spirits; a clear proof that it is not one of those commodities on which a heavy tax can be safely imposed.

"The low duty of 2s. on the gallon, though it improved the revenue and put an end to smuggling, was not allowed to continue more than two years. The experiment of excessive duties was again tried. The tax was raised, as in Scotland in 1826, from 2s. to 2s. 10d. the imperial gallon; and in 1830 to 3s. 4d., followed as usual by a revival of the illicit trade, and by a loss of revenue."

Mr. ANTHONY. Now, will the Senator tell us what the present duty is in England, and what it yields?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that the present tax in England is about the same that is levied in the United States.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is, after the English Government by reducing the tax found that the revenue increased, they afterward doubled it upon the highest duty that they had had before. That seems to have been their experience.

Mr. MORTON. Their tax is ten shillings now.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Ten shillings on the imperial gallon.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is higher than our tax.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not at all.

Mr. ANTHONY. Reduce it to our currency and you will find that they levy more than we do.

Mr. MORTON. It is $2 47 in gold.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is on the new system. They changed their system some years ago.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The history of the excise duty in England is contained in the book from which I read down to a given date. Do you undertake to controvert the facts that are stated in that standard work on taxation?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; but I want the subsequent facts.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have given the figures, and they show that for centuries, perhaps, the English have been trying experiments in reference to the distilled spirits produced in that country. Sometimes they have levied a high duty under certain regulations, and that high duty has been found to produce illicit distillation, and a reduction in the revenue.

Mr. ANTHONY. Now, will the Senator allow me to ask him this question: the English Government having been experimenting so long on the subject of the duties on distilled spirits, what is the result at which the English Government has arrived as the rate of duty which will yield the highest revenue? I do not want to know what it was twenty-seven years ago; but now, after all their experience, at what rate have they decided that they can collect the largest amount of duty on that article?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know that they have made any absolute and conclusive decision that may not be changed by experience. If gentlemen will allow me to state what I propose to state, I will endeavor to satisfy them as far as I can upon that point. I stated that this book displays the history of England on that subject for a great number of years, and it presents incontrovertible facts and figures upon this question. It is true that at the present time the tax has been raised under a system of legislation that has been devised in Great Britain, to about the same amount of tax that is imposed in the United States upon distilled spirits; but it is under a system of legislation which cannot be adopted or enforced in this country.

Mr. ANTHONY. Why? That is what I want to know.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why? Because this Government is not a monarchical Government. In Russia the whole business is taken out of the hands of the people and conducted by the Government, and all the liquor in Russia is made by the Government and sold to the people, and they are required to pay the taxes upon the article produced by the Government.

Mr. FESSENDEN. My friend will allow me to suggest another answer; and that is, that the English Government do not change their inferior officers for political considerations. When a man is appointed to such a place, it is not for political reasons, and a good man is retained and a bad man is turned out; while here, we keep continually changing people for political reasons.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the key to the whole matter.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have no doubt that under our system we cannot collect this tax; but I see no objection whatever to adopting the English system; and as to the idea that there is a difference, because England is a monarchical Government and ours a republican Government, allow me to say that our Government is stronger for collecting taxes, or for any other purpose than the English Government is, if we will only use our power. I think the answer given by the Senator from Maine is a perfectly good one, and I would have that difficulty avoided by making these officers independent of political appointment. I would have them appointed, as they are appointed in England, because they will do their duty, and not because they will carry votes in a certain ward.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have stated that different systems are adopted in Europe by different Governments, and all the systems adopted there for the imposition and collection of taxes are of a most arbitrary nature and adapted to their systems of government. The number of distilleries in England, if I am not mistaken, does not exceed ten or twelve in all. The number of distilleries in Scotland is reduced to a still smaller number, and in Ireland about the same number; and these distilleries are regulated and covered by special legislation, a system of legislation that is not adapted to our circumstances. In addition to that, there is a country containing perhaps one hundred and twenty thousand square miles to be governed in this way, thickly populated, under the control of a monarchical form of government, and where, as everybody knows, the system of police has been brought to a great state of perfection in every respect, incomparably beyond ours in every respect; while here we have a country containing two millions of square miles, a wide, extensive country, thinly and sparsely populated, with opportunity afforded for the commission of fraud and the evasion of law. There are many reasons why a system of heavy taxation may be made successful in Great Britain and not be made successful in the United States; and I am not certain that the present system in Great Britain is the best that can be devised, for they have been experimenting upon this subject for centuries with various successes; sometimes result showed a high tax produced a less amount of revenue, while in Ireland, in 1823, the country presented a state of civil war; policemen were marching everywhere through the country as armed bodies of men to enforce the law, while the smugglers were resisting—

Mr. ANTHONY. What was the duty at that time?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then five shillings and sixpence.

Mr. ANTHONY. What is the duty now, when everything is perfectly quiet and it is collected without trouble?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have answered what the duty is. It is the only duty of that description in the world that is levied upon liquor. The tax in Prussia and Austria amounts to only a few cents per gallon, and the English Government is the only one that imposes this enormous tax. It is collected, I suppose, but how successfully does not appear.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yet it does so appear from the returns, if the Senator will allow me to say so. When the tax was five shillings a gallon, I understand from the authority which he has read, all Ireland was in a state of insurrection, and when it was two shillings a gallon it was worse, or as bad; but now that it is ten shillings a gallon everything is quiet, and the tax upon spirits is collected in England. I do not recollect the percentage that is collected, but about as much as of the other taxes; there is not much difference. I think that is a fact; but the Senator is more familiar with that matter than I am. I want him to explain to me, if five shillings a gallon makes an insurrection and ten shillings makes everything quiet and brings the revenue, how it is that a low tax is better than a high one.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know that I can explain these facts satisfactorily to the Senator; but I have stated the facts and I have produced the authority. That is either true or false. I did not make the authority. I make the statement, and have produced the brief.

Mr. ANTHONY. I agree to all that; but how does the Senator draw the inference that a five-shilling tax, which makes an insurrection, is a better tax than ten shillings which fills the Treasury?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not draw any such inference. There may have been peculiar circumstances at that time, which produced that commotion in the country; and there may be peculiar circumstances at this time which enable Great Britain to collect this tax, and it may be that next year it will be found that the tax cannot be collected, and there may be a necessity for its reduction on the part of Great Britain. Nobody can foretell as to what the future may develop on this subject. I only refer to the history upon this question, not so much to show that there would be economy in the reduction of this tax, as I believe there would, but to show that this attempted objection that it is exceedingly humiliating on the part of the Government to reduce an excise tax when it is found that it cannot be collected is a mistake, because that is a course which has characterized the history of other Governments.

I did not intend to take half as much time, and I should not have done so if I had not been interrupted. I simply intended to refer to this book on the subject. Senators can deal with the authority as they please. I did not make it. It is regarded as a standard book on the subject of taxation. They can see whether it is true or not true. They can deduce their own inferences from it. I say further that if I had time I could show that every standard work upon taxation maintains the doctrine that when you tax an article four or five hundred per cent. more than its cost, you impose a tax that tempts men to commit fraud, and will to a great extent defeat its collection. I lay that down as a proposition in political economy which the authorities maintain and the experience of all countries proves on that subject.

Now, sir, there is one fact to which I wish to call attention before I sit down. To adopt this amendment is to defeat this bill, and it ought to be defeated if this amendment is adopted. It is, then, only a bill that will promote the interests of the illicit distillers in this country.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Explain why?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I propose to explain why, if the Senator will not be impatient.

This bill requires the tax to be paid at the distillery. Before the distiller delivers his whisky from the place where it is manufactured, he must pay the tax. You require the distiller to pay a dollar per gallon upon every gallon of whisky that he manufactures before he delivers it from the still. Require a large tax to be paid in that way, and there is no man in the United States who can pursue the business and be an honest man. I say it is an utter impossibility, because he must necessarily invest a very large amount of money in these taxes while the whisky continues in the distillery, and then he must take the chances of sale; and that whisky may lie, and ought to lie, before it is marketable, in the warehouse for months or for years; and this amount of money is invested in these taxes. And the bill provides in addition that this tax must in any event be paid within a year, so that if a man makes twenty thousand gallons of whisky he must pay $20,000 of tax before he can deliver that whisky from his distillery. Can any man do business in that way? When we provide for the exportation of articles we provide that they may be exported in bond or that there may be drawbacks, because no man can pay the tax on the article exported before any sale is made, before he receives any return; and to require in the exportation of articles that are taxed the tax to be paid before the article is exported, would be to stop the exportation from the country and to provide that this one dollar tax should be paid at the distillery, would stop the business in the country, so far as honest men are concerned, and put the manufacture of this article altogether into the hands of men who would avoid the payment of tax. That would be the inevitable result; and if this amendment is adopted I hope the bill will be defeated. In that event, I should certainly vote against it with its present provisions.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have been very much amused at the ingenuity and learning which have been displayed here to prove that we cannot do that which is done. The English now collect a tax of ten shillings a gallon on whisky, and when we ask why we cannot do the same we are told that our system is different; and when the question is put why not make our system to conform to the English, gentlemen say that our people would not stand it; that is, that our people would not stand the concentration of the distilleries now in operation into a few large establishments. Who is to be affected unfavorably by it? The men who are now distilling. Of course there are no honest men distilling now. That has been said here repeatedly; and there can be no doubt about the fact that a man who sells whisky for ninety cents does not pay the Government two-dollar tax. Thus nobody will be unfavorably affected by concentrating the distilleries into a few large establishments, except the men who are now cheating the Government; and there are no class of men who have or ought to have the public sympathy less than they.

The Senator from Oregon read the result of the English taxation up to forty years ago, and there he stopped. He proved that up to 1827 the English were experimenting upon the taxation of spirits, and that the lower the rate the higher the income until they got the duty down as low as two shillings. The English have gone on forty years since that period, and the net result of all their experience is that ten shillings is the duty that will yield the largest revenue. Certainly that fact outweighs all that has been read from the book. This is the result to which the country where taxation is best understood, and where it has been heaviest endured, has brought the Government, to ten shillings a gallon upon spirits. I do not suppose that a tax of two dollars or one dollar or fifty cents, or any tax whatever, can be collected here under the system that prevails now. The great merit of this bill—and I think it is a very excellent bill—is in the machinery which it has provided for the collection of the tax, and that machinery is just as well adapted to one dollar a gallon as it is to fifty cents.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is a very great mistake.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senator has said that if a distiller was obliged to pay the tax of one dollar a gallon at the still before the whisky was removed he could not carry on the business. He can carry on just half as much business as he can at fifty cents. That is very clear. It would only take the same capital to do half the business at a one-dollar tax that it would take to do double the business at fifty cents; and I think there would be a very great advantage in driving the business of distilling into the hands of men who have property that will be responsible for fraud if they commit it. One of the great evils of our distillation is that it is in the hands of men who are not responsible. If only a man who has large wealth behind him would engage in distilling, the Government would have some security that the tax would be paid. I believe that no measure has ever been devised in any free Government for the collection of taxes that will not be cheerfully submitted to by the people of this country if they can collect the enormous amount of taxation that is due upon whisky.

Why, sir, what a singular situation it is that the people of this country are suffering under enormous taxation, that the financial question is the great question of the day, the question upon which the presidential election is to turn, and everybody knows that if the taxes that are due on whisky, and that are paid to the distillers by the people could be collected by the Government we might relieve industry from all its extraordinary burdens! I presume my friend from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] will agree that the tax on spirits honestly collected, and the tax on stamps and incomes and gross receipts and what we derive from external duties would pay all the expenses of the Government. We stand here and submit to these enormous frauds. I agree with the Senator from Oregon that there is no humiliation in our reducing the tax because we cannot collect it. I do not think there is any more humiliation in that than there is in submitting to the continual frauds on the Treasury with the tax law on the statute-book. I think it is no more humiliating to repeal a law that we cannot enforce than it is to submit to the constant violation of it; but I believe that it is in the power of this Government to collect a tax of one dollar upon whisky. I thought that the tax of two dollars was rather high, and I voted for it with some reluctance, but a tax of one dollar, in my judgment, is liable to no objection that does not apply equally in kind, though, of course, not as much in degree, to any lower tax.

No one would think of taxing whisky less than one hundred or one hundred and twenty-five per cent. If a man will cheat for anything he will cheat for that. If a man, by violating the laws, can double the value of the entire article that he manufactures, he will do it under that temptation if he will do it under any.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Mr. President, if we could reach a vote I certainly would not add another word; but the experience of the day shows how this debate drags its slow length along. Senators that were not here yesterday come in and start the same questions that we had debated and I supposed had disposed of yesterday.

Now, the assertion of the Senator from Rhode Island in relation to the perfection of taxation in England I utterly repudiate and deny. Their system of taxation is no more perfect than ours this very day. Look at their writers who have discussed the question, and you will find that they are continually finding fault with the imperfection of their laws. With us we levy our taxation somewhat in proportion to the means of the tax-payer to pay, whereas in England there is no such principle regarded with the exception of a single tax, and that is the income tax; all the rest is mainly on the idea of a per capita tax, or according to consumption, so that the poorer portion of the community there contribute far more than they do in our country; and to that extent their system of taxation is not as perfect as ours. But their system of collection of the tax on liquors is more perfect than ours. Why? They have hung a great many men and transported a great many men for a violation of their excise laws. If we had had any occasion to have a tax like this, so as to have a tithe of the experience of Great Britain, we might in time have reached the same degree of perfection in the execution of the law. After they had tried the tax at a high figure they were compelled to reduce it down to a low rate and then gradually raised it higher, in order that as they profited by experience they might increase the tax.

But the Senator from Vermont is troubled as to why we cannot enforce the same law here as can be enforced in Great Britain. The reason is that we cannot afford to police the country as Great Britain is policed in order to effect that object. That country has a regular patrol that runs around the whole borders of the island and penetrates into every county and every district of the country. You will see men in uniform everywhere, detectives in every part of the country. It would take an army almost like that commanded by General Grant to cover this country with a sufficient number of police to prevent illicit distillation as they undertake to prevent it in Great Britain.

But, Mr. President, there is one reason that has not yet been suggested why this tax should be reduced to a lower rate than it now is, and that is, that it will be very nearly the same amount that is levied upon the same article in the British provinces, the New Dominion, as it is called; and it is certainly a very great object if we can so assimilate our taxes upon this article as to make it no object for parties on either side to smuggle.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, there is one fact that perhaps might be considered with propriety in taking a vote on this question; and that is, that if this tax is now reduced to fifty cents on the gallon it will not hereafter be restored. We are making a final reduction. We threw away twenty or twenty-five millions of revenue by repealing the tax on cotton totally last winter under peculiar circumstances; and we can now see from the price of cotton and from the general promise of its production, I think, that we acted very unwisely and threw away twenty millions of revenue that we shall need very badly. We cannot restore that tax; and if we now reduce this tax we are reducing it finally; the same influences that are now swaying public opinion somewhat in the direction of the reduction of the tax on whisky will be strong enough to keep it down when they get it there.

The Senator from Oregon made the remarkable argument that the machinery of this bill was not calculated to collect a tax of one dollar, but could only collect a tax of fifty cents on the gallon; in other words, we must not adjust the machinery to suit the proper tax, but must make the tax to suit the machinery, that it seems has been invented or adopted for the collection. That is like the old metaphysical philosophers who marked out their theory and then sought to make the facts conform to it, instead of making the theory conform to the facts.

The Senator from Oregon has read from an old book, "Buchanan on Taxation," and I must say the name is rather against its being a very excellent authority; but it is an old work, which goes to show that the English Government has swung around the circle on this question, started with about five shillings and put it down, and tried it one way and then tried it another, and finally, after a long and costly experience, have brought it to ten shillings, where it has been for years, and where it is likely to remain. We have the benefit of the English experience where, after having tried it in every way, they have come back to ten shillings, very nearly $2 50 in gold, upon the gallon. The present proposition before the Senate is to levy a tax of one dollar in currency, equal to about seventy cents in gold; and yet gentlemen say that is too high, and they refer to English experience to establish the fact, though the English, after having tried the thing in every form, have settled down to $2 50 in gold. Now, sir, the final action of the English Government, after long and costly experience, is a better answer to the argument of the Senator from Oregon than we can possibly make, and I shall leave it right there.

But, Mr. President, the great argument which has been offered in this case is the temptation argument. Says the Senator from West Virginia, "Lead us not into temptation." The Government must not establish any tax or any impost duty, or do anything else that presents a strong temptation to commit fraud. It is not right for any man to acquire a fortune, because he strongly tempts the poor vagabond to steal his money; he is leading his neighbor into temptation, and he is violating those Christian maxims quoted by the Senator from West Virginia. You must do nothing which will lead your neighbor into temptation! Not only does the Senator from West Virginia urge that to the Senator from Michigan, but he has said the temptation is too strong for poor human nature. I simply refer to this for the purpose of saying that this argument defeats itself. If this argument is true, then the tax at fifty cents a gallon ought not to be levied, because it still presents a powerful temptation, a temptation that will be found to be too great for the virtue of these whisky men, for whom so much sympathy has been expressed here this afternoon. Why, Mr. President, the temptation to steal fifty cents is not so great as that to steal two dollars; but when you have learned how to do it, and the facilities have been discovered, and the agencies have been created, and all the machinery, to use the language of the Senator from Oregon, has been already formed and laid down, then the temptation to steal the half dollar becomes as great, and it becomes as profitable as it formerly was to steal the two dollars.

Look at the temptation now presented by this bill, and we must then exclaim with the Senator from West Virginia, "Lead us not into temptation." The distiller can make twenty-five dollars a barrel even under this bill by committing a fraud. Take a distillery that runs one hundred barrels per day, and that is not a very large one, and there is a temptation of $2,500 in one day. That is not so great as $10,000, as it would be under the present law, but still $2,500 in one day is an enormous temptation. Take a little country distillery, that only makes ten barrels a day, over in the neighborhood of the Senator from Kentucky, and that would be a temptation of $250 a day. Take a little copper still, between two hills, over near Owensboro', Kentucky, where they only run one barrel a day, that is a temptation of twenty-five dollars a day, which would be more than the proprietor of that still could make perhaps in a month in any other way. So you see that if you go upon the ground that you must levy a tax that will not be a temptation to commit fraud you cannot pass this bill. It presents an enormous temptation, but not so great as the former rate.

Now, Mr. President, I do not believe in the force of this argument. I believe that if you can collect fifty cents on the gallon you can collect one dollar on the gallon. I said yesterday, and I repeat, that this whole movement is the result of a panic. I will not say how or by whom gotten up; but they desire to have this Congress rush from one extreme to another. If you say two dollars is an extreme tax, then half a dollar is extremely small the other way. Because we have failed in collecting two dollars must we almost put the tax down to nothing? There seems to be no middle ground; there seems to be no reasonable position that Senators are willing to take; but it must now be fifty cents or nothing. The Senator from Oregon says if you put it at a dollar now he wants the bill to fail and hopes it will fail. He wants the tax put down to fifty cents or the bill to fail and the tax to remain at two dollars.

Mr. President, I do not understand that kind of logic. There is a right ground; it is generally found between the extremes; and if we concede that two dollars was too great a tax, can it be said that one dollar is too great? When this two-dollar tax was imposed there were Senators and Representatives in Congress who wanted it one dollar. It finally became a party measure, and it was put at two dollars; and we have heard it said in the Senate, or rather we have heard it intimated, that it is a party measure now to put it down to fifty cents. I deny both statements.

Sir, there is too much at stake in this matter for us to act hastily or unadvisedly in putting this tax down too low. If we can collect $50,000,000 at one dollar on the gallon we can collect $90,000,000 at one dollar a gallon. This amendment, if it is adopted and the bill itself is a success, will save to this Government not less than $40,000,000. I tell you that we shall need the revenue very badly. It is a rush from one extreme to another extreme without any other or higher reason than because we have been tempting human nature too strongly for its strength; and yet the bill contains a temptation at least powerful enough to seduce those that have been seduced before; and their name is legion.

Mr. McCREERY. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] for the distinct and clear avowal which he has made of the principles which influence those who favor the high taxation of whisky. He has announced on this floor the doctrine that he favors high taxation because it takes the manufacture of this article from the hands of the poor and monopolizes it in the hands of the rich. It is the "money ring" which controls on that side which has been charging that the "whisky ring" controls upon the other. I differ with that gentleman and all others who hold the same doctrine. I stand up here to vindicate the labor of this country, and if need be, if either must fall, let capital fall in the struggle. Capital needs no protection. A man who has his bonds or his money in his pocket needs not the protection of this Congress; but it is the laboring man, the man who takes his ax upon his shoulder and marches out to the wilderness, fells the timber and clears up his farm, that I desire shall have the privilege of manufacturing whisky or any other article. I do not want to take it from the whole labor of this country and transfer it to New York or some other center of capital, and say that they and they alone shall have the right of manufacturing whisky.

Mr. President, the friends of my boyhood were the descendants of those men who were the pioneers of Kentucky and of the West, and I shall ever oppose every measure which says to the posterity of those men, the friends of my youth, "You are to stand back in this business; your distilleries are to be struck down, your manufactures are to be destroyed in order that for the convenience of collection the whole manufacture of whisky shall be transferred to New York or some center of capital."

We have had a great many taunts thrown at us during the discussion of this question. The distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HOWE] has said, and repeated the assertion, that it is more respectable to drink high whisky than low whisky. All we ask of gentle men is to keep their hands off us, not to run their hands in our pockets, and we will attend to the respectability of ourselves. We are respectable; we intend to remain respectable; but we ask Congress not to draw upon us too strong in the shape of taxation.

It does appear to me singular that gentlemen are pitching upon two articles, tobacco and whisky, in which Kentucky is more deeply interested than in any other, upon the ground and the only ground that these are luxuries, when one of the greatest luxuries that ever humanity did enjoy escapes them altogether. The greatest luxury, as I hold, upon the face of this earth is to set back behind two millions or five millions of Government bonds. This great luxury escapes the attention and animadversion of these gentlemen altogether; but let them find some little still-house up a creek or a branch where some honest man by his own labor is making from fifty to one hundred barrels of whisky, and this poor fellow living by the toil and sweat of his own brow is to be stricken down because he manufactures what these gentlemen call a luxury. Take one of your fine gentlemen who sits comfortably behind his two or three millions of Government bonds and probably he would hardly touch a plain glass of whisky; he would prefer his Mustcat, or his champagne, or something of that sort. He does not esteem whisky a luxury, certainly.

Mr. President, I have several amendments to propose to the bill, but there is an amendment at this time before the Senate, which is, I believe, to make the tax ninety cents. I propose to stand by the committee on that subject, to stand by the tax of fifty cents, and to place it in the power of any man, rich or poor, in this land, without favor or affection, to manufacture this or any other article. If the Senate intend to support the position taken by the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island, if they intend that those who are now wealthy shall monopolize all the wealth of the land, if they intend that all sources of revenue to any other men of the country shall be closed up, and that these men shall manufacture all the whisky, let it go forth in that shape; let it be said that you stand in this controversy on the side of capital and against labor. That is the position, and let it be so declared to the country.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. President, I had supposed that the Committee on Finance had arrived at some definite conclusion on this subject, and had really submitted to us the result of their inquiries and investigations, and that they meant precisely what they said in their report. I had supposed that they had investigated this subject with care, and that they had recourse to those means of investigation which would enable them to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion. Until to-day I fancied that we had in this bill their deliberate and solemn conviction on the subject, and that fifty cents was the point they had fixed upon as the rate of tax that would yield the greatest amount of revenue to the Government, and render the least injury to the production of the country. But it seems that this opinion is not exactly certain on the part of the committee, that they are yet vacillating between this and some other point.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senator upon what authority he makes that statement?

Mr. FOWLER. The authority of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

Mr. SHERMAN. That was contradicted at the moment and withdrawn.

Mr. FOWLER. I heard the statement, and I did not hear distinctly what followed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I repeat again that the Committee on Finance took this matter deliberately into consideration and have never changed their position. I trust my friend from Vermont will withdraw the remark he made, or explain it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. When I state a thing and turn out to be in error I will withdraw it; but what I said was something that the committee had no right to get, I was about to say in a tantrum about, but that is not a polite word. The committee had no right to feel excited about what I said, because it was expressing only my own opinion of the individual conviction of the gentlemen of the committee as drawn from what the Senator from Ohio himself said last night. I may have been mistaken in the opinion, but I am entitled to the opinion just the same as if I was not mistaken.

Mr. FOWLER. I supposed the Senator from Ohio stated really the opinion of the committee, and that is, that the rate fixed in the bill is their deliberate conviction, and that they have arrived at it after mature consideration, that they are not vacillating in regard to this matter, that they do not entertain other views contrary to their report. I have so understood up to the present time, and I am glad to be confirmed in it by what the Senator from Ohio has said.

Mr. President, there is a certain point to which taxation on articles of production may be carried so as to yield the greatest amount of revenue with the least injury to production. I shall take it for granted that the rate fixed by this bill is the proper point, because it is an experiment; the committee cannot predict with certainty as to the result, but they have exercised their best judgment and arrived at this conclusion, and I am satisfied with the result, and shall support it. If they have arrived at this point, and ascertained the true law that governs the production of this article, any action on the part of the Government that tends to overthrow that law or to violate it is, to some extent, a crime, and quite as great a crime against labor as it is for labor to evade that law. There are laws that control and govern production; laws not made by legislatures, quite as sacred as those that emanate from any legislative body whatever. Now, sir, the Government has itself been the violator of these laws, and it is to blame in a great measure for all of the corruption that has manifested itself on the part of officers or of the people of the country by the violation of one of these fundamental laws of trade.

There is another consideration in reference to this matter. In order to collect the present unheard-of and exorbitant tax, unusual, unknown, uncongenial machinery was adopted, which is now proposed to be made even more oppressive than it has been. This machinery, when it comes to be considered by the American people, will be regarded as really startling. Above all, you have resorted to spies and informers and inspectors, showing an utter want of confidence in the people, distrusting everybody and everything, having no faith in anything. Now, let the Government return at once to its good old doctrine of confidence in the people, and to wise and equal legislation on this subject; give up your exorbitant taxation, dismiss your spies, exercise a manly and generous confidence in the people, and it will be reciprocated by them.

Sir, I have failed to see that evidence of corruption the charge of which has been repeated again and again here. Indeed, one Senator has gone so far as to state that since this tax has been established the whole American people, because they are all engaged in this thing, have advanced wonderfully in their education of iniquity. I am not prepared to arrive at any such conclusion from any facts that I have seen. Indeed, there has been no evidence on the subject except an allusion to a certain document which I propose to refer to at some other time, not at the present moment.

In my judgment we cannot adopt in the United States any such machinery as has been adopted either in England or in Russia for the purpose of collecting the tax on spirits. It would be resented more violently than the present tax has been resented, and we have sufficient evidence before us to show conclusively that the present tax cannot and will not be collected. The people will not pay it, nor do they sympathize very fully in the efforts of the Government to collect it, because it is admitted generally that the Government has violated the laws of trade, and has gone beyond its duty and the interests of the people in its efforts to collect an exorbitant and an extraordinary tax, such a one as they have never submitted to before, and will not submit to hereafter.

Unless we do reduce the tax to fifty cents, or perhaps less, I would not advocate any less than that now—it will be utterly impossible to collect any considerable revenue from whisky. We have already seen that revenue fall off to about thirteen millions this year. This is due more to the fact that production has been crushed out by exorbitant taxation than to the fact that the people and agents of the Government have been corrupt. I know in my own State that it is for want of production that the tax is not paid, and in most of the other States it is more due to that cause than any other. I of course know nothing of the history of the small distilleries that have sprung up in New York and in other places. I know nothing of the existence of any facts of that kind. I suppose the committee who state such facts are perfectly conversant with them, and I take their word for them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. FERRY. On this vote I desire to say that I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. PATTERSON.] He would vote "yea" and I "nay."

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 15, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cole, Edmunds, Harlan, Howe, McDonald, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Nye, Osborn, Pomeroy, Ross, Tipton, Wade, Wilson, and Yates—15.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cattell, Conkling, Connors, Cragin, Davis, Drake, Fessenden, Fowler, Howard, Johnson, McCreery, Morgan, Ramsey, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Vickers, Welch, Willey, and Williams—23.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Bayard, Cameron, Chandler, Corbett, Dixon, Doolittle, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Henderson, Hendricks, Morrill of Vermont, Norton, Patterson of New Hampshire, Patterson of Tennessee, Rice, Saulsbury, Sprague, and Thayer—20.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move to amend the bill by inserting the amendment which I offered the day before yesterday in committee. The Clerk has it.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, which was to insert as an additional section the following:

And be it further enacted, That so much of all acts and parts of acts as impose any internal revenue tax on illuminating or other mineral oils, and on the product of the distillation, redistillation, or refining of crude petroleum, or of crude oil produced by a single distillation of coal, shale, peat, asphaltum, or other bituminous substances, together with all provisions relating to returns, assessments, warehousing, and bonding, and all other provisions for determining the quantity of mineral oil distilled for the purpose of securing the payment of the tax thereon, be, and the same are hereby, repealed; and no tax imposed by existing laws on such oils or products in the hands of the producer or manufacturer, or his agent or agents, at the passage of this act and unsold, shall be collected.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I do not think it necessary to repeat the remarks I made only two days ago on this question; and I shall not do so unless they may be called for by some gentleman who is opposed to the remission of the tax. I will simply state the general facts, trusting that gentlemen who were then present at least will remember what was said, and that there may be enough in the facts themselves to convince everybody that this amendment is just and proper.

I showed on that occasion first that all other manufactures of this class have been relieved, while at the time the others were relieved only one half this tax was removed. I showed that the tax itself was enormous, being about one hundred per cent. upon the raw product, the crude petroleum out of which these manufactures are made. I also adverted to the fact of the immense export of this article, now amounting to thirty millions per annum, and showed that this export, though so valuable to the nation, is trammelled by the rules and regulations that are necessary perhaps to be resorted to in order to collect the tax on the domestic use.

I have the sanction of the Special Commissioner of Revenue, and the opinion of many others that this tax can be dispensed with. The whole amount that will be collected from it, I presume, will not exceed $2,000,000. It is not worth while to retain that amount, which is small compared with the whole aggregate of taxation, while it is operating as a discouragement to the export.

I showed, also, that, by reason of the trammels to which this interest is subjected, the necessity of warehousing, of inspectors, and of gaugers, and of extra clerks, in order to make the monthly reports, and all the consequent expenses that are, perhaps, justified in the case of tobacco and whisky, the tendency is, to some extent, to discourage the export of the manufactured article, and to substitute for it the unmanufactured article. The consequence is that a manufacture which might be readily retained here is now carried on abroad to a great extent.

It seems to me that if there is not some very cogent reason why an article of this kind, of common consumption, of use in every family—furnishing the poor and the rich a cheaper light than they can have in any other way—should be subjected to all these trammels and troubles, that are proper in reference to tobacco and whisky, it ought to be repealed for that reason if for no other. But the strongest consideration that present itself to my mind is what I have already stated in reference to discouraging the export of this article. It is so valuable to the country, it furnishes so large a proportion of our exports that it does seem to me it should present itself to every Senator as a proper case for relief. We do not certainly wish, upon any principle whatever that I can imagine, to decrease our export of an article that is profitable to the country, and which goes so far to pay the debt we are creating abroad continually, whether the mercantile debt or the debt of the Government bonds.

With these brief remarks I hope the Senate will take this amendment into their favorable consideration.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I rise to correct the statement of the Senator from West Virginia in one particular. He is mistaken in supposing that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is in favor of this proposition.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I said the Special Commissioner, Mr. Wells.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the last time he was before the Committee on Finance, was particularly inquired of in relation to this matter, and also as to whether the revenues were coming in at such a rate that we could afford to dispense with the amount that would be lost to the Treasury if this tax were repealed; and he most emphatically replied in the negative. I should be almost willing to grant any favor that the Senator from West Virginia should ask, but one of this character cannot command my assent.

In the first place, I differ with the Senator in this respect. I believe this article can better sustain taxation than any other article, with the exception, perhaps, of whisky, in our whole country. It is absolutely without a competitor; and so far as the exportation of it is concerned, we do not interfere with the exportation. There is no duty on the raw material, and when the article is refined it is allowed to go abroad without the payment of duty.

Then I know that the parties who have been most largely engaged in this business have accumulated fortunes; and the property is not all owned in Pennsylvania or in West Virginia. There are many stockholders of this property at the East. I know of one that has been largely engaged in refining petroleum, who can count up his gains at the present time not only by hundreds of thousands, but beyond a million. From a man of only moderate circumstances he has become a millionaire.

But, Mr. President, we are in duty bound to look somewhat to the state of the Treasury. Our revenues have been decreasing for the last month; even our customs duties for the last month are only about one half what they were a year ago. We have repealed nearly all our internal revenue taxes. We shall not be in the receipt of any large amount of revenue for four or five months to come; and I can assure the Senator from West Virginia that the Treasury every month obtain this, and next November will need all that it can get from petroleum or anything else. We are dragging on the very sands, not afloat. I trust we shall do nothing, when we are every day increasing our expenditures, to impair the amount of our receipts into the Treasury.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken resulted—yeas 18, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cattell, Conkling, Connors, Davis, Fowler, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, McCreery, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sumner, Van Winkle, Vickers, Wiley, and Wilson—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Drake, Ferry, Fessenden, Harlan, McDonald, Morgan, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Osborn, Patterson of New Hampshire, Sherman, Tip-ton, Wade, Welch, Williams and Yates—16.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Bayard, Cameron, Chandler, Cole, Corbett, Cragin, Dixon, Doolittle, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Howard, Howe, Morrill of Maine, Norton, Nye, Patterson of Tennessee, Rice, Saulsbury, Sprague, Stewart, Thayer, and Trumbull—24.

Mr. HARLAN. I move to amend the bill by striking out "four," in line eighteen of page 76 and section fifty-eight, and inserting "six;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That a like tax of six dollars on each barrel counting forty gallons of proof-spirits to the barrel, shall be assessed and collected from the owner of any distilled spirits which may be in any bonded warehouse, &c.

I will state to the chairman of the committee that this amendment is in that part of the bill which provides for a tax on whisky in bond. If I understand the bill correctly that class of whisky now has an advantage in the rate of tax levied. Fifty cents is levied as a tax on whisky at the still, and four dollars a barrel, which is equal, we are told, to ten cents a gallon, and then, in addition, a tax on the material out of which the whisky is made, which I have understood from members of the committee amounts to four or five cents on the gallon; but the whisky in bond is taxed fifty cents and four dollars a barrel only, and thus escapes one part of the burden that is levied on whisky at the still.

I have also been informed that whisky in shipment from the West to the East loses four or five per cent. in leakage on account of handling, and the whisky in bond will derive an advantage in that regard also of several cents on the gallon. Unless there is some reason that I am not aware of for giving whisky in bond this advantage it seems to me the amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator will look at the bill he will find that the tax on whisky in bond is precisely the same all the way through with that on whisky to be distilled in the future. There was a complaint that the House bill did not allow the same length of time for taking the whisky out of bond that would be allowed to the distiller to sell his whisky; and we have made it the same, twelve months. Whisky under this bill will pay, first, a direct tax of fifty cents a gallon, and then a tax of four dollars per barrel of forty gallons, or ten cents, so that the aggregate tax is sixty cents. There is no other tax on whisky. It is true there is a tax of four dollars a day for a distillery running with a capacity of one hundred barrels; but that is in the nature of a license tax.

Mr. HARLAN. Is there not a tax levied on the mash?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; that was discussed yesterday. The provision to which the Senator refers is simply a mode of ascertaining the quantity of spirits made from a given amount of grain. That clause does not levy a tax. There is no tax on the mash, none on the grain; but there is a provision declaring that every bushel of grain that goes into a distillery shall yield not less than three gallons of whisky.

Mr. HARLAN. What is the amount of tax now by the gallon at the still under this bill altogether? What does the Senator estimate it at?

Mr. SHERMAN. Sixty cents; and the expense of gauging, &c., which the distillers have to pay, has been estimated to bring the whole, including their license tax, up to about sixty-three or sixty-four cents a gallon; but the holders of the whisky in bond have to pay the expense of gauging and marking it just the same as the manufacturers do on the distilled whisky.

Mr. HARLAN. I inquire, then, if the chairman considers that there is no difference between the levy on the whisky at the still and the levy on whisky in bond.

Mr. SHERMAN. None whatever, unless you consider this a difference: that whisky to be distilled hereafter, as a matter of course will have to bear its part of what is called the daily tax—four dollars a day. That would be hardly appreciable on the gallon. That is the only difference I know of.

Mr. McCREERY. I will point out the difference to both Senators, a difference that I want removed. On page 60 it is provided:

That there shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury such number of internal revenue storekeepers as may be necessary, the compensation of each of whom shall be determined by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, not exceeding five dollars per day, to be paid by the United States, one or more of whom shall be assigned by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to every distillery warehouse established by law.

If the Senate would just let the provision stand as it was passed by the House of Representatives, there would be no distinction between these bonded warehouses and the distilleries; but this provision contains a distinction, and a distinction that I want avoided by standing by the bill as it was passed by the House, and let this per diem be allowed to any man attending to any bonded warehouse established by law. Let the bonded whisky and the distilled whisky stand precisely on an equality. As far as I am able to discover, the intention of the committee, was to place them on terms of equality, but they do discriminate in favor of distilleries by assigning them a man at five dollars per day. If that is done, a man should also be assigned to the bonded warehouses.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Iowa will see that this is not a difference, because in both cases the expense of this office is paid by the United States. The fees of the inspector in one case, who has charge of the bonded warehouse, are paid by the United States; the fees of the officers provided for in the part of the bill read by the Senator from Kentucky are paid by the United States. The only difference is this, and the Committee on Finance made it at the request of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue: the bill as sent to us by the House of Representatives fixed the rate at five dollars a day for all distilleries, but the Commissioner of Internal Revenue said that in some of the country distilleries they did not run much, and it ought to be left to his discretion, that he will be able in country districts to get a proper person at two or three or four dollars a day to be employed temporarily; but that expense is paid by the United States, and does not rest as a burden on the whisky at all.

Mr. McCREERY. You provide here for a "distillery warehouse," striking out "bonded" before "warehouse" in the House bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. This bill abolishes the bonded warehouse. The only reason the word "bonded" is in is because the House bill as it was originally framed provided for removal in bond, and afterward, by a change in the House, that feature was stricken out of the bill, but in two or three cases they left the word "bonded" in the bill by mistake. Those errors we have corrected to adapt the language of the bill to the change made in the House.

Mr. FOWLER. Are the bonded warehouses abolished?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; except those that now have whisky in store.

Mr. McCREERY. They will not be abolished for twelve months under the operation of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. It makes no difference to the owner of the spirits. The Senator is mistaken about it.

Mr. POMEROY. I understand that they will be abolished as soon as the whisky is removed. They remain until the whisky is removed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think that if there is any difference between the whisky in bond and the whisky to be manufactured it is in favor of the man who has the whisky yet to make. The bonded whisky has been in warehouse for a considerable length of time, and I suppose more or less expenses have been incurred in consequence of its being stored. In addition to that, it is yearly diminished some four gallons per barrel by evaporation.

Mr. HARLAN. With these explanations from members of the committee I shall not insist on the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Another remark. The law compels all these men to put the whisky on the market within a year. If you put on a high tax of six dollars a barrel they cannot sell it without a great sacrifice.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to ask the Senator from Oregon, who understands this subject much better than I do, whether the whisky increases in value by the barrel in the warehouse from the time it is put in, the longer it remains, for a reasonable length of time, say three or four years.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I suppose it does, as a matter of course.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does not that increase in value more than counterbalance the loss in quantity by evaporation? Is not the quality of the article so much improved all the time as to make it worth more at the end of the year than when first put in? That was the argument that was pressed upon us when we were on the subject of taxing it, that it would be ruinous to compel the distillers to pay the tax at once at the distillery, because it was necessary that the whisky should be kept some time before it was marketable in order that it might improve. Now, if the result of keeping is that it diminishes in quantity and does not improve in value, and the expenses eat it up, the sooner they pay the tax the luckier they will be.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman is exceedingly astute, and imagines, I suppose, that he has discovered some inconsistency in what I have said.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have not said that the whisky did not improve in value by remaining in warehouse. I have no doubt that it does improve in value; but at the same time it diminishes in quantity, and to that is to be super-added the expense of storage and the necessity that this whisky should be all put upon the market within one year. The argument that I made upon the other question was that it would be ruinous to require the distiller to pay two dollars per gallon upon raw whisky before he could put it out of his distillery. I did not argue that he might not pay a reasonable tax, twenty-five or fifty cents upon a gallon. That was the argument that I made yesterday, and I do not perceive that it is inconsistent with the present argument. Now, as the bill stands, the man who makes the whisky only pays his fifty cents per gallon upon the raw whisky as it comes from the still, while the other man, with additional expenses, has to pay fifty cents on the whisky in bond.

Mr. POMEROY. I apprehend that the increase in the value of the whisky is only about equal to the interest of the money. You deposit whisky in warehouse, and it increases in value from year to year about the interest of the money, I think. I do not think it will increase faster than that, and the evaporation will decrease and lessen the quantity equal to ten per cent.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I am not sure that there is not some reason for the proposition of the Senator from Iowa. There are now twenty-five million gallons in bond. In forty-gallon casks it would be six hundred and twenty-five thousand barrels. We allow it to remain twelve months. It will shrink four gallons per barrel in that time, but it increases in value so that it compensates for this shrinkage. But the party who owns the article will not be required to pay tax except on what his barrels contain when he takes them out of the warehouse. That will be a benefit even for the twelve months, if it should be availed of by the parties, of two dollars on a barrel. So that while I have no settled opinions on the subject I am inclined to think that those having whisky in bond do derive a considerable advantage from it, and that the Government will suffer some loss as compared with anything else that we tax in the way of whisky.

Mr. CATTELL. I understand that this bill provides now that the whisky shall be gauged immediately, and that the tax shall be paid on the amount gauged at once.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I do not so understand it.

Mr. CATTELL. I do. I think the Senator will find it so.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I think not.

Mr. HARLAN. I will suggest that probably no harm would grow out of this. I have not studied this subject as thoroughly as I ought to have done, perhaps. I do not profess to understand the whole machinery of the bill; but I want to say in justification of this amendment that one of my colleagues in the House of Representatives, who is on the House Committee of Ways and Means, and who has studied it very thoroughly, informed me that there was this advantage; but if the amendment were adopted, as the bill will probably go to a committee of conference, if in consultation by the committee it is found not to be necessary in order to make the tax equal between whisky hereafter made and that in bond, it can be struck off in the committee of conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to amend the bill on page 17, section fifteen, by striking out all after the words "to be" in the second line down to the words "the Commissioner" in the ninth line, in these words:

Situated on and to constitute a part of his distillery premises, to be used only for the storage of distilled spirits, of his own manufacture, but no dwelling-house shall be used for such purpose, and no door, window, or other opening shall be made or permitted in the walls of such warehouse leading into the distillery or into any other room or building; and such warehouse, when approved by.

And inserting in lieu thereof:

Selected by the collector of the district, by and with the approval of:

So that the section will read:

That every distiller shall provide, at his own expense, a warehouse, to be selected by the collector of the district, by and with the approval of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, &c.

I will say only a single word on the amendment. The text of the bill requires a warehouse to be erected at the distillery. The larger distilleries in Kentucky already have warehouses in towns or on railroads that are convenient for sale and quite as safe for the keeping of the liquor and preventing frauds. The effect of this amendment, if adopted, would be that each distillery should have a warehouse, that it should be located by the collector in the district with the approval of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and that it should be constructed in such manner as those two officers should prescribe.

Mr. SHERMAN. This same amendment was proposed in the Committee on Finance, and, after discussion by parties interested, was found to be utterly inconsistent with the theory of this bill. In some cases in Kentucky they have warehouses three miles off. If you allow removal from a distillery to a warehouse three miles distant you open the door to frauds, the very thing we have been trying to avoid. I trust the Senator will be satisfied with the action of the Committee on Finance. He was before the committee himself, but the committee concluded it would not answer to allow this. I can go into it more fully if necessary.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCREERY. I move to amend the concluding clause of section thirteen. It now reads:

But any distiller who shall suspend work, as provided by this act, shall pay only two dollars per day during the time the work shall be so suspended in his distillery.

I move to amend the clause so as to make it read:

But any distiller who shall suspend work, as provided by this act, shall not be required to pay the tax during the time the work shall be so suspended in his distillery.

The distinguished chairman of the Committee on Finance very honestly and candidly admitted his opposition to small distilleries. I suppose it is one of the objects of his bill to tax them out of existence. I, on the contrary, would do all in my power to extend every facility and every support to small distilleries. I do not think this is a just provision; for after a man has once commenced a distillery there is no way in the world by which he can stop the tax unless to kill himself or burn up his distillery. I think it is a more just plan to tax a man while his distillery is in operation and stop the tax when he ceases to distill. A vast number of the small distilleries are unable to meet this tax. A great many men attempt no more than to distill the produce of their own farms; they are not engaged in it more than ninety or one hundred days during the year; and the infliction of such a tax as this would destroy their business altogether. They cannot afford to pay it. Large capitalists might afford to pay ten dollars a day; but the men of this class will be stricken down and destroyed by this clause of the bill under consideration. I do hope that if Senators concur with me in the opinion that it is the weak and the powerless who need support, and not the rich and the powerful, they will come up and vote for the amendment which I propose to this clause of the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I will make a single suggestion in addition to what my colleague has said. It will be observed that this tax of two dollars a day for the time the distillery is suspended is to continue after the distilling season has elapsed. As my colleague said, the distilling season for many small distilleries continues but for a few months; indeed, for the most of it in my section of the country it commences about the 1st of November and ceases about the last of May or June. This provision is that the tax of two dollars a day shall continue during the whole term of the suspension; that is, in the recess of the distilling season. I think that it would at least be proper and right in any view of the subject that the imposition of the two dollars per day for the time the distillery suspended operations should not be continued later than the continuance of the distilling season; that in the interval of time between two seasons at least this tax ought to be suspended.

Mr. SHERMAN. The explanation of all this is that it is only a daily tax on the authorized distiller, who must take out a yearly license. If he runs, he pays four dollars a day. When he does not run, he pays two dollars a day. It is necessary during the time of his yearly authority to have constant watch over his distillery, whether it is running or not, and this tax is simply to pay about the expense of watching, two dollars a day. As a matter of course that expense ought to be paid by him. If he runs, he pays four dollars a day; if he does not, he pays two dollars a day. It is a very small tax, and it is merely intended to be a mode of assessing on him enough money to pay for watching the distillery. That is the substance of it.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCREERY. I have an amendment to offer on the subject of tobacco. It is to insert a proviso to come in after the word "pound," in line eight, section sixty, page 84. The clause now reads:

On snuff, manufactured of tobacco or any substitute for tobacco, ground, dry, damp, pickled, scented, or otherwise, of all descriptions, when prepared for use, a tax of thirty-two cents per pound.

The amendment I offer is to add the following proviso:

Provided, That snuff and smoking tobacco manufactured of tobacco stems shall pay a tax of five cents per pound.

I would remark, in support of this amendment, that since the infliction of the high taxes upon tobacco manufactured in the country, stems, which were a very large item in the receipts of our tobacco-growers, have become almost valueless upon their hands. There is, and can be under this bill; no home demand whatever for the stems taken out of the leaf. The only demand for that article on the face of the earth known to myself is now confined to a single place, Bremen, and Bremen purchases these stems at any price it may choose to offer. They cannot be converted into snuff and they cannot be converted into smoking-tobacco, but they are hauled out and used as manure upon the adjoining farm. No tax whatever is derived from them. No revenue is derived by the Government, and their value in the hands of the owner is almost totally destroyed.

Where a law operates in this way to strike down the value of an article in the hands of the owner without putting a cent into the Treasury, it occurs to my mind that a good, honest policy would indicate the propriety of a change. If you place the tax on stems at five cents a pound, I have no doubt they will go largely into smoking tobacco and into snuff.

But, sir, it occurs to my mind that it is useless to support my view of this matter by any lengthy marks. I have no doubt that any Senator who will give the subject the slightest attention will come to the conclusion that it is the duty of Congress to lessen the taxation upon this article, to put it at an amount at which the owner will realize something, and at which some amount of revenue will be brought into the Treasury.

Mr. SHERMAN. All I can say in reply to the Senator from Kentucky is, that the gradations of snuff, tobacco, and cigars in this bill are fixed, not only after consideration by the committees of the two Houses, but with the assent of the manufacturers and growers of tobacco through their organized committees, and I believe every city and every portion of the interest was represented. There is no tax upon the leaf, the tax is upon the manufactured tobacco; and the very thing that the Senator now proposes to discriminate in favor of, the stems, created a great portion of the alleged frauds under the old system. By this bill the tax on stem tobacco when manufactured is sixteen cents. As a matter of course I should dislike very much to see any amendment adopted that would affect or mar the symmetry of this arrangement. It has been understood and now agreed on by the persons engaged in this business. It would be a very material reduction of the revenue from sixteen to five cents on what are called stems, a very indefinite term, that gave rise to a great many frauds under the existing law.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCREERY. I have one more amendment to offer. Section thirty-four, on page 43, provides:

That it shall be lawful for any revenue officer, and any person acting in his aid, to break up the ground on any part of the distillery or premises of a distiller, rectifier, or compounder of liquors, or any ground adjoining or near to such distillery or premises or any wall or partition thereof, or belonging thereto, or other place, to search for any pipe, cask, private conveyance, or utensil; and upon finding any such pipe or conveyance leading therefrom or thereto, he may break up any ground, house, wall, or other place through or into which such pipe or other conveyance shall lead, and break or cut away such pipe or other conveyance, and turn any cock, or examine whether such pipe or other conveyance may convey or conceal any mash, wort, or beer, or other liquor which may be used for distillation of low wines or spirits from the sight or view of the officer, so as to prevent or hinder him from taking a true account thereof.

I move to add to the section the following proviso:

Provided, That if any revenue officer, or person acting in his aid, shall fail in said search to find any pipe, cock, private conveyance, or utensil, he shall be deemed and held a wrong-doer, and shall be responsible to the party aggrieved in a civil action for such damages as he may have sustained and for such smart-money as the jury may assess.

The object of the amendment is merely to protect the citizen in his rights against unlawful and unnecessary search of his premises, breaking down his walls and tearing up his grounds. It is a very great power to confer by the bill on revenue officers, and I want them to proceed at their peril. If they come to tearing down a man's walls and tearing up his grounds and find nothing I want them to pay for every bit of damage committed there.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to have a verbal amendment made. On page 84, line ten, of section fifty-nine, I move to strike out the words "except retail dealers."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. On page 99, line seventeen, of section seventy-three, I move to strike out the words "manufacturer's warehouse," and insert "manufactory."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time.

Mr. DAVIS. I will say another word on this bill on the question of its passage. It seems to be a part of the same bill that was introduced into the House of Representatives. I am greatly gratified, considering the character of what has come to this body, that the whole bill as it was reported to the House has not been offered here. I think that the bill is framed on this general idea: that the people of the United States exist for no other purpose than to pay taxes, and that the Government of the United States has no function to perform except to offer a scheme for imposing taxes upon every possible article, and establishing the most oppressive and vexatious mode of collecting them. If the bill in all its proportions, in its breadth and length, as introduced into the House, with the two-dollar tax upon whisky, had been presented here, it would have wanted but one or two other provisions to have made it the most completely organized system of despotism that the world has ever seen; and they would be that all of its pains and forfeitures and penalties should be enforced by military commissions, and that those military commissions should be organized by the General of the Army.

I think, Mr. President, the time for the continuance of this system of despotism is drawing to a close, and in that hope I content myself by saying further upon the subject.

Mr. CAMERON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of this bill. I desire to record my vote against it.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken resulted—yeas 35, nays 6; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Cattell, Chandler, Conness, Cragin, Davis, Drake, Ferry, Fessenden, Fowler, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, McGreevy, Morgan, Morrill of Vermont, Osborn, Patterson of New Hampshire, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Thayer, Tipton, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Vickers, Wade, Welch, Willey, Williams, and Wilson—35.

NAYS—Messrs. Cameron, Cole, Edmunds, Morton, Nye, and Pomeroy—6.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Conkling, Corbett, Dixon, Doolittle, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Harlan, Howe, McDonald, Morrill of Maine, Norton, Patterson of Tennessee, Rice, Saulsbury, Sprague, and Yates—17.

So the bill was passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill imposing duties on distilled spirits and tobacco, and for other purposes."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPIERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 542) for the relief of Thomas W. Ward, late collector of customs, district of Corpus Christi, Texas.

The message also announced, that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. No. 107) in relation to the Maquoketa river, in the State of Iowa, with an amendment; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 1376) for the relief of the loyal Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 328) for the donation of certain columns.

THE FUNDING BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now move to take up Senate bill No. 207, which is the funding bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senate bill No. 207, called the funding bill, is before the Senate, it having been included with the tax bill in the resolution making both a special order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask that the funding bill be laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution reported from the Judiciary Committee relating to the counting of the electoral votes. I have been requested by several Senators to call that to the attention of the Senate again, and I ask the Senator from Ohio to allow me to do so.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am perfectly willing, as I am somewhat fatigued at any rate and do not care about going on to-night, to allow the funding bill to go over until to-morrow, and be continued as the special order then at one o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that the funding bill be postponed until to-morrow at one o'clock, and be continued as the special order for that hour.

The motion was agreed to.

MOUNT VERNON LADIES' ASSOCIATION.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I now move to take up the joint resolution to which I have referred; I have forgotten the number of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved to take up the joint resolution (S. R. No. 139) excluding from the Electoral College votes of States lately in rebellion which shall not have been reorganized.

Mr. SUMNER. I do not like to interfere with my friend, but there is business in executive session to which I should like to call the attention of the Senate.

Several SENATORS. Let us take up this resolution now.

Mr. SUMNER. Very well; let the resolution be taken up, and then I will move an executive session.

The motion of Mr. EDMUNDS was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask the honorable member from Vermont to allow me, before this resolution is considered, to call up the bill for the benefit of the Association of Mount Vernon. The objections to it have now been met, and there will be no difficulty and it will lead to no debate. I ask it because I am obliged to leave the Senate to-day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If it will lead to no debate this resolution may be laid aside informally, but if it leads to debate I shall feel obliged to ask the Senate to dispose of this resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the bill mentioned by the Senator from Maryland will be taken up. It can be done by unanimous consent.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 588) for the relief of the Mount Vernon Ladies' Association of the Union.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. JOHNSON,] to insert at the end of the bill the following words:

To be applied to the repairs and preservation of the property under the direction of the military officer in charge of the public buildings and grounds.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

VALEDICTORY OF HON. REVERDY JOHNSON.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I throw myself again upon the indulgence of the honorable member from Vermont and the Senate, as I am obliged to leave the Senate to-day, in order that I may say what I feel in separating myself from the body; but as I am unwilling to trust myself to utter what I really do feel I have reduced to writing what, with the permission of the Senate, I will ask my friend and colleague to read.

Mr. VICKERS read as follows:

Mr. PRESIDENT: May I be excused for arresting for a moment or two, the ordinary business of the Senate, by a few words personal to myself. Having agreed to accept a public trust abroad, committed to me by the President with the approval of the Senate, I am about to resign my seat in this body. Having been a member for nearly six years, and contracted friendships, which have been a constant source of pleasure, and which I shall ever value, I cannot retire without the deepest regret.

During the period of my service a civil war of unexampled magnitude was waged, threatening our national life, and since its successful termination by arms the consequences of the conflict have not wholly disappeared.

In both periods, questions of the greatest importance, involving the powers of the Government, and the reserved rights of the States have been discussed in this Chamber with a solicitude to uphold the Government in all its rightful authority, and to restore the entire country to its wonted prosperity. In these discussions I have more or less participated, and, although widely differing in regard to most of them with a majority of the Senate, and supporting my opinions with earnestness, it will always be a great gratification to me to remember that at all times, by every member, I was treated with uniform courtesy, and I need hardly say, Mr. President, that such courtesy I never failed most gladly to reciprocate.

In the new sphere of public duty which I am about to enter I may find subjects of controversy that for a time (as they have done already) may more or less disturb the friendly relations between the Government of Great Britain and our own. But that this disturbance will be temporary I do not doubt. The interests of both nations are so obviously dependent upon a mutual and friendly understanding that the people of each cannot fail to see the duty of having it observed. And I believe that this can be accomplished by the manifestation of reciprocal good will. As our Government is actuated by such a feeling all the complications of the present will, I am satisfied, soon be removed. And in whatever part, under instructions of the President, I may take in the negotiations preliminary to such a result, I shall be influenced by a sincere wish to secure to both Governments an adjustment honorable to each, and I have every reason to think that I shall be met in the same spirit by the British Government.

In all that I may do I shall look with hope to the approval of my associates in this body. And although I may fail in all respects to meet with it, I cannot be mistaken in thinking that they will do me the justice to believe that I have been governed throughout by an earnest desire to maintain all the rights and promote the interests of our beloved country.

Mr. President, it is not at all probable that I shall ever again be a member of the Senate, and it oppresses me to think that I may not after I leave the country have the pleasure to see again all its members. But I beg you, Mr. President, and them to be assured that whatever distance may separate us I shall never cease gratefully to remember the kindnesses evinced for me in this Chamber, or to hope for the happiness and prosperity of its members.

And when I return from my embassy, I trust and believe there will be an enduring peace between ourselves and the other nations of the world; and this I am sure can be secured by a firm and courteous maintenance of our own rights, and a scrupulous regard for the rights of others. And above all do I trust that all the troubles incident to our recent domestic conflict will then have totally disappeared, and that we shall be in the uninterrupted enjoyment of that "unity of Government," which, in the parting words of Washington, is the main pillar in the edifice of our real independence, the support of our tranquillity at home, our peace abroad, of our safety, of that very liberty which we so highly prize.

These ends being accomplished, imagination itself will be at a loss adequately to conceive the future greatness of our land. And now, Mr. President, I leave the body with but one word more, but a word which to friends it is ever most painful to utter—farewell.

[At the conclusion of the address the Senators rose simultaneously and advanced toward the retiring Senator to grasp him by the hand and wish him success in his new sphere of public duty.]

Mr. BUCKALEW. I move that the Senate adjourn. ["No!" "No!"]

Mr. HENDRICKS. Before that motion is put I suggest whether we had not better suspend the order for the night session.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope we shall not adjourn yet. It is only four o'clock.

Mr. DRAKE. Is the joint resolution that was informally laid aside before the Senate now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question of adjournment is pending. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

ELECTORAL VOTES OF LATE REBEL STATES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. No. 139) excluding from the Electoral College votes of States lately in rebellion which shall not have been reorganized.

Mr. DRAKE. I move to amend the joint resolution by striking out all after the word "that," in the third line, and inserting in lieu thereof:

No State heretofore in insurrection shall be entitled to representation in the Electoral College for the choice of President and Vice President of the United States, nor shall any electoral vote be received or counted from any such time, unless, at the time prescribed by law for the choice of such electors, the State shall have been readmitted to representation in Congress, nor unless the electors shall have been chosen under and by authority of a State government theretofore recognized by Congress as lawful and permanent, and not provisional.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish to offer a substitute for the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that there was an amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. TRUMBULL] which takes precedence of the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. DRAKE.]

Mr. DRAKE. I suppose the honorable Senator from Illinois will agree to allow his amendment to be withdrawn for the purpose of testing the sense of the Senate upon this. I will inquire of the Senator from Illinois, whether he will be so good as to withdraw his amendment to this resolution in order to admit the amendment which I have just presented, and which does not name any State by name?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I suppose that the Senator's amendment is in order as a substitute for the whole. His is a substitute, I understand.

Mr. DRAKE. I have understood that when an amendment to a pending bill was before the Senate, it was not in order to move an amendment by way of substitute, and therefore it is that I ask the honorable Senator from Illinois to withdraw his amendment, which is merely to strike out the names of two States, so that I can offer this amendment.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am willing to accommodate about it. If the Senator's amendment is not in order I will withdraw mine to allow him to offer his.

Mr. DRAKE. Then, sir, my amendment is in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. DRAKE. I will say a few words in support of that amendment. I ask that it be read again before I proceed.

The Chief Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, I ask that the original proposition may be read, so that the Senate may see the difference.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, &c. That the States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Texas, respectively, shall not be entitled to representation in the Electoral College for the choice of President or Vice President of the United States, and no electoral votes shall be received or counted from any of such States unless at the time prescribed by law for the choice of electors the people of such States, pursuant to the acts of Congress in that behalf, shall have, since the 4th day of March, 1867, adopted a constitution of State government under which a State government shall have been organized and shall be in operation, and unless such election of electors shall have been held under the authority of such constitution and government, and such State shall have also become entitled to representation in Congress, pursuant to the acts of Congress in that behalf.

Mr. DRAKE. Mr. President, there are now before the Senate three distinct propositions in reference to this matter. One is the pending resolution; another is the amendment as I have presented it; the third is a joint resolution proposed by the honorable Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] and which lies upon our tables at this time. I object to the first because it names the States, which I do not think is necessary. The proposition that is involved in the amendment which I have offered applies directly to the insurrectionary States. We have been dealing with them in all of our measures of reconstruction. I desire to have this resolution recognize distinctly that it applies to them, and them alone. Therefore it is that I do not desire to see the Senate adopt the joint resolution which has been proposed by the Senator from New York. But it is not yet before us distinctly, because that joint resolution refers to all States, when the whole intention of it is to refer to States that have been in insurrection. As the final winding up of the dealings of Congress with those States is involved in the idea of readmission to representation in Congress, and the reestablishment of governments recognized by Congress, the amendment which I propose exactly accords with that, and I think it is better that in this probably final act of legislation with regard to the most of those States we should preserve the very same line of action that has heretofore characterized the course of Congress. Therefore it is that I propose this amendment, and hope it may be adopted.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish to offer a substitute for both the pending propositions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The substitute will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend that portion of the amendment which proposes to insert words in lieu of words to be stricken out, by striking out after the word "that," in the first line—

Mr. CONKLING. Ah that is unnecessary. I move a substitute for the whole of both pending propositions, to strike out everything after the enacting clause and insert.

Mr. DRAKE. That, if I understand the rule, cannot be done.

Mr. CONKLING. We shall see whether that cannot be done or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not quite in order.

Mr. CONKLING. There is a joint resolution pending to which the Senator from Missouri offers an amendment. He offers no substitute, but he offers an amendment. Now, I offer a substitute for the whole pending proposition, the proposition pending, and the amendment. That is clearly in order, I submit.

Mr. POMEROY. Before you can strike out the whole proposition, if anybody proposes to amend the part proposed to be stricken out, that is first in order.

Mr. CONKLING. He proposes to strike out a part, and I propose a substitute for the whole. I do not care what the form is, but I want it understood that my proposition is complete in itself.

Mr. HOWARD. I ask for the reading of the substitute proposed by the Senator from New York.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That no State shall be entitled to representation in the Electoral College for the choice of President and Vice President of the United States, and no electoral votes shall be received or counted from any State, unless at the time prescribed by law for the choice of electors there shall be in such State a government recognized by Congress as regular and permanent and not provisional, nor unless the election for electors shall have taken place under the authority of a State government so recognized.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Vermont, I believe, wishes to submit some remarks.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, sir; go on. I do not wish to say anything at this moment.

Mr. CONKLING. I will say nothing at this moment beyond this: the proposition, as I make it, is designed to be a permanent law, which I think should always be on the statute-book, a law which covers the present case of three States which have not been readmitted, Mississippi, Texas, and Virginia, which covers any contingency that may arise in reference to any State heretofore in insurrection, and which covers the case of any State, wherever that State may be, in which by invasion, insurrection, domestic or foreign war, a difficulty of this sort shall arise. At this moment this is all I wish to say. Hereafter, I shall have a word to say as between these propositions.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I believe the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. DAVIS] had the floor the other day when this resolution went over, and therefore is now entitled to occupy it. I do not know that he wishes to do so. When the matter went over the other day he had addressed the Chair upon it. I do not wish to take the floor from him.

Mr. DAVIS. I will give place with pleasure to you, and listen to you.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the pending question now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that question I do not wish to occupy but a moment or two of the time of the Senate. It is a question of phraseology, as distinguished from the resolution reported.

On the propriety of the amendment I only wish to say a single word. When we reach the point of the general merit of the proposition I shall have a few words to say in explanation of it and in reply to the honorable Senator from Illinois, [Mr. TRUMBULL,] who addressed the Senate the other day at the end of the morning hour, when there was no opportunity for the friends of the measure to reply to the somewhat extraordinary address that he delivered to the Senate at that time.

This amendment offered by the Senator from New York is intended to accomplish, and I do not know but that it will accomplish, the same result that the joint resolution reported from the committee was intended to accomplish; but it does it by a species of circumlocution. It applies in general on the face of it to all the States. It declares a general proposition, and declares that no State shall be entitled to vote in the presidential election unless it has a government in harmony with the Government of the United States, so to speak, and unless that government is recognized by Congress, and unless the vote shall have been taken under that government. We all understand just as well what that means as if it said it in express terms; and that is, it means, is intended to mean, for the present exigencies of the time, to apply to the ten States which have been in rebellion, whose governments have been overthrown and whose governments, seven of them, have been reorganized—reconstructed, as the common phrase is—upon constitutions that the whole people of those States, with very trifling exceptions, disfranchised for special participancy in rebellion in addition to perjury have set up.

Now, we are both aiming at the same result. We desire to declare, in logical accordance with what we have already done, that the governments in those States and the people in those States whom we recognize are the governments which have been re-founded upon the wreck of the rebellion, and are the whole people of those respective States; and we design to declare that any section or fraction of that people, that body of the people who boast and rally around the name of "the white man's Government," as they choose to call it, the rebellious government, as it might more properly be called, shall not be permitted, against this reorganized Government of the whole people, to undertake to set up an election for President or for anybody else; that is to say, that we mean to stand by the settled order of restoration that has been adopted, and to declare in advance to the rebels in that region that they will not be permitted to present for count, at the next presidential election, electoral votes which shall have been thrown by an organization, by whatever name you call it, existing or to be created, that is founded upon the notion that nobody in those States is entitled to vote but the white men who by the old slave laws of 1860 were allowed to vote; and that no government is entitled to exercise such functions there but the old governments that existed in 1860, or the new governments organized, or attempted to be organized, by the President of the United States in 1865; while at the same time we mean to declare with equal emphasis, that all the white men in those States, (because, as to voting in those States now nobody is disfranchised unless the people themselves disfranchise them,) that all the people of those States may vote for whom they please under the government that has been established. We do not have any desire to limit the free choice of the people of those States for President; we do not propose any legislation which is calculated to limit the free choice of those people; but we propose that their free choice shall be the free choice of the whole people, and the only method by which we can reach the free choice of the whole people is to reach it under and through the forms of a government of the whole people that has now been formed by the whole people. That is the proposition.

The Senator from New York proposes, instead of saying in express terms as applicable to this present exigency, that in those particular States no government is to be recognized by Congress except the governments that the people have freely set up since; to say, in general, that in no State shall any vote be recognized or counted that does not conform to certain conditions. Really, in effect, upon a fair construction, his amendment would reach probably the same result that the joint resolution reported from the committee does; but it is still open to some doubt and cavil. An ingenious man, like my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BUCKALEW,] or the honorable Senator from Indiana who is not in his seat, [Mr. HENDRICKS,] might discover next February, when we come to count these votes, that under this general clause there were some governments there that had been recognized by Congress at some time, that had been founded before the 4th of March, 1867. Therefore, without going any further into this general question than merely to have stated the proposition, I should hope that the Senate would be willing to say, if it is to say anything—and it is very important for the peace of the country that we should say something—exactly what it means; that in these ten States, naming them, the governments that Congress recognizes are the governments that the whole people of those States have set up under the authority of Congress since the rebellion. That is the whole effect of the proposition.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, I think on this subject we cannot be too specific; we cannot be too clear, and we ought not to attempt to create any fog or uncertainty as to what governments in the insurrectionary States are entitled to be represented in the Electoral College. It seems to me that the amendment offered by the honorable Senator from New York approaches the subject with somewhat too much caution. He treads as with a velvet step; as if he was moved by some apprehension that we should utter something in our statutes unkind in reference to those States. Sir, I have no such fear or apprehension.

As long ago as 1861, by a solemn act of Congress, the President of the United States, acting in pursuance of that statute, declared the States specifically named in this joint resolution to be in a condition of insurrection. We went to war under that proclamation, and from that day to this those States have been regarded, so far as the legislation of Congress is concerned, as insurrectionary States, with the exception of such of them as have been admitted to the right of representation in Congress.

We did not hesitate, when we passed the first reconstruction act, to designate by name the States of the Union to which that statute applied. Why should we hesitate now? Why should we not say, in so many words, that those insurrectionary States which have not embraced the privileges extended to them by our reconstruction acts shall not be recognized as possessing the right of voting at the next presidential election? I think the plainer we write down our sentiments and opinions in our statutes the better it is for us and for whomsoever the statutes may affect.

Now, sir, we are in danger, if I have a correct prevision, of having difficulty in the insurrectionary States at the approaching presidential election. We all know that at the present time there is in each of those States a sort of dual government, one State government having been inaugurated under the proclamation of the President, and in others a government organized or in the process of organization under the reconstruction laws. We know perfectly well that President Johnson regards the latter description of governments as being utterly unconstitutional and void. We know that he is of the opinion that the governments which he inaugurated and launched into being by virtue of his own ipse dixit and his own imperial decrees are the constitutional governments of those States, and that his purpose is, so far as practicable, to maintain and uphold those governments.

Now, sir, we may have such a state of things as this in some of those States, perhaps in more than one of them: we may have electors of President elected under and by virtue of the Johnson constitution, to use that expression for the sake of brevity, and another set of presidential electors elected under the reconstruction acts of Congress, and in pursuance of constitutions adopted under those acts. It will be insisted by the Democratic party, if I judge the signs of the times correctly, that the electors chosen under the Johnson constitution are the only persons to be admitted into the College of Electors. Those electors will be chosen by the original electors in the States, qualified as such, not by law, but by the decree of Andrew Johnson. They will represent the "white man's government," so to speak, and it will be insisted by the whole Democratic party that those electors, and those only, are entitled to give the electoral votes of the State; while, on the other hand, it will be insisted by the friends of reconstruction that those electors have no rights, and that electors chosen under the reconstruction acts are the proper and lawful electors.

In order to remove, therefore, all uncertainty, all disputation, and all cavil as to the kind of electors for President and Vice President whose votes are to be counted, I prefer a clear, positive, unequivocal declaration that electors chosen under any other constitutions than those inaugurated under the reconstruction acts shall not be recognized by Congress as proper electors. Let us be clear and distinct. I have no fear of this issue. It is an issue, or it may become an issue, I am quite aware, attended with great danger, with great agitation to the country, with marked party divisions, and with party bitterness such as we have not seen since the war itself was flagrant and blazing into the skies.

I prefer the language of this joint resolution to anything which has been suggested. It makes the way clear, it expresses the purposes of Congress distinctly, and it designates by name the States to which it is to apply. We know very well that it cannot apply to any other States than those mentioned in this joint resolution, and we know that it is intended to apply to those States and to those only. Then why not say so?

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I do not rise so much to discuss the merits of these several propositions as to say that I shall vote for that offered by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] believing that it is more specific and direct than the other two; but perhaps any one of them would answer the purpose.

I desire, however, to say one word in regard to the importance of this measure. We have been noting the proceedings of a convention held in the city of New York, which has but just adjourned. I have read the resolutions adopted by that convention, the platform of principles it has laid down, and upon which its candidates have been placed; and I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the issue that is presented to the country by this platform and by the character of these candidates.

General Grant, in his letter of acceptance, said, "Let us have peace;" but the Democratic party by their convention in New York have said, "Let us have war; there shall be no peace." They have declared in substance, I might say, perhaps, in direct terms, that the reconstruction of these States under the several acts of Congress shall not be permitted to stand, but shall be overturned by military force if they get the power. They have announced that there shall be no peace in this country; that there shall be no settlement of our troubles except upon the condition of the triumph of those who have been in rebellion. This platform and these nominations are a declaration of renewal of the rebellion. Let me call your attention to a part of the eighth resolution in regard to this very question. In speaking of the reconstruction of the States, they go on to say that the power to regulate suffrage exists with "each State," making no difference between loyal States that have been at peace and States that have been in rebellion, putting them all upon the same footing:

"And that any attempt by Congress on any pretext whatever—"

That is, upon the "pretext" of the rebellion, if you please—

"to deprive any State of this right, or interfere with its exercise, is a flagrant usurpation of power which can find no warrant in the Constitution; and, if sanctioned by the people, will subvert our form of Government."

They declare that the interference of Congress with suffrage in States that have been in rebellion, though that interference may be absolutely necessary, as we have found it, to the reconstruction of the States, is unconstitutional, that no justification can be found for it, and that it will subvert our form of government.

Mr. HOWARD. Read the rest of it.

Mr. MORTON. Yes, sir, I will read the balance of it:

"And can only end in a single centralized and consolidated Government, in which the separate existence of the States will be entirely absorbed, and an unequalled despotism be established in place of a Federal Union of coequal States, and that we regard the reconstruction acts (so called) of Congress, as such are usurpations and unconstitutional, revolutionary, and void."

This convention has called upon the rebels of the South to regard these governments organized by authority of acts of Congress by the people of those States as usurpations, unconstitutional, and void, and has thereby invited them again to insurrection and rebellion. That is what that resolution means. There is where the Democratic party has placed itself and its candidate, that there shall be no acquiescence in the action of Congress, but that continued resistance is and shall be their policy. They have replied to General Grant by saying, "There shall be no peace, but the war shall be renewed." There can be no other policy for that party unless it acquiesces. If it does not accept these reconstruction acts there can be no policy but that of resistance and a renewal of the war. They declare these reconstruction acts to be unconstitutional and void. Being void, nobody is bound to regard them; they have no authority over any one to coerce or to punish, and may be resisted by any one with impunity. That is not the language of this resolution, but it is the substance and the meaning of it; and in consequence of this it received the indorsement and the approbation of the hundreds of rebels who were in that convention from the South, men who organized the rebel government and organized and led the rebel armies in battle. This, then, is the issue, a continuance of the war; a renewal of the rebellion; because it is either that, or it is submission and acquiescence to what has been done.

But, Mr. President, we are not left to grope for the meaning of this convention; we are not left even to seek for it by inference. We have a letter of General Francis P. Blair, written, I believe, less than one week ago, and this letter has been indorsed by that convention this afternoon by his nomination as their candidate for the Vice Presidency. At least I am informed that he has been nominated.

Mr. POMEROY. Let us have the letter read. I want to hear it.

Mr. MORTON. It is as much a part of this platform as if it was incorporated in it, for the ink was hardly dry before it was indorsed by his nomination. I ask the Secretary to read the clause of this letter that I have marked.

Mr. CONKLING, Mr. POMEROY, and others. Let him read the whole letter, so that it can go into the Globe.

Mr. MORTON. I will ask the Secretary to read the whole letter, especially that which is distinctly marked.

Several SENATORS. Let us have the whole letter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, June 30, 1868.

DEAR COLONEL: In reply to your inquiries I beg leave to say that I leave to you to determine, on consultation with my friends from Missouri, whether my name shall be presented to the Democratic convention, and to submit the following, as what I consider the real and only issue in this contest:

The reconstruction policy of the Radicals will be complete before the next election; the States long excluded will have been admitted; negro suffrage established and the carpet-baggers installed in their seats in both branches of Congress. There is no possibility of changing the political character of the Senate, even if the Democrats should elect their President and a majority of the popular branch of Congress. We cannot, therefore, undo the Radical plan of reconstruction by congressional action; the Senate will continue a bar to its repeal. Must we submit to it? How can it be overturned? It can only be overturned by the authority of the Executive who is sworn to maintain the Constitution, and who will fail to do his duty if he allows the Constitution to perish under a series of congressional enactments which are in palpable violation of its fundamental principles.

If the President elected by the Democracy enforces or permits others to enforce these reconstruction acts, the Radicals by the accession of twenty spurious Senators and fifty Representatives will control both branches of Congress, and his administration will be as powerless as the present one of Mr. Johnson.

There is but one way to restore the Government and the Constitution, and that is for the President-elect to declare these acts null and void, compel the Army to undo its usurpations at the South, disperse the carpet-bag State governments, allow the white people to reorganize their own governments, and elect Senators and Representatives. The House of Representatives will contain a majority of Democrats from the North, and they will admit the Representatives elected by the white people of the South, and with the cooperation of the President it will not be difficult to compel the Senate to submit once more to the obligations of the Constitution. It will not be able to withstand the public judgment, if distinctly invoked and clearly expressed on this fundamental issue, and it is the sure way to avoid all future strife to put the issue plainly to the country.

I repeat that this is the real and only question which we should allow to control us: shall we submit to the usurpations by which the Government has been overthrown, or shall we exert ourselves for its full and complete restoration? It is idle to talk of bonds, greenbacks, gold, the public faith, and the public credit. What can a Democratic President do in regard to any of these with a Congress in both branches controlled by the carpet-baggers and their allies? He will be powerless to stop the supplies by which idle negroes are organized into political clubs, by which an army is maintained to protect these vagabonds in their outrages upon the ballot. These and things like these, eat up the revenues and resources of the Government and destroy its credit—make the difference between gold and greenbacks. We must restore the Constitution before we can restore the finances, and to do this we must have a President who will execute the will of the people by tramping into dust the usurpation of Congress, known as the reconstruction acts. I wish to stand before the convention upon this issue, but it is one which embraces everything else that is of value in its large and comprehensive results. It is the one thing that includes all that is worth a contest, and without it there is nothing that gives dignity, honor, or value to the struggle.

Your friend,
FRANK P. BLAIR,
Colonel JAMES O. BROADHEAD.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, that is the Democratic platform: General Blair, whatever you may say of him, is a bold, outspoken man, and he spoke the sentiment of that convention. He says, "Upon these sentiments I want to stand before the convention;" and upon those sentiments he was nominated. Therefore, I say that the language of the Democratic convention at New York to the whole country is war; resistance by force of arms to congressional legislation; the overthrow by force of arms of the governments that have been erected in the rebel States under the laws enacted by Congress; the continuance of this rebellion; continuance of this struggle in a somewhat different form, but still the same struggle, contending for the same principles. It is now announced formally, not at Montgomery, not at Richmond, but at New York. The country need not be at any loss to understand the character of the contest upon which we are entering. It is not one of peace and acquiescence, of consolidation whereby the ravages of war may be repaired; but it is a new declaration of war; a new announcement of the rebellion under somewhat different circumstances, but under circumstances formidable, dangerous, and solemn. Let the country look the struggle in the face.

General Blair has said truly that all that is said about greenbacks and bonds and questions of finance is mere nonsense. The great issue is the question of overturning the new State governments by force, the restoration of the power of the rebels, or as they call it the white men's government in those States; and all the rest is leather and prunella. We owe a debt of gratitude to General Blair for his frankness. There need be no deception practiced now, and there can be none. There can be no other issue presented substantially to us but that of the future peace of this country. If Seymour shall be elected upon that platform he stands pledged to use the Army of the United States for the purpose of overturning the governments that have been established in the South by the voice of the whole people, and by that Army to place the power back again into the hands of the rebels. They were there with him in that convention. They have given to him their counsel. They have indorsed Mr. Seymour, and the convention and all have indorsed General Francis P. Blair.

I know that we shall be told in the Northwest that they intend to have the same currency for the Government and the people, for the bondholder and the laborer. They will proclaim taxation of the bonds as the great issue upon which they expect to get votes; but that will all be a deception. The great issue underlying the whole contest—and we have the solemn declaration of their candidate for Vice President to that effect—will be the renewal of the war to overturn the State governments that have just been established under the acts of Congress. General Blair has relieved the Republican party of a great deal of labor. He has unmasked the enemy with whom we have to deal, and he has placed before the country the very issue, peace or war.

Mr. SHERMAN. There are now but fifteen minutes left before the time fixed for a recess, and I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. There is some executive business that must be transacted.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before the doors are closed, the Chair will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. No. 420) to incorporate the Connecticut Avenue and Park Railway Company in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 650) to amend act of 3d March, 1865, providing for the construction of certain wagon-roads in Dakota Territory; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1068) to provide for certain claims against the Department of Agriculture.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 844) to incorporate the Washington Target-Shooting Association in the District of Columbia.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by President pro tempore of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 542) for the relief of Thomas W. Ward, collector of customs at Corpus Christi, Texas; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1156) authorizing the Commissioner of the General Land Office to issue a patent to F. N. Blake for one hundred and sixty acres of land in Kansas.

WASHINGTON TARGET ASSOCIATION.

Mr. HARLAN. I hope the Senate will recede from its amendment to the bill which has just been returned to us from the House.

Mr. SHERMAN. You can do that in the morning.

Mr. HARLAN. It will not take a minute.

Mr. POMEROY. Let the title of the bill be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill H. R. No. 844) to incorporate the "Washington Target Shooting Association" in the District of Columbia.

Mr. HARLAN. I will state that the Senate amended it by fixing the maximum capital at $50,000. The bill itself fixed it at $100,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. If it takes no time I will not object.

Mr. HARLAN. It will take no time. I move that the Senate recede from its amendment.

Mr. CONKLING. Is not this the amendment confining the transfer of real estate to the purposes of the bill?

Mr. HARLAN. No; it merely fixes the maximum amount of capital the corporation may hold

Mr. CONKLING. Let us hear it read.

Mr. SHERMAN. I object to it. It will come up in the morning hour in the regular way. I desire an executive session for a particular purpose.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate thereupon proceeded to the consideration of executive business; and at five o'clock the doors were reopened, and the Senate took a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 1876) for the relief of the loyal Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 238) for the donation of certain columns was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

DAMAGED ARMS AND ORDNANCE.

Mr. WILSON. The Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 292) directing the Secretary of War to sell damaged or unserviceable arms, ordnance, and ordnance stores, direct me to report it back without amendment and recommend its passage. I ask that it be considered now.

By unanimous consent the joint resolution (H. R. No. 292) directing the Secretary of War to sell damaged or unserviceable arms, ordnance, and ordnance stores, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of War to cause to be sold, after offer at public sale on thirty days' notice, in such manner and at such times and places, at public or private sale, as he may deem most advantageous to the public interest, the old cannon, arms, and other ordnance stores in possession of the War Department which are damaged or otherwise unsuitable for the United States military service, or for the militia of the United States, and to cause the net proceeds of such sales, after paying all proper expenses of sale and transportation to the place of sale, to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I should like to understand whether the resolution applies to arms now on hand only, or does it confer a general power in all future time.

Mr. WILSON. I understand it to apply to such as we have on hand.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Then it should say so. Let it be read again.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I move to insert the word "now" before the words "in possession."

Mr. WILSON. I have no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time. The resolution was read the third time, and passed.

KANSAS MILITARY EXPENSES.

Mr. WILSON. I move to take up Senate bill No. 214, to authorize the settlement of certain claims of the State of Kansas. It provides for a commission to examine the subject and report to Congress.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 214) to authorize the Secretary of War to settle the claims of the State of Kansas for services of the militia called out by the Governor of that State, upon the requisition of Major General Curtis, the commander of the United States forces in that State, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia proposed to amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting:

That immediately upon the passage of this act the President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, two commissioners not residents of the State of Kansas, and shall detail one Army officer, whose duty it shall be to examine and audit the accounts of the State of Kansas for moneys expended in payment of the expenses of the militia called into service by order of the Governor upon the requisition of Major General Curtis, in 1864, to repel the invasion of General Price.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the commissioners so appointed shall proceed, subject to regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of War, at once to examine all the items of expenditure made by said State for the purposes herein named, allowing only for disbursements made and amounts assumed by the State for enrolling, equipping, subsisting, transporting, and paying such troops as were called into service by the Governor at the request of the United States department commander commanding the district in which Kansas may at the time have been included, or by the express order, consent, or concurrence of such commander, or which may have been employed or used in suppressing rebellion in said State. And no allowance shall be made for any troops which did not perform actual military service in full concert and cooperation with the authorities of the United States, and subject to their orders.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That in making up said account the commissioners shall state separately the amounts expended, respectively, for enrolling, equipping, arming, subsisting, transporting, and paying said troops; and they shall not allow for any expenditure or compensation for service at a rate greater than was at the time authorized by the laws of the United States and the regulations prescribed by the Secretary of War in similar cases; nor shall such compensation embrace a longer period than thirty days' service in any case.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That as soon as said commissioners shall have made up said account and ascertained the balance, as herein directed, they shall make written report thereof, showing the different items of expenditure as hereinbefore stated, to Congress for final action.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the commissioners to be appointed as aforesaid shall, before proceeding to the discharge of their duties, be sworn that they will carefully examine the accounts existing between the United States and the State of Kansas, and that they will, to the best of their ability, make a just, true, and impartial statement thereof, as required by this act. They shall receive such compensation for their services as may be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, not exceeding ten dollars per day for each commissioner. And the amount necessary to defray said expenses and the award made by the commissioners, not to exceed $259,000, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate, as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. POMEROY. I believe the Senator from Massachusetts reported this bill with an appropriation of $259,000. That is the limit, including the expenses of the commission. They cannot go beyond $259,000.

Mr. WILSON. They can report anywhere within the limit of $259,000.

Mr. POMEROY. The State has assumed a much larger amount.

Mr. WILSON. I know the claim is larger.

Mr. POMEROY. But as this is the amount that has passed the Senate once or twice I make no objection.

Mr. WILSON. We think it better to limit them to that amount; we do not want to throw the whole thing open.

Mr. POMEROY. I am willing that the bill should pass in this shape, as it has passed the Senate once or twice before. Indeed, I am very anxious that it should pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed. Its title was amended to read, "A bill to authorize the settlement of the claims of the State of Kansas for services of the militia called out by the Governor of that State, upon the requisition of Major General Curtis, to repel the invasion of General Price."

ARMY RULES AND ARTICLES.

Mr. WILSON. I move to take up the bill establishing rules and articles for the government of the armies of the United States. We nearly completed it some days ago, and I desire now to make a few small amendments.

The motion was agreed to; and the consideration of the bill (S. No. 529) establishing rules and articles for the government of the armies of the United States, was resumed as in Committee of the Whole, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. BUCKALEW, to insert after the words "within the theater of war," in the second line of the twelfth article, the words "and where the civil tribunals cannot act;" so as to make the article read:

In time of war or insurrection military commissions may be constituted, and shall, within the theater of war and where the civil tribunals cannot act, have jurisdiction, &c.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I had the impression that an amendment had been offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. FERRY] that was designed as a substitute for that proposition, and which was more agreeable to the views of gentlemen on all sides of the Chamber, though I have forgotten what it was.

Mr. WILSON. I have the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut, but I have shown it to the Senator from Pennsylvania, and he expresses his non-concurrence with it. I wish now to make a statement to the Senate in regard to this bill. I understand that the Military Committee in the House of Representatives have to-morrow in that House for their business. I was told so by the chairman of the committee yesterday, and they are very anxious to have this bill reach them so that they may act upon it. Situated as we are to-night, I am willing to let this section go out of the bill in order to get it to the other House and let them fix it as they please. If the Senator will agree to that course, I think it will be better, as probably the House of Representatives will have no other day but to-morrow to act on it.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The section to which the Senator refers I suppose is not at all necessary to the general scope and purpose of the bill. I think, therefore, it might be omitted without impairing the bill materially. It is simply declaratory. I was going to observe that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THAYER] intended to make a motion to strike out one of the later articles.

Mr. WILSON. He moved an amendment in regard to regular Army officers.

Mr. BUCKALEW. He intended to move to strike out the article which gave jurisdiction to military courts and commission over teamsters and contractors.

Mr. WILSON. I really think if the Senator from Nebraska were here he would not press that matter. It does seem to me that these teamsters, above all men, ought to be under the control of military tribunals.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I will not make it a point against the bill.

Mr. WILSON. I will let the twelfth article go out in order to get the bill to the other House.

Mr. BUCKALEW. In the latter part of the ninety-seventh article the words "or military commissions" are used in connection with "courts-martial." It will be necessary now to omit those words, and then the matter will be left to military courts.

Mr. WILSON. Well, I will agree to that. I propose to strike out, in line eight of article ninety-seven, the words "or military commissions." That will leave the persons covered by that article to be tried by court-martial.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I desire now to move an amendment, which is a mere matter of form. In the eighty-first article, after the word "any," in the sixth line, I move to insert "corps or staff department;" so as to read: "Brevet rank shall not take effect in any corps or staff department, regiment, troop, or company," &c. These words are left out by mistake originally.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. In article eighty-two, after the word "officers," in the fourth line, I move to insert the words "unless such officers are at the time in command of their own or other troops." It is a mere matter of form.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I now make a formal motion to amend the bill by striking out the twelfth article, the one referring to military commissions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

JOHN POTTS.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I move to take up the bill reported by the Committee on Claims for the relief of John Potts.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 595) for the relief of John Potts was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment of $3,500 to John Potts, chief clerk of the Department of War, for services as disbursing clerk from 1861 to July 1, 1868, and declares that it shall be lawful hereafter to pay the disbursing clerk of the Department of War the sum of $200 yearly in addition to his salary, whether such officer shall have been appointed from the clerks of class four or from a higher grade, any existing law to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. There is a written report; but I can state the case more briefly, I think, than it is stated in the report. Mr. Potts has performed the duties not only of chief clerk but of disbursing clerk of the War Department ever since 1861, and has disbursed very large and extraordinary sums for that Department, amounting in all to something like nine million dollars. The labor has been very severe, and it has been performed with great faithfulness and accuracy; and yet, because he was chief clerk, he could draw no pay for it. The law existing on this subject confines the appointment of disbursing clerks to clerks of the fourth class who receive a salary of $1,800 per annum. I suppose that Mr. Potts has really saved the Government the expense of an extra clerk. The claim is recommended by the various Secretaries of War. When General Cameron was Secretary he sent a communication to the other House asking that the law be changed so that payment might be made, and Secretary Stanton has also asked that the claim be paid.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I desire to ask the Senator what the compensation of this chief clerk is?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. His salary is $2,000 as chief clerk. This bill allows a compensation of $500 a year as disbursing clerk up to the present time and hereafter of $200.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UTAH DISTRICT COURTS.

Mr. COLLE. I move to take up Senate bill No. 576, which was reported a day or two ago from the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 576) relating to the district courts of Utah Territory was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the Governor of Utah Territory, shall assign the district judges of that Territory to their respective districts, and appoint the time and place of holding court in each of the districts.

The Committee on the Judiciary proposed to amend the bill by adding, "not exceeding two terms in each district in any one year."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

PORT GRATIOT RESERVATION.

Mr. HOWARD. I move to take up House bill No. 550, providing for the sale of a portion of the Fort Gratiot reservation in Michigan. It is a local bill that has passed the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. No. 550) providing for the sale of a portion of the Fort Gratiot military reservation in St. Clair county, in the State of Michigan, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The Secretary of War is to be authorized to sell, at such times as he may deem most advantageous to the interest of the Government, and in such manner as hereinafter provided, all that portion of the military reservation known as Fort Gratiot, in St. Clair county, in the State of Michigan, which lies south of a line running due west from the south end of the Grand Trunk railroad wharf, on the St. Clair river, until it intersects the road known as the Lexington road and all that portion which lies west of the Lexington road. All that portion of these lands which lies east of a line running due south from the point of intersection with the Lexington road is to be divided into blocks and lots of convenient size for building purposes, with public streets conforming as near as may be, without detriment to the interests of the Government or the State, to the public streets of the city of Port Huron, adjoining such ground, and sold by lots at public auction, at the city of Port Huron, to the highest bidder, public notice of such sale having first been given for thirty days by advertisement in all the papers published in the city of Port Huron, and in at least two papers published in the city of Detroit, Michigan. A plat of this division, made in accordance with the laws of the State of Michigan, is to be filed with the register of deeds of the county of St. Clair. The remaining portion of the military reservation, for the sale of which provision is made, is to be sold at public auction at the city of Port Huron, after due notice, at such times and in such parcels as may be deemed most advantageous to the interest of the Government, by the Secretary of War. The proceeds arising from the sale are to be paid into the Treasury of the United States in the same manner as the proceeds from the sale of other public lands.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

O. N. CUTLER.

Mr. HOWE. I move to take up Senate bill No. 591.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 591) for the relief of O. N. Cutler was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate to O. N. Cutler the sum of $50,000, in full compensation for two hundred and sixty-eight bales of cotton seized by order of General Ulysses S. Grant, at Lake Providence, Louisiana, the property of Cutler, and used for military purposes in equipping the steamer Tigress, for running the blockade of the Mississippi river, at Vicksburg, in the month of April, 1863, and destroyed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That bill appropriates $50,000, and I think it needs some consideration. I examined the report this morning, and I was not quite satisfied that a bill of that description ought to pass at all. It simply amounts to paying for property that was taken in the southern States for the necessities of the war. The question is presented to us in this bill whether or not we will adopt the policy of paying in the southern States for property that was taken for the purpose of prosecuting the war.

Mr. HOWE. I did not suppose there would be any objection to the bill; there was none in committee; but the Senate is very thin, and I do not want it considered now if there is any objection to it. I move to postpone the bill until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC LANDS IN UTAH.

Mr. POMEROY. I move to take up for consideration House bill No. 202.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 202) to create the office of surveyor general in the Territory of Utah, and establish a land office in said Territory, and extend the homestead and preemption laws over the same, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The first section proposes to authorize the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint a surveyor general for the Territory of Utah, whose annual salary shall be $3,000, and whose power, authority, and duties shall be the same as those provided by law for the surveyor general of Oregon. He shall have proper allowances for clerk hire, office rent, and fuel, not exceeding what is now allowed by law to the surveyor general of Oregon.

The second section provides that the public land within the Territory of Utah, to which the Indian title is or shall be extinguished, shall constitute a new land district, to be called the Utah district; and the President is to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a register and receiver of public money for that district, who shall be required to reside at the places at which said offices shall be located, and shall have the same powers, perform the same duties, and be entitled to the same compensation as are or may be prescribed by law in relation to land offices of the United States in other Territories.

By the third section the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to locate the offices of surveyor general and register and receiver of public moneys at some suitable place or places in the Territory.

The fourth section extends the preemption and homestead and other laws applicable to the disposal of the public lands over the district.

The Committee on Public Lands proposed to amend the bill in section two by striking out the word "land," in line one, and inserting "lands of the United States," and by striking out in lines two and three the words "to which the Indian title is or shall be extinguished;" so as to make the section read:

That the public lands of the United States within said Territory of Utah still constitute a new land district, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section four, line two, to strike out the word "homestead," and after "laws," in the same line, to insert the words "of the United States;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the preemption, homestead, and other laws of the United States applicable to the disposal of the public lands are hereby extended over said district.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ELECTORAL VOTES OF LATE REBEL STATES.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now I ask that the business regularly before the Senate may be proceeded with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution (S. R. No. 139) excluding from the Electoral College votes of States lately in rebellion which shall not have been reorganized is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The question being put, there was one vote in the affirmative.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I believe the question pending is on the amendment of the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] who is absent this evening. It is not possible, therefore, to have an explanation from him of his particular proposition in contrast with the original measure and the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. DRAKE,] but as I desire to say a few words generally upon the subject involved in the measure, I suppose I had best seize the present occasion, as we are approaching the end of the session, and I am very anxious to do no single act which shall delay the arrival of that much wished for day.

Mr. DAVIS. If the honorable Senator will permit me I desire to make a suggestion. I want to go to my room because I have a very sick headache. I desire to speak some twenty or thirty minutes on the subject. If the understanding should be to-night that I shall have that opportunity in the morning, I have no objection to this matter going on; but I do not feel well enough to remain here and say what little I have to say on this subject to-night, and I therefore would prefer that gentlemen should understand that the question will not be pressed before morning.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is perfectly obvious that it would be useless to press the question to-night as there is no quorum to-night, and at this hour it is not at all likely that there will be. I feel authorized for one, therefore, to say to the Senator from Kentucky that I shall not ask the Senate to vote to-night in the absence of a quorum, as there is not a quorum present now.

Mr. DAVIS. That is entirely satisfactory to me. I withdraw the motion I made.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Before speaking on this subject I should like to know which one of the three propositions that have been presented to our attention is the result of the caucus consultation among the majority of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What did I understand the Senator to say?

Mr. BUCKALEW. I should like to know which one of the three propositions is acceptable to or accepted by the majority of the Senate upon consultation among themselves. It is hardly necessary to expend logic upon the two propositions which are not likely to obtain assent in that quarter. As the thermometer is now at a very high figure, it would, indeed, be a very bad expenditure of energy and time. I should like, therefore, to confine myself to the one proposition which has a sanction or some pretense of sanction before it comes up regularly for debate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should be very happy, for one, to gratify the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania if I was any wiser upon that subject than he is; but inasmuch as the Republican party always acts from the individual judgment of its members, and the Democratic party never does, and the Republican party therefore generally divides, and the Democratic party never does, and inasmuch as there has been no consultation on this subject, I must leave it to the genius of my friend to discover which he thinks is most likely to be acceptable to Republicans.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORRIS,] this afternoon argued at great length to convince the Senate that the expressed opinion of one individual member of the Democratic party was the platform of the party. He went to the extent of having such an expression of opinion read by the Chief Clerk of the Senate and sent forth to the country. Now, the Senator from Vermont lays down a very different doctrine. He insists that the opinions of an individual member of a party go for nothing.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Of the Republican party, I said.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Of the Republican party? I suppose the same principles of reasoning will apply to one political organization that do to another.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not by any means.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Human nature will be very much the same however men may be arranged under particular party names or designations.

Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana this afternoon exhibited a degree of zeal and promptness in the performance of public duty which entitles him, perhaps, to some words of commendation, even from one who does not ordinarily think with him or act with him in public affairs. We received somewhere about two o'clock this afternoon by telegraph the announcement of the nominations made at New York. Thereupon the Senator from Indiana was found upon his feet before five o'clock with a regular piece of declamation, eloquent in its terms, and earnest in its delivery, against one of the candidates. Within one hundred and fifty minutes after the nominations took place in the city of New York the Senator from Indiana was upon duty. He is in the advance guard and may be put down in the political history of the country as having made the opening speech of the campaign of 1868. He made it under somewhat unfavorable circumstances, without the opportunity of much previous deliberation, when the temperature was exceedingly inconvenient, and when the Senate itself was much fatigued.

The Senator from Indiana, instead of commencing with the chief candidate put in nomination at New York, flies at humbler game. He selects the gentleman who has been named for the office of Vice President for the advantage or the disadvantage—which ever it may be—of his criticism and censure. He had read and sent forth to the country a letter written by that gentleman recently, giving his expression of individual opinion as to the proper course to be pursued by the successful candidate for the Presidency of the United States; that he should repudiate the legislation of Congress on the subject of reconstruction, that he should hold it as invalid, and by an energetic exercise of popular and of legal power with which he would be clothed in consequence of his election defeat what has been done and send back this subject of reconstruction in the southern country for another determination by the people concerned. The Senator had that letter read, and then he announced to us and to the country that that was the platform of the Democratic party. It was a little unfortunate that, after he had taken here that ground, his friend, the Senator from Vermont, to-night asserts a very different doctrine, namely, that a party is not bound by the expression of opinion which may proceed from an individual member. I beg to tell the Senator from Indiana that that letter was written by General Blair as a declaration of his own individual opinion. It was so expressly declared, and it is most clearly so to be taken. He announced his ground as a candidate for the presidential nomination. He was not, however, nominated for that office, and his declaration of opinion looking to such nomination may be held as of little consequence. Now, sir, what the Senator should look to when he is concerning himself with the platform of the political organization to which he is opposed, is the official record as made up by the nominating convention.

Mr. STEWART. I should be very much gratified to learn if you indorse that platform?

Mr. BUCKALEW. I will answer the Senator's question in due time; I am now attending to the Senator from Indiana. The Senator from Indiana, by referring to what was done by the convention at New York when its proceedings come before him, will find that there was a platform adopted by the convention for itself. It took no man's individual opinions and indorsed them; it received no letter as official and authoritative exposition of its doctrine, of its faith, of its opinions, or of its future policy. It made its own platform, full and complete, upon all the leading questions which are now before the country in our political discussions; and by referring to that platform the Senator can get a distinct understanding of the various points of debate which will be considered in the coming campaign.

As to the personal opinions of General Blair himself, he is competent to answer. It is not incumbent upon me, it is not incumbent upon the Democratic party, to answer for him. He gave an expression of his opinion of what would be inexpedient in a certain future contingency. What he and the mass of those concerned in the nominations at New York agree upon is this: that the legislation of Congress for the reorganization of the southern States is not warranted by the Constitution of the United States; that by that instrument Congress has no power to prescribe the rule of suffrage in any one of the States; that Congress has no power to admit a State to representation in Congress upon conditions or terms relating to suffrage or relating to anything else which belongs to State policy alone; that Congress has no power to admit a State to representation in Congress upon fundamental conditions which shall place that State on a different footing from the other States which compose the American Union; that Congress has no power by the establishment of military authority in a State, superseding all civil authority and civil power, to organize after its own fashion and according to its own pleasure the civil institutions of a State. Much more, and beyond all this, that it is beyond any possible construction of the Constitution that Congress shall admit States as it has admitted the States of Arkansas and Alabama, with, in the one case, a constitution rejected under the very law which authorized the proceeding of reconstruction, and, in the other case, a constitution manifestly rejected by a popular vote of the people, and only sent here and approved by Congress because a mass of between two and three thousand utterly illegal votes were taken during a protracted period of some eighteen days by certain election officers in that State.

Upon all these various matters pointing to the invalidity of that scheme of reconstruction which has been adopted by Congress and pursued by it down to this time, all parties concerned in the convention in New York and all who agree with them in opinion stand upon common ground; and that agreement and that opinion are expressed in the platform which was adopted. But as to a question in the future, as to what should be or what may be done after a presidential election shall have taken place and some man shall have been elected to the presidential office by virtue of Democratic votes, there is no decision and there is no position taken; and manifestly this arises from the very necessity of the case. It is impossible that a large association of men concerned in the business of making a nomination should now foresee what will be the condition of the country at that future time. It is impossible now to foresee what States will vote for the respective candidates who will be before the people for their support. It is impossible to foresee what will be the course of electoral action in the southern States themselves. In short, it is impossible now to take into account or even to conceive in an intelligible manner all the mass of facts and circumstances which will surround this question of reconstruction after the election in November next, much less to conceive how they will stand subsequently after Congress shall have reassembled and after further measures shall have been passed by it upon this subject. I take it for granted that the majority in Congress are not done with this question of reconstruction; they will be found enacting laws upon it next winter as they have been engaged in enacting such laws for several winters and for several sessions past. Now, then, from the very necessity of the case a large body of men, looking to the present condition of things and concerned in their platform only with the declaration of general principles and with general views upon public policy, could not specifically state to the country, nor was it expected that they should, what particular line of action they would adopt next year if successful at the coming election. There is, therefore, no declaration of opinion on that subject; and the Senator from Indiana has only the expression of the individual opinion of the gentleman who was selected not for the principal office of the country, but selected for the second and subordinate office. He has the advantage of knowing what that gentleman's opinions are and of discussing them before the country, and so far as he is concerned holding him responsible for what he has said.

Mr. President, inasmuch as this question is up, as it has been raised by the Senator from Indiana, I will restate what I have stated before at the present session. As things now stand in this country, I am of opinion that the presidential election of 1868 must be decided by those States which are now represented in Congress. Of course I, in common with half at least of the electoral population of the United States, believe that this whole system of reconstruction is invalid under the Constitution, and that it can have no validity in future time except it get it from popular assent. I agree that if the people concerned in the southern States shall acquiesce in that system in the course of time it may become valid, just as in the case of a corporation where, by a supplemental act, the purpose or object of the corporation is entirely changed and there is a right in any one of the corporators to object to that change and to take the supplemental act into a court of law or a court of equity and have it pronounced invalid and to escape its operation altogether; yet if such stockholder stand by, if he acquiesce in what is done by his corporation in accepting the supplement and acting under it, in the course of time he, as well as all others concerned in the corporation, become bound by the law. And just so in the case of the States of the South with which our legislation is concerned. If the inhabitants of those States shall accept this system of reconstruction, if they shall proceed to act under the laws relating to it, and by open and notorious conduct through a series of years shall give to that system their assent and acquiescence, they may become bound by it.

The Senator does not expect that consummation; at least he does not expect it within a reasonable time. All the apparent assent that he will get from the great mass of the white population of the South in the present year or within any reasonable period of time will be coerced; it will be given under duress; it will not constitute a sanction for his legislation. Although these persons may go to some of the elections and formally vote, yet, protesting as they will against the entire system, you cannot infer their assent and their acquiescence.

But there is another kind of acquiescence and assent—from my point of view less conclusive, but, perhaps, for all practical purposes equally efficacious—which is the assent of a majority of the people of the northern and adhering States deliberately given. That has never been given to your system of reconstruction. It is only necessary to refer to notorious facts to establish this.

In 1866 you sent down to the Legislatures of the several States a constitutional amendment for adoption, which proposed some half a dozen things all in one amendment combined, united together, and to be accepted or to be rejected as an entire thing. You held your elections for the present Congress in that year, and in view of that proposition of constitutional amendment, and you obtained majorities in most of the adhering States. But there has been since that time no general popular election throughout the northern States to select members of Congress; and you now go to the people for the first time upon all these measures which you have adopted since 1866. You now submit to them in the elections of the present year your reconstruction act of March 2, 1867; of March 23, 1867; of July 19, 1867; and of the 11th of March, 1868, and the more recent acts readmitting certain of those States of the South to renewed representation in the two Houses of Congress. All this body of legislation is to be submitted by you to the people in the adhering States for the first time in the elections of the present year. They have never pronounced their opinion upon the reconstruction laws except indirectly and partially in the elections of last year; and as there was then no choice in most of the States of members of Congress, as the elections were mainly for State officers alone, their expression of opinion was not so distinct and emphatic as it will be the present year, when the gentlemen in the other House of Congress who have been voting upon these measures go home and submit themselves once more to the judgment of their constituents, to be reelected or to be condemned, as the case may be, and according as the currents of public opinion may run in their several districts.

What I have to say then, Mr. President, is this: you are to go to the people of the adhering States now represented in Congress, and submit your policy to their judgment. If you get their concurrence and their approval, you will have a sanction for your course, for pursuing the policy which you have heretofore adopted and pursued.

This leads me to the third thought which I intended to present in rising to speak in answer to the Senator from Indiana. The first idea already mentioned is that your reconstruction system must receive to its justification a popular sanction in the States directly concerned, which must be the work of time if it shall ever be given. In the next place, an inferior sanction, but one which may be thought efficacious, may be given in the adhering States, North, West, and in the central section of the Union where your policy upon reconstruction has never yet been submitted, has never yet been approved. They may give an indorsement (though not a justification) of what you have done. But now there is a third mode or manner of obtaining assent and approval, or at least indorsement of your policy, which some gentlemen propose, and which is indicated in the present measure; and that is this: that although you may despise the assent of the white population in the southern States, although you may not require that it shall be given to your policy, and although when you go to the people of the adhering States a majority may decide against you, may condemn the policy of reconstruction which you have adopted, you will still have a resource in the extremity of your fortunes.

This bill points to it. What is the bill? That the States of the South that you have admitted here into Congress shall vote in the presidential election, and that those that you do not receive and approve shall not vote.

That is your proposition, to pick out certain of these States and count their electoral votes and to refuse votes to the others. This is a most extraordinary proposition. One thing is certain, it will not be misunderstood; it will be perfectly comprehended in this country from one end to the other; that you shall not have the assent of the people in the South to your work of reconstruction, those who were formerly electors, recognized as such; that you shall not have the assent of a majority of the adhering States to your work; but that you shall make up and count up a majority by picking out States, by selecting among them, counting the votes of such as you please, and rejecting the votes of the others. That is this bill, and it is to be sent forth at the present session as a parting gift by the Fortieth Congress to the American people.

Virginia is not to vote. Why shall she not vote? Let me take the case from your standpoint, departing for the time being from mine. You have said that these ten States of the South shall be restored to representation in Congress and in the Electoral Colleges upon a particular scheme which you have devised, with certain supplemental or fundamental conditions added as a sort addendum to the system, when the States actually come here through their representatives. Now, the proceeding has been perfected in seven States, and their electoral votes are to be counted; but how is Virginia to stand? A convention was held and a constitution formed some time since. The convention adjourned, and what was the next information we had? There was to be no election because there were no funds for holding it. All the moneys which you had voted to the purposes of reconstruction, so far as the share of Virginia was concerned, were exhausted, and the election could not be held. That was announced, and the information sent here. What was done? Nothing. We have voted money for almost every imaginable object except holding an election in Virginia, and I take it for granted there is to be no appropriation at the present session.

We have had committees in both Houses laboriously engaged in seeking out all the corners of our revenue and of our expenditure systems; but never once has a committee in either House cast its glance upon this State of Virginia and upon the pressing demands of reconstruction there. No election has been ordered, no money has been voted, no step taken to perfect the work which was begun and carried on to the point of a formation of a constitution in that State; and you are about to adjourn, leaving her in that condition, without the necessary means to hold the election under your own reconstruction laws; and now you are about to pass a bill to prevent her holding voluntarily an election for presidential electors and casting her vote in an Electoral College. You forbid her to act even by the registered voters whose names have been enrolled under your own laws and with the cooperation of the authorities which you yourselves have set up in that State.

What are we to understand by this? Why, evidently, that some gentlemen think that the vote of the State is not certain to be cast in the direction they desire.

Mississippi is also to be counted out, though I believe they are holding an election in that State. There is Texas also. Why should she not vote? One thing is certain. The majority in Congress have had complete control over this whole subject from the beginning, and there has been no indisposition to exercise that control. It only needed the will, and each one of these three States would now be in the same situation as the other seven, or, at all events, there would have been an election held in each and a decision made upon the question of the acceptance or rejection of a constitution in conformity with the reconstruction laws.

Mr. President, can any one state a reason founded upon any principle of equality and fairness why three of these States should by act of Congress be forbidden to vote in the presidential election, while the other seven are permitted? Especially, can there be any justification for this bill when the majority in Congress is itself responsible for the whole management of reconstruction, and for the existing condition of all these States? I pass, however, to another consideration.

Why should this bill be passed with reference to any purpose of counting or rejecting electoral votes? What necessity is there for it? Next winter the same Senate and the same House of Representatives will convene. They will be in session until the 4th of March, when the Congress will expire. They will possess the same powers which they now hold, and may now exercise. If there be any necessity to pass any law in regard to the counting of electoral votes it can be done then and done by the same men who will now pass this bill.

There is no necessity for passing a bill of this kind at present in order to avoid difficulty in the counting of electoral votes. Is not this but anticipating trouble which may never arise? Do you know that there will be any controversy to settle at all by such a law? It is all conjecture. You are borrowing trouble from the future of which you have no evidence, and which if it shall come may be determined when it comes better than now. Why, then, I repeat, should this bill be passed at present?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will my friend from Pennsylvania permit me to ask him a question? Mr. BUCKALEW. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to ask my friend whether he thinks that the appropriate method of determining such a question is by the joint convention of the two Houses when they meet to count the votes, or by a rule prescribed by law in advance?

Mr. BUCKALEW. I am coming to that. The question anticipates the course of my remarks. Assuming that you have power to pass such a bill, can it not be passed at the next session of Congress, as well as now? Can it not meet an actual emergency when it is known better than anticipate it before it has occurred?

But, sir, have you the power to pass such a bill? That is a question hitherto unnoticed. The Constitution says that each State may vote for electors of President and Vice-President, as the Legislature of the State may direct; that those votes shall be transmitted to the President of the Senate, and then in joint convention of the two Houses they shall be opened and counted. The Constitution addresses itself to the Legislatures and citizens of the respective States so far as regards the choice of electors and the casting of electoral votes. Electors are to be chosen as the State itself shall prescribe. Then they are to vote in an Electoral College. So far the Constitution addresses itself to the States. It addresses itself to the President of the Senate in enjoining him to receive the electoral votes. It commands the two Houses of Congress to convene when those votes are counted. But where is the authority to the two Houses of Congress to pass laws regarding the choice of electors in the several States?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator permit me to ask him another question?

Mr. BUCKALEW. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Suppose there should happen to be from the State of Pennsylvania two sets of votes returned to the President of the Senate from what purported to be and ostensibly were two sets of electoral colleges, each claiming to represent the vote of the State of Pennsylvania; is the President of the Senate to settle which of the two represents the voice of that State, or who is to do it?

Mr. BUCKALEW. The Senator is simply anticipating the points to which I am coming.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Well, go on, then.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The Constitution, I say, addresses itself to the States. It does not address itself to Congress except in the single particular of convening at the counting the votes. Where, then, is your grant of power to say when a State shall vote and when it shall not; to prescribe how and under what circumstances it shall vote? You have no jurisdiction over the subject-matter. Your interference with it, if I may be allowed the expression, a pure impertinence, because it is not among the duties which have been charged upon you by the Constitution.

Mr. President, the question of a contested presidential election is one of the most delicate and difficult which can engage the attention of any gentleman who studies our political system and takes into account the dangers to which it may be subjected in future time. A provision for determining a contested election has not been pointed out; and the only inference of power that can arise from an express provision of the Constitution arises upon that provision which confers upon the two Houses the power, or rather prescribes the duty, of convening together when the votes are counted. The duty is charged upon the President of the Senate to open the returns and to announce them before the two Houses. Upon a celebrated occasion the President of the Senate, in opening the returns when there was a question with reference to the vote of a particular State, directed the result to be announced as it would stand if the vote of that State were counted and to be announced, also, as it would stand if the vote of that State were not counted. Very prudently and properly at that time the question of how a difficulty in regard to the counting of votes should be determined was passed by, because the necessity did not exist for deciding it, the result would be the same whether the vote of the State should be counted or should be rejected.

Therefore, speaking in the light of our history, and speaking with reference to any express provision of the Constitution of the United States, I am authorized to say, and I do say, that the question propounded to me by the Senator from Vermont is an open question; it has received no adjudication; it has not been decided. It is one upon which gentlemen are entitled to hold opinions such as they can form from the exercise of their best judgment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to know what the Senator's opinion is in order to guide my own.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Several years ago, the year before the close of the war, when it was impossible—I use the word with reflection—that presidential elections should be held in the States of the South, and when there was an attempt, countenanced to some extent even by Mr. Lincoln, to choose electors in those States, Congress passed a joint resolution on that subject. What was it? It was not a law. It was not in the nature of a law. The authority and the propriety of passing it, the Senator will find by referring to the debates of that time, were very much questioned, and there was a large vote in the Senate against passing it, given upon the ground that as a legislative body we had nothing to do with the question. Finally the resolution was passed, declaring in the then existing condition of those States their electoral votes could not be taken and should not be counted. It was the declaration of a fact of which most were fully convinced and against which view there was very little pretense of argument.

The war was then going on. It extended over every one of those States. We had but partial, limited possession of some parts of some of them, and very irregular and frail provisional governments were maintained by our bayonets. They were in such condition—I think that was the very word used in the resolution—that as a matter of fact they could not vote, and that joint resolution simply declared the fact, and there was then (even by many of those who voted for that measure) a denial of any power in Congress to admit or to forbid the voting of a State.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator permit me to correct him?

Mr. BUCKALEW. The Senator had better hear me conclude on this point.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I merely wish to correct the Senator on a matter of fact as to the point he is now stating if he will permit me to do so. It appears from the debates that two gentlemen at least—I only remember these at the moment—who are now with my honorable friend, the three great lights of the Democratic party in this body, its representative men, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DOOLITTLE] and the Senator from Maryland, who left us to-day, [Mr. JOHNSON], found fault with that provision upon the ground that the provision ought to have been made for such an emergency by a law passed antecedent to the fact upon which it was to operate; that is to say before the election; and that it was one of the highest duties of the legislative power under the Constitution to make such a regulation; and I will read the evidence to the Senator whenever he wants it.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The correction was quite unnecessary. I said that many of those who supported that measure held to the view I stated. I will add that most of the supporters held that it was a convenient measure as a rule or direction to the presiding officer of the convention, as a rule of order, as a declaration of the opinion of the two Houses; not as a law which would bind that convention when it was convened.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Did you not vote for it in the form of a law?

Mr. BUCKALEW. In the form of a resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. A joint resolution?

Mr. BUCKALEW. Yes; in the form of a joint resolution. It was a declaration of Congress put in the form of a joint resolution and passed through the two Houses, announcing their judgment upon the condition of things in the South, and that, as the case stood, it was impossible that they should vote or that their votes should be received in the Electoral College.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They had voted.

Mr. BUCKALEW. There was no pretense of a denial of right. No man who voted for that resolution supposed there was any right to vote in a State that was incapable of voting, incapacitated in the very nature of the case. Those States had been engaged in the rebellion from the beginning. They were then engaged in flagrant open war against us, and I, for one, thought it shocking that one tenth of the population of one of those States should wield the whole electoral vote of the State, that any pretense should be made that such a one tenth part of a fugitive, straggling population within military lines should in this Government of ours claim that they had capacity to wield the political power of that State in this Government, to vote down the freedom of the northern States who were then engaged in behalf of this Government against those States to repress the insurrection which had broken out in them.

That congressional declaration stood upon those grounds, and the only question that then arose in my mind and in the minds of others was that the precedent might be misconceived and misapplied hereafter. There was hesitation for that reason with some gentlemen. If I had anticipated that it was to be cited as a precedent for a law which in time of peace should deprive any State of this Union by act of Congress of its right to poll electoral votes, I should have looked upon it as a much more important measure than I then regarded it, and one of an exceedingly pernicious character.

What right have you to say whether the State of Georgia shall vote or not, as a Congress, as a legislative body? Where did you get your authority? Under what clause of the Constitution? Under what inference from or construction of any clause? There is nothing of the sort. If you can deliberately say that the State of Georgia or the State of Arkansas shall not vote, and make your declaration a law, what is to hinder you from passing a law applicable to Pennsylvania in which you shall say that her vote shall not be counted? You may say that you have a better reason in the one case than you can suppose you would have in the other; but if the power be granted its exercise must be in the discretion of Congress. You have no such power. I can understand gentlemen who argue that when from a particular State votes are sent to be opened before the two Houses convened together under the direction of the Constitution there must be, by necessary implication, power of judgment upon the return vested in the two Houses. That is intelligible. It is not necessary now to argue whether it is a good opinion or not.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator give way to receive a message from the House of Representatives?

Mr. BUCKALEW. Certainly.

Mr. McPHERSON, Clerk of the House of Representatives, appeared below the bar and said: Mr. President, I am directed to inform the Senate that the House of Representatives has passed a bill (H. R. No. 1381) providing for an election in Virginia, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate.

Mr. BUCKALEW. You see, Mr. President, by the announcement from the House of Representatives the impropriety of the bill now before the Senate. By the bill we are considering provision is made that although the State of Virginia may hold an election under your reconstruction laws and adopt a Constitution, yet she shall not vote in the Electoral College unless Congress receives her, admits her to representation, which is not to be expected at the present session.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why is that impossible?

Mr. BUCKALEW. It is impossible to hold an election in Virginia and receive her representatives if we adjourn within any reasonable time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The bill does not require that we shall receive her representatives.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. President, there is an old saying in a good book which is very applicable to this bill, "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." I have already endeavored to point out that the very same Houses of Congress that are now in session will be in session for months before this duty of opening electoral votes comes to be charged upon them or to be performed before them. I have pointed out that by this legislation you yourselves under your own system deal unequally with the States of the South which you are attempting to reconstruct. Why should a man in Texas be forbidden to vote by an act of Congress which allows a vote to a man in Georgia? I should like that very plain question answered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the Senator want that answered now?

Mr. BUCKALEW. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. For the same reason that in 1865 upon the Senator's vote an elector in the State of Pennsylvania was permitted to vote and was not permitted to vote in the State of Georgia; that is to say, that the rebellion has left the State of Texas in such condition that she has not yet been reorganized. I do not know but that it would suit the purposes of my friend quite as well to have her vote in a rebellious condition as well as an organized condition. He can answer for that.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The Senator's flippant observation does not touch my point. The resolution of 1865 was passed upon the ground that it was impossible for the people to vote, because it was the theater of actual war. A bill passed now that a man in Texas shall not vote stands upon no ground of impossibility; it stands upon the pleasure, or rather upon the will of Congress. There is no difficulty in taking votes in Texas, and has been none for three years. They have voted long since upon the subject of holding a convention under your own laws, and other elections have been held there. There is no incapacity in Texas.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What elections have been held under our law in Texas?

Mr. BUCKALEW. An election for members of the convention.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Did they hold a convention?

Mr. BUCKALEW. The Senator goes off on a new question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They voted that they would not reorganize; that they would not have any convention.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I am speaking as to the possibility of holding elections in Texas. The ground on which the resolution of 1865 was passed was that it was impossible, in the condition of things then existing, that those States could vote; that they were incapable from the circumstances in which they were placed of holding elections and selecting electors of President.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That was a mere judgment of Congress, because they had held an election in two of those States in 1864, and Congress declared by the aid of the Senator's vote, that the elections were held under such circumstances that they ought not to be considered as valid.

Mr. BUCKALEW. No, sir; there was no election held in those States, not the slightest pretense of an election held in those States under any authority of the State.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where did the electoral votes come from?

Mr. BUCKALEW. There were elections held under military power for municipal purposes; and when it was attempted to expand that authority into a national one, we said it was an absurdity.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the Senator call the election for electors of President a municipal election for municipal purposes?

Mr. BUCKALEW. No, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the Senator deny that in two of those States, Louisiana and Tennessee, elections were held for electors of President, and the votes were forwarded by the Electoral Colleges, having all the prima facie appearance of validity? And yet by the Senator's aid—loyal and good aid it was, too—it was declared to be an improper and invalid proceeding.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I have not denied that.

I spoke about that some time since, and gave my view of that subject, and stated the reason why those elections were not in fact elections in those States. A large part of Louisiana at that time was within the lines of the enemy.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And you assumed the right to decide that.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I assumed the right to decide a fact, not a matter of right, not to pass an enactment of legislation; I have already stated my view of the resolution of 1865?

Mr. President, the three particular points which I rose to mention I have gone through with and have given such replies as I supposed were appropriate to the questions of the Senator from Vermont. I only took the floor to-night under some inconvenience arising from fatigue and the heat of the Chamber because I was unwilling that this bill should pass the Senate without a formal and earnest protest. Of course I have not attempted to argue the subject of the validity of the reconstruction laws at length. I have not attempted to go over the different grounds upon which, as I think, their invalidity can be demonstrated. That field of debate is too large and too important to be entered upon at this time. But the grounds upon which objection can be made to this bill as an exercise of a power by Congress to forbid the votes of the States in the presidential election lie within a comparatively narrow compass. What I desire to enforce upon the Senate is this: that, in my judgment, there will be no acquiescence by our people in the result of a presidential election dependent upon votes introduced into the Electoral College by act of Congress while at the same time other electoral votes are forbidden. I insist that the people of the United States will not permit the result of a presidential election to be determined by act of Congress.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What, will they have it determined by?

Mr. BUCKALEW. The Senator has asked a sufficient number of questions, and if he will permit me I prefer to conclude what I have to say. I have yielded, I believe, to the full extent required by courtesy. In my judgment the people of the United States will not agree that a majority in Congress shall manipulate the votes by which the presidential election is to be determined. They will demand that the States represented in Congress during the war, who bore the heat and burden of the struggle, who are now unquestionably clothed with the political power of this Union, shall determine the results of this comparatively friendly, yet earnest political contest upon which we are entering. Its result is not to be changed or altered by devices of any description gotten up here, and passed by the men who are to reap the fruits of their own ingenuity and management. They will not agree that the vote of Virginia shall be counted out and the vote of South Carolina in; the vote of Texas out and the vote of Arkansas in. They know as well as you, sir, that your congressional legislation is outside of constitutional power, and that it must rest eventually for support upon the assent or acquiescence of the people of the United States, South and North, or at least either South or North; that when you reconstruct States in the South, you must get the assent of the electors of those States, or you must get the fair assent of a majority of adhering States; you cannot ignore both.

The Senator from Indiana speaks of the expression of individual opinion by General Blair. I agree with General Blair most fully in the whole material matter contained in his letter relating to the existing condition of things. I say your reconstruction laws are dependent upon the votes of the people. If you get their votes for them, if yet get popular acquiescence for them, they may stand; they cannot stand upon your votes here; they cannot stand upon resolutions, whether joint or not, in Congress; they must have popular support. Do you not know, sir, and does not the whole country know, that your reconstruction at present is a reconstruction coerced; a thing of duress; you have compelled everything that has been done. Do you not know, and does not the country know, that republican government can stand upon no foundation except the consent of the governed. Republican institutions cannot be dictated by any earthly power except that of the people who are to be bound by and enjoy them; and a constitution in Georgia is as void when made under congressional command or coercion or under congressional direction which insures a particular result, as if it was prescribed to that State by the monarch of some foreign nation. How vain and idle, then, are such bills as this which decide nothing.

Mr. MORTON. Will the Senator allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. BUCKALEW. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORTON. I would ask the Senator if he approves of that part of General Blair's letter in which he says it will be the duty of the President-elect, at the coming election, to use the Army for the purpose of overthrowing what he designates as the "carpet-bag governments;" in other words, the new governments just constructed under the laws of Congress? He asserts that it would be the duty of the President to use the military power of the United States to overthrow those governments. Does my honorable friend from Pennsylvania indorse that part of the letter?

Mr. BUCKALEW. I am glad the Senator has called my attention to that. In answering him I will complete what I meant to say about the letter. My answer is, that for myself I say no such thing; I advise no extreme action. Early in my remarks I pointed out distinctly, in order to instruct the Senator from Indiana upon the position which I hold, and as I understand the Democratic party hold in their platform, that the question of a future remedy for what is wrong in reconstruction is left open and undetermined by the convention. We are deciding what belongs to the present time. The particular course that may be adopted with reference to the southern States is one of expediency—connected with ideas of justice, of course—when the question comes to be determined. It might, under a certain state of facts, be convenient and advisable that amendments even of those irregular constitutions should be submitted to popular acceptance, and stability, with reformed constitutions, be obtained in that way. There might be other courses adopted. General Blair has only expressed his individual opinion in favor of more stern and summary action, but the question is an open one and may be considered hereafter.

To come back to the point on which I was speaking, I repeat that, in my judgment, for the purpose of obtaining validity to reconstruction, safety to reconstruction, continuance to it, effect for it as it has been undertaken by Congress, it is necessary that a majority of the people in the adhering States shall indorse it in the elections of 1868. It has no support at present besides congressional will. Your own chief man—the master of the House—told us long since that your work was "outside of the Constitution." I have attempted to point out the only possible modes in which it can receive a sanction, in which it can get validity. It rests now upon congressional will. It must be baptized with popular approval; it must get the judgment of the people, and from those whose right to vote in this Union and to control its political destinies is unquestioned. If, when you carry your body of laws passed since 1866 to the people of the North and of the West and of the great central States, they say "Well done, good and faithful servants; you have performed our will and executed our wishes, and your work shall stand," then, and then only, will you command the situation; then, and then only, will you be entitled to ask of me and of others acquiescence in what you have done. I acknowledge a sort of common law in this country upon constitutional questions. I acknowledge that when a controverted question of public power long in debate has been sent to the people and deliberately determined by them their decision cannot be reversed or disregarded. That is a sort of "higher law" to which I subscribe.

When the alien and sedition laws went to the freemen of America in the year 1800 and were trodden under their feet, there was a condemnation of them a thousandfold stronger than could have been given by any court; and when their principle emerged into notice in the late impeachment trial in the tenth article, it gave to that article a character of odium and weakness which attached to none of the others. After Louisiana was acquired by a doubtful exercise of constitutional power, but received the strong indorsement of the people, it stood good; and all that region, blooming beneath a southern sun, now brought back to us by the valor of our soldiers and sailors, is as legitimate a portion of our territory as the soil of Indiana or of Vermont. And so, sir, with regard to slavery; however much Mr. Lincoln's proclamations may have been questioned, and whatever of doubt may have attached to the adoption of the constitutional amendment upon that subject, its abolition has received such an assent, South and North, from the people that it stands good, and will stand good forever. Similar remarks might be made in regard to secession. The right of a State to secede is denied and the doctrine condemned, not merely by the issue of the war, but by a popular judgment which can never be reversed.

Pass on such bills, then, as this to manipulate electoral votes in the South; depart not from your constitutional powers to pass them; do not select from among those States certain ones for the possession of power denied the rest, and thus render yourselves odious before the people. Take the issue of reconstruction as it stands, and submit it to the freemen of the adhering States. If they go with you, we must acquiesce in their judgment, and your policy may stand good for the future. If they decide against you, you will not, I venture to tell you, supplement your northern weakness with southern strength, acquired through your own votes in Congress. You stand or fall before that tribunal which is competent to judge us both, and whose authority we cannot question here or elsewhere, now or hereafter. Your reconstruction may stand good to you, and the political fruits that you expect to obtain from it will come to you, sweet and delicious for your enjoyment in future years, if you get a verdict from the freemen of the adhering States, and then only.

I counsel no violence; I preach no revolution; I would not array men against each other with feelings of anger and passion; but there is a principle of justice which cannot be mistaken in this case, and there is a courage and firmness in American freemen which cannot be defied.

To end and to sum up the argument, reconstruction requires the support of the people. If it get it, it can stand; if it do not get it, and do not get it in the adhering States, it will fall; and all the enactments that Congress can now heap up, cannot alter or control that result.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish, now that I have the opportunity without offense to the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania, to ask him a question or two; but I wish to remind him of a rule of law with which he is undoubtedly familiar, if he has not forgotten it, that no man is bound to criminate himself, before I call upon him to answer.

Mr. BUCKALEW. That is quite a gratuitous piece of politeness. [Laughter.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to understand, as he has so covered up his answer, if he undertook to give one, by a flourish of words, that I was unable to understand how he meant to answer the question that I put to him as to where resided the rightful power of determining in a case of a double electoral vote from a State which of those two sets of votes was the true and rightful representation of the State, the political community in the Union?

Mr. BUCKALEW. As the Senator is from the East, I will answer him after the Yankee fashion of asking him another question, and that is, is there not a great difference between denying to a State a right to vote and providing what votes shall be counted when sent up from the States?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No difference.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I think it would be thought in the House of Representatives a very different thing to deny a representative district representation at all, and to decide between two contestants.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, I have answered the Senator's question; will he be good enough to answer mine? I take it that the Senator has no answer to give, as he gives none. Now, I wish to ask him another question, and I shall be equally content by his silence, because from his fame in the country, the country will understand it just as well, and I do not know but a little better than they would if he were to answer. [Laughter.] I wish to ask him, where does the rightful power in this Government reside of determining what is a State; what political community pretending or asserting itself to be a State is a true State that belongs to the Union? Again, I have silence, Mr. President, and silence that speaks more than volumes of oratory from him.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I am waiting until you conclude; I do not know how much you are going to ask.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am waiting to hear the Senator.

Mr. BUCKALEW. If the Senator leaves the floor I will answer his question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well; I leave the floor.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The Senator invites me to a discussion over a very wide field of law. In the Rhode Island case the Supreme Court said that they would accept as the legitimate government of that State the one which was represented in Congress, and was held to be the legitimate government of the State by Congress and by the President; that it was a political question, and one not within their jurisdiction. I need not inform the Senator of all that; he knows it perfectly well already. There may be, certainly, cases where the courts, as an original question, might be called upon to determine what was the government of a State in a case of contest. I do not say that such cases are impossible; but where, as in the case of Rhode Island, there had been a government recognized by the Government of the United States, that is by the political departments, the judiciary held that they were concluded by it. I know very well that the Senator, and those who think with him, have argued at length from that opinion that Congress alone can determine as between two contesting governments which is the legitimate government in a State; while the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. DAVIS] has heretofore enlightened us, I believe, with a somewhat different opinion. I do not know that any further answer is necessary to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I have not maintained that Congress alone, if by Congress the Senator means the two Houses independent of their faculty as a law-making power, have a right to decide any such question. What I have maintained, and what our side have maintained, is precisely what the Supreme Court before it lost its head, as it has recently decided; and that was that the law-making power of the Government was the power to decide what was a State, and which was a State, where there was more than one power claiming to be a State. Therefore we have not maintained that either or both branches of Congress, independent of the President having control of the veto power could decide such a question; but we have maintained that after the President as a part of the law-making had exercised his voice, even if he chose to exercise it adversely to the opinion of a majority of the two Houses, if then, in pursuance of the Constitution that the honorable Senator professes, and I do not doubt sincerely, to reverence so much, that same Congress should have determined according to its provisions what the law should be. That was the action of the whole political power of the Government, and it bound Presidents and Senators, and even the Democracy, who, through Mr. Frank Blair, are going to overturn all this at the point of the bayonet!

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I see the embarrassment under which the Democratic party is laboring; and the misfortune that has befallen it to-day will no doubt embarrass it still more hereafter. I see the embarrassment that this particular bill presents to the members of that party. Individuals of that party say they intend revolution, and Frank P. Blair sought to be nominated upon that issue. He avows his purpose of overturning seven States of this Union now entitled to representation upon this floor. He will do it by revolution. He says it cannot be done by legislation, because the Senate is in the way. He says it is nonsense to talk about legislation; it must be done by force. I have been reading the platform, and I find that it dodges the question and declares that the reconstruction measures are unconstitutional and void. That is what I make out of its declaration on that point, although it is a long jumbled-up sentence.

The Democratic party, it appears, are unwilling to say, in express language, what they intend to do with a portion of the States in this Union, whether they intend again to put them out. The Democratic party once broke up the governments of those States; we have partially restored them. None of them have come square up to the point except Mr. Frank Blair. He has come up to it pretty squarely. I do not understand the Senator from Pennsylvania on that issue.

I say this bill is undoubtedly embarrassing to them, because we tell them exactly what we intend to do in the bill; that we intend that every State restored to representation in this Union, that shall have been reorganized, that shall be a State in the Union at the time of the election, shall vote and participate in the presidential election; that no disorganized rebel State shall vote; that all the States represented in Congress, all the States restored to this Union, shall vote. That is the exact rule which we followed in 1864, and for which the Senator from Pennsylvania himself voted. We intend to take that broad, honest ground in advance; and we do not fear the threats of individuals, or of the whole Democratic party, that they will again attempt to destroy this Government. We want to have it distinctly understood that none but legitimate State governments shall be represented in Congress and the Electoral College, and that they shall be represented; and then we want to see which side of that issue the Democratic party will take. I know it is embarrassing to them to take either side. I know that it is embarrassing to them to admit that the work of reconstruction is legally, justly, and honestly progressing, notwithstanding all the obstructions that the Executive, that an organized band of rebels in the South, that the organized Democracy, and all the elements that are bad in this country put together, have been able to throw in the way. Notwithstanding all the obstructions of these elements that are attempting to destroy our country, the work is progressing—the States are being restored. We say that when the southern States are restored we will treat them in all respects as States, and that we will defend our carpet-baggers. We shall not be scared because the gentlemen who have organized these governments in the South, and have come here backed up by a loyal constituency, are denounced as "carpet-baggers" by the rebel leaders in New York, who treated as honored guests Forrest and Wade Hampton. Because they come to the metropolis of this Republic and denounce these men, the representatives of the loyal people of the South, as "carpet-baggers," we are not to be driven from standing by them. We had to fight once before against the same horde of men, many of the leaders of whom were in New York.

We know that they are powerful, but we whipped them once. Let them try again to pull down this Government that we build up. Let them laugh at the "carpet-baggers" as much as they please. We intend to declare most distinctly and unequivocally that States organized and represented here shall vote in the Electoral College, and none others. That is what we did in 1864, and that is what we intend to do now. We have seen all the schemes they concocted vanish into thin air. We know Seymour. He is not ready to revolutionize. I hold in my hand a speech of his made in 1863 which has enough sophistry, if it had been accompanied by the courage of a Hampton or a Forrest, to have plunged the North into civil war. He dare not lay his hand upon a State that we reorganize. Frank Blair is a braver man and an honest man, and he told plainly what they would like to do; but I tell you, sir, the Democracy dare not come up and say that they will tear down a single State of this Union. They dare not go before the people on that issue. Let us declare that we will stand by all the States of the Union that are entitled to representation, that we will receive their ballots, that we will stand by the loyal people of the South; and let the Democracy take issue on that ground if they dare. This bill is a simple declaration that we will stand by the States which are represented, and that no disorganized rebel State shall vote until it shall have been reorganized.

This is no new doctrine. It has been discussed over and over in this Hall. Let the Democracy, if they dare, go before the country saying that they will tear down and put out of the Union the seven reorganized States. I should like to have them sound the tocsin of war and see if the American people are prepared for another revolution. What Frank Blair says means revolution. These men cannot be turned from these Halls except by violence; these State organizations cannot be overthrown except by the shedding of blood.

Mr. HOWARD. It cannot be done in that way either.

Mr. STEWART. It cannot be done by modern Democracy in that way; and when they dare announce any such purpose they will have fewer followers than they had on a former occasion. I have before me their platform. They are going to pretend to the ignorant and the vicious that this means "we will wipe out of existence every State that has been redeemed," and when they meet a man who has a little money and does not want to go to war they will say "we are opposed to violence and willing to let things take their course."

Now, we want to declare affirmatively the ground we stand upon. We are the aggressive, we are the progressive party. We the party that have dared to declare our principles from the beginning. We have had to take advanced ground all the time, and I wish now to make the declaration contained in this bill. If the Democratic party dare say on the stump in any of the northern States that they will pull down a single State, even little Florida, they will have fewer followers than they had in 1864; they will have fewer followers than they ever had in any contest before.

I want to pass this bill beforehand. I do not want to wait until after the election has taken place and then pass a law which they will call ex post facto. I do not want to see them going through the farce of a rebel election in Virginia, and I do not want any election there until Virginia is reorganized. I do not want to deceive anybody. I want all the issues in this campaign understood. I want the people to know exactly what they are voting on, and who has a right to vote, before the election, so as to avoid any unpleasant consequences. The people of the United States want no more revolution, no more war. The people of the South do not believe they can subjugate us. They do not believe they can reverse the verdict of the war. They cannot humiliate the Union soldiers who sustained the old flag, and reverse the verdict of the war, place the country under rebel rule, hurl seven States from their places in these Halls— whoever has laid that "flattering unction" to his soul will be undeceived next fall. It cannot be done.

Now, what is there in this bill? It is simply a declaration that the States represented in Congress that have been organized shall vote in the Electoral College, and none others. The Senator from Pennsylvania says that unless the disorganized vote the organized shall not; that unless you allow Texas to vote Arkansas shall not; that unless you allow Mississippi to vote Alabama shall not; that unless you let the three disorganized States that have not yet complied with our terms, that are not represented in Congress, vote, the represented States shall not vote. What does that mean? The Democratic party will not let organized States, States represented in these Halls, vote. I will not discuss the power of Congress, but I say there is not power enough in the Democratic party, with the Executive at their head, to maintain the position that they can put one of these States out of the Union. How are you going to prevent one of these States from voting? How are you going to prevent South Carolina from voting? How are you going to prevent her vote from being counted? In no other way than by putting her out of the Union.

If that is the position, if that is the new declaration of war, if that is the new rebellion we are to meet, let us know the issue now, and let us fight the battle before the people on that issue. The necessity of this bill has become apparent from this discussion. We want to know what are the purposes of this party, whether they mean revolution or whether they mean peace; whether they mean war and rapine and plunder and overthrow of the Government, and the prevention of the represented States from voting, or whether they mean to submit to the law. I think the Democratic party have had enough of war. I think they have had enough of tearing down States. But perhaps the ovation which the rebel generals received in New York has inspired them with new hope, and they think the "little unpleasantness" did not amount to much after all. Perhaps they are prepared to join the northern Democracy in another effort to put States out of the Union, and to overthrow State organizations; but I think they will hesitate a little. They do hesitate in their platform. They have a long sentence there on the subject that nobody can understand. Nobody can tell from the platform what they intend to do, and you cannot get any of their speakers on any stump before a promiscuous audience to say whether they intend to submit to the law or whether they intend to overthrow these governments. You can no more get a direct answer on this point than you can get a clear, straightforward idea out of their platform.

It is well enough for us to make the declaration contained in this bill, so that the people will know where we stand; but it is not to be supposed that the Democratic party are going to declare anything affirmatively on such a question. After having destroyed their best men by the two-thirds rule, and having got men that we are accustomed to, that we know all about, we have no apprehensions. We all know the connection of Seymour with New York politics during the war. We know how he acted during the New York riots. We know how his appeals to his friends in the city of New York affected the patriotic masses of the country. We know how we in the West felt at the obstruction of Seymour to the progress of the war. We know what power he had then, and we believed that he evinced a disposition, if he had had the requisite courage to back his disposition, to plunge the whole country in war. We have seen him go as far up to the verge of revolution as he dare go, but he has had a little experience since then.

Mr. NYE. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. NYE. I submit to my colleague whether he is not stepping rather hard upon the new-made graves of the hopes of the Democratic party. He is coming to the funeral rather quick.

Mr. STEWART. But they were talking about killing some of us; they were talking about having a funeral on our side.

Mr. NYE. They have not got over mourning yet themselves.

Mr. STEWART. They will not get over mourning very soon. I say that we of the West know how we felt at Mr. Seymour's conduct on that occasion.

Mr. BUCKALEW. What occasion?

Mr. STEWART. The occasion of the New York riots.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I was in New York at that time, and saw him in consultation with the present Senator from New York [Mr. Morgan] and the mayor of the city, acting together day by day in concert and perfect accord. The result of his visit to the city and of his extraordinary exertions was to preserve the peace. When he was addressing a large crowd inculcating peace, he spoke to them in a friendly manner, "My friends," just as any other gentleman would. His conduct on that occasion was that of a patriot and of a faithful chief magistrate of his State, and there never was anything impeaching his conduct except little newspaper slanders without the slightest foundation.

Mr. STEWART. I hold in my hands now a speech of Hon. Horatio Seymour, delivered on the 4th of July, 1863, a speech that I have read on several occasions. It is too long to read now. It is a speech full of fault-finding with the Government, full of suggestions with regard to the evil ways of the Government, putting ideas in the minds of the people to make them dissatisfied, complaining of your sectional strife and your sectional war, reminding the people of what he had told them before, calculated in every way to breed discontent; and this, too, when the country was in the most imminent peril. At that critical time, instead of coming forward and vindicating the authority of the Government, we find Horatio Seymour filling the minds of the people with distrust and reverting to the mistakes of the Government. He failed on that occasion most signally in that heroic duty which every American citizen owes to his country when it is in peril. When peril has come, when war is upon him, it is the duty of every American to say, "My country, right or wrong," and to stand up for his country. With a stern Governor of New York, such a Governor as Indiana had, there would have been no New York riots. With such a Governor as Ohio had there would have been no New York riots. The country felt the weight of Horatio Seymour as a thousand tons upon our hopes, and many graves can be laid to his charge. The weight of that great State, the moral influence of the Governor of that great State, was thrown against the cause of the Union in such a manner and at such a time as to prolong the war, I verily believe, more than one whole year. That Governor had all his predictions falsified, for he predicted failure all the time. After having seen our arms ride triumphant over a thousand battlefields; after having seen the rebellion put down; after having seen the loyal Congress engaged for four years in reconstruction and restoration, he is now the candidate of those opposed to the gallant leader of the armies that saved the nation. That noble man is at the head of the great party who conducted the war, and who have been endeavoring, against the efforts of rebels, Democrats and the Executive, to restore this Government. I say that after all this Seymour has not the nerve to do what this platform intimates that the Democracy will do, namely, tear down the States that have been built up.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The platform says nothing about tearing down States.

Mr. STEWART. That is a refinement of language. It speaks of them as "so-called States," "usurpations," "mongrel governments;" and their Representatives are spoken of as carpet-baggers, and the Democracy talk of disregarding them. Frank Blair says it is the duty of the Executive to disregard them. I tell you that Horatio Seymour has not the nerve to carry out the programme. He will insinuate that it is all right; but when it comes to the sticking point he will back out.

Now, I want to place the Democratic party on one side or the other of this issue. The States that are represented in Congress ought to vote, and they will vote. We say they shall vote. The Democratic party say they shall not vote. We had better have that one of the issues in the campaign, so that it shall not be said afterward that any snap judgment is given. It is better to say it now instead of hereafter.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. President, I did not say a word about Horatio Seymour in my speech. The Senator's assault upon him is entirely volunteer. I rose to correct him upon a question in regard to the New York riots, and he goes off into some speech. I am afraid it is too long to be discussed at this time of night. All I desire to call attention to at the close of this heated debate is the fact that the Senator from Indiana assailed the second gentleman on the ticket without any provocation to-day, and the Senator from Nevada to-night has assailed the first without any provocation, either. So far as I am concerned, I do not care to enter into a general political discussion. I have confined myself to this bill and to the elaboration of a single point in connection with it. All the matters to which the Senator from Nevada has referred no doubt will be discussed in due time and in a more appropriate place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. CONKLING. I hope there will not be a vote on that amendment to-night. There is not a quorum here, and when it is to be voted upon I should like to have an expression of the Senate about it.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Then we had better adjourn.

Mr. CONKLING. Unless some Senator wishes to occupy the floor, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, July 9, 1868.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON.

On motion of Mr. CAKE, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CAKE. I desire to make some reports from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Printing are authorized to report at any time.

Mr. PAINE. Is it not necessary that the House should dispose of an order adopted some days since, that the vote should be taken on the Alaska bill to-day, immediately after the reading of the Journal?

The SPEAKER. It will be necessary, if the gentleman desires to interfere with the reports of the Committee on Printing.

Mr. PAINE. Will the reports of the Committee on Printing, if now received, displace the order in regard to the Alaska bill?

The SPEAKER. It will not.

Mr. PAINE. Then I will not object.

DEMOCRATIC PROTEST.

Mr. CAKE, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That twenty thousand copies of the protest of the Democratic members of the House against the representation of Arkansas be printed for the use of the House.

The question was taken upon adopting the resolution; and upon a division, (called for by Mr. SCOFIELD,) there were—ayes 22, noes 20; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER. It is probable there is no quorum yet present.

Mr. CAKE. I will withdraw the resolution.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I desire to move to lay the resolution on the table.

The SPEAKER. The resolution has been withdrawn.

REPORT ON MANUFACTURES.

Mr. CAKE, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the House three thousand extra copies of the report of the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. CAKE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TARIFF BILL.

Mr. CAKE, from the Committee on Printing, also reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the House one thousand extra copies of the tariff bill.

Mr. CAKE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGES ON MAQUOKETA RIVER, IOWA.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, a joint resolution (S. No. 107) in relation to the Maquoketa river, in the State of Iowa, was, by unanimous consent, taken from the Speaker's table, and read a first and second time.

The joint resolution proposes to give the assent of Congress to the construction of bridges across the Maquoketa river, in the State of Iowa, with or without draws, as may be provided by the laws of the State of Iowa.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to amend the joint resolution by adding the following as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That dams and bridges may be constructed across the Iowa river, in the State of Iowa, above the town of Wapello.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution, as amended, was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONNECTICUT AVENUE, ETC., RAILWAY CO.

Mr. VAN HORN, of New York. I ask the House, by unanimous consent, to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. No. 420) to incorporate the Connecticut Avenue and Park Railway Company in the District of Columbia, that we may concur in a few slight amendments.

Mr. SPALDING. I object to taking up out of their order any of the bills on the Speaker's table. I am willing that we shall go to the Speaker's table for the consideration of those bills in their order.

THOMAS W. WARD.

Mr. ELIOT. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Commerce, for consideration at the present time, a bill (S. No. 542) for the relief of Thomas W. Ward, late collector of customs in the district of Corpus Christi, Texas.

Mr. SPALDING. I object, and call for the regular order.

Mr. ELIOT. Except by the unanimous consent of the House there will be no opportunity to report this bill this session.

Mr. SPALDING. I demand the regular order.

LOYAL CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW INDIANS.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1376) for the relief of the loyal Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians, which was pending at the adjournment last evening, and on which the previous question was seconded and the main question ordered. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WINDOM. It is not my intention to occupy more than five minutes in closing the debate on this bill.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I would like to ask the gentleman a question which he can answer whenever convenient in the course of his remarks. As a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs I have given my assent to this bill; but since the bill was acted on by the committee I have been informed that the agents of these Indians have a contract with them by which they are to get forty per cent. of this whole fund. If the gentleman has any information on that subject I hope he will give it to the House?

Mr. WINDOM. Does the gentleman allude to the agents of the loyal Indians or the others?

Mr. SCOFIELD. The agents of the loyal Indians.

Mr. WINDOM. I will answer the question now. I have no information whatever on that point. I do not know whether the agent of these Indians is to get one per cent. or forty per cent. I suppose that, as a matter of course, he is paid for being here two years attending to this matter; but I do not know about that. I have no knowledge of this matter, nor has such a statement as that referred to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOFIELD] ever been brought to my ears by anybody.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I do not wish to state it as a fact; but the statement I have mentioned was made to me on the floor this morning, and I presume it is likely to be made to other members in a quiet way. Hence I desired the chairman of the committee to state anything he might know about the matter.

Mr. WINDOM. I will say that there never has been anything before the committee on that subject, nor have I any personal knowledge of any such statement having been made.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Another allegation made to me this morning is, that certain men have bought this entire claim, or nearly the whole of it, from these loyal Indians, and that the passage of this bill will really inure to the benefit of some speculators, and not to the benefit of the Indians. Having now made these two statements as I have heard them, I wish to say that so far as the bill itself is concerned it seems to me unobjectionable, and I know no reason why it ought not to pass. But if the fact is as alleged, then it should be amended so as to leave it in the control of their own men.

Mr. WINDOM. So far as the last question is concerned I am equally in ignorance as on the first. I am ignorant whether any one has bought this claim, except this: when the question was asked General Blunt, who represents them, he flatly denied it to be true. He says the Indians hold the whole claim. Mr. Speaker, it is one of the easiest things in the world to cast suspicions upon a bill of this kind by some outside whisperings that some one has bought the claim, or that there is a large amount of speculation in it some way or the other. I know from my experience in such matters that such charges are brought by persons who are anxious to have a share in the speculation, one way or the other; and they go and whisper in the ears of members that something is wrong. The whole motive is they do not get anything for themselves. I do not know how the case is here. I will state to my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SCOFIELD,] who I know is honestly for the bill, it has been pending already two years, and these Indians have been unable to get their pay; but if it is defeated and put over for two more years longer there is no doubt these Indians in their great necessity will be compelled to sell for whatever they can get. The best way to take this money from the parties here and to place it in the hands of speculators is to postpone, year after year, the appropriation for paying it. If the gentleman will propose an amendment which will avoid any difficulty he fears I will yield to have it offered.

Mr. MULLINS. I ask the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. WINDOM. I yield to the gentleman for two minutes.

Mr. MULLINS. The point now under consideration is to dispose of this money to the parties having interest in it. I sat down to draw up an amendment which I think will obviate all objection. It is that there should be appointed an agent who should take this fund into his own hands and notify these parties in the Indian country to come up within a given time and each receive the sum he is entitled to. If it is all paid out in that way, well and good. Whatever remains let it go back into the Treasury. Let this agent be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. That will relieve it of every difficulty. It is suggested by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] this attorney gets forty or fifty per cent. I do not know what he gets. I do not suppose he works for nothing. It is legitimate that he should have pay for his services.

Mr. WINDOM. I have no doubt he is paid.

Mr. MULLINS. I do not know of any combinations to defeat these worthy parties. It has been carried on for two dreadful, bloody years. My amendment will make the thing all right.

Mr. WINDOM. I wish to add a word, and then I have nothing further to say unless other gentlemen wish to be heard. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHANKS] proposes an amendment to increase the amount to be paid to these Indians $234,000, the amount stipulated to be paid under this compromise being $150,000. It seems to me the gentleman must modify his amendment in some way to make it consistent with the bill. The bill provides for carrying out certain agreements and compromises entered into between these Indians. That fixes the sum of $150,000. He proposes $234,000, which is inconsistent with that compromise. I said yesterday I had no objection to the amount he fixes if it were practicable. The treaty provides the award shall not be paid until it is ratified by the Secretary of the Interior. Until that is done we have no power to make an appropriation, but, sir, I believe we have the right to ratify any agreement between the parties themselves. If you pass the bill as reported by the committee these Indians who have been in a suffering condition will get this money, at least a large portion of it. If the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana prevails they will get no money, but will have to wait for years longer and until they will be compelled to sell out to speculators. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana five minutes.

Mr. SHANKS. Mr. Speaker, the claim, as allowed by the commissioners, against the Chickasaws was $234,000. I am now simply asking that this House authorize the Secretary of the Interior to settle with these men at the exact amount which the commissioners made the award. These agents or attorneys have proposed to reduce that to $150,000, striking out $84,000 of the award made by the commissioners to the loyal Indians. I am now asking that the amount be raised to the amount of the award. I am not asking the interest to be added either in case of the Choctaws or the Chickasaws. But the chairman of the committee says these tribes have made this compromise. I insist that it has been made by agents in the city of Washington who have not seen the Indians since the proposition was made by the Secretary of the Interior to these agents. The contract to reduce these claims has been made here in Washington, and not by the authority of the parties in interest. They have their treaty, and under the treaty a commission was appointed, with power to examine witnesses, and both the Choctaws and Chickasaws have been heard in that examination.

I call attention to a remark made by the chairman of the committee on this subject on yesterday. He said these parties had no attorney before the commission that examined these claims. This was an error. The Choctaws had three attorneys and the Chickasaws one. That will be found on the record. They cross-examined the witnesses. The case was heard before the commissioners, and was reported under oath. Now, I insist that the allowance that was awarded shall be made. The gentleman said I volunteered my defense of these loyal men. If I have, I hope I shall have at least the credit of being in earnest in what I say. But if I have volunteered, it is only as a Representative standing here that I speak for these men who have no person to speak for them, and whose agents have decided to take $84,000 out of their pockets without consulting them about it. Against this I protest, and against this I speak. The agent has no authority to act in this case. We have no evidence to-day to show that these men are satisfied with that proposition. They know nothing about it, and will only know it when the action of this House is reported to them. This money does not come out of the Treasury of the United States. It is to be paid by those who wronged these men, and I insist that the entire amount should be paid. When the question goes back to the Secretary of the Interior for his decision, if he insists upon not only overruling the commissioners and the sworn proof, but the action of Congress, and still persists in deciding that the amount shall be reduced, then we will have another hearing of the case. For the present let the House decide that these loyal men shall have their full pay according to the award and according to the testimony in the case and I will be satisfied.

Mr. WINDOM. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. MUNGEN. I have only a word or two to say on this question. As I got back this morning I learned that the matter had been compromised by the reduction of $84,000, and that the Indians are willing to pay the balance. I hold that if the matter goes through as agreed upon it will save to the Indians $84,000. As to the question of loyalty, I would not give a snap of my finger for it. A big man, called Hopothoyoholo, or some other "big Indian" name, went there, and, claiming to be a prophet, he frightened them by telling them that they would be overrun by the troops of the North, which made them leave the country. Chepika, his brother-in-law, believing in his power as a prophet, induced a band of which he was chief to accompany the other big Indian and his band. It was not a question of loyalty or disloyalty by any means. They were not forced away at all; they went away of their own free will. They concluded they would go to Kansas, and on their way some of them were frozen to death, and many of them suffered great hardships. The object seems to be to punish these Indians who had nothing to do with putting them out of the country, and to give a bonus to the men who went away of their own free will. I am opposed to this whole thing; but inasmuch as the matter has been settled by the parties themselves, according to the best information I can get, I shall support this compromise, and save to these Indians $84,000. Perhaps it will keep it from going into the hands of somebody else than the Indians who are claiming it. I do not like this thing; I think it is all wrong; but the thing has been adjudicated, and I do not think it will work much harm if we pass the bill as reported, without the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. SHANKS.] I am opposed to the amendment, because I think it is nothing but a proposition to give $84,000 to some one who is no more entitled to it than I am.

Mr. SCHENCK. Will the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] allow me to offer an amendment to this bill?

Mr. WINDOM. I will hear it read.

The SPEAKER. It will require unanimous consent to offer an amendment to the bill now, as the previous question is operating.

Mr. WINDOM. I had forgotten that.

Mr. SCHENCK. Let it be read for information.

The amendment was read, to add to the bill the following:

And provided further, That no payment shall be made nor bond delivered under the provisions of this act, except in every case to the person actually entitled in his own right to receive the same; nor shall any contract or power of attorney relating to the same be regarded or held as of any validity unless signed and executed after the passage of this act.

Mr. WINDOM. I certainly would have no objection to that amendment if it did not require every one of these Indians to make a trip to Washington, or the Secretary of the Interior to make a trip to the Indian country.

Mr. SCHENCK. It will not require that.

Mr. WINDOM. I do not see how else it can be done.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. The regulations of the Department at present are such that you cannot go to an Indian, pay him a certain sum for his claim, take his receipt for the full amount of the claim, and then go to an Indian agent and get the money for it. The regulations require that the money shall be paid by the Indian agent directly to the Indian entitled to it.

Mr. SCHENCK. I hope this amendment will be added to the bill by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] to object.

Mr. WINDOM. I will not object to the amendment if no one else objects.

Mr. MUNGEN. I object to the amendment.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered, so that I may have an opportunity to offer the amendment I have indicated.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK. I now move the amendment which has been read.

Mr. MUNGEN. I withdraw my objection to the amendment; I did not understand the full effect of it.

The SPEAKER. The amendment will be regarded as pending.

Mr. WINDOM. I now call the previous question upon the bill and amendments.

Mr. MULLINS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a few minutes?

Mr. WINDOM. I cannot yield further.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The first question was upon the amendment of Mr. SHANKS, to strike out "$150,000" and insert "$234,000;" so that that portion of the bill would read:

And to the Chickasaw claimants the sum of $234,000.

The amendment was not agreed to; upon a division there being—ayes twelve, noes not counted.

The next question was upon the amendment of Mr. SCHENCK, to add to the bill the following:

And provided further, That no payment shall be made nor bond delivered, under the provisions of this act, except in every case to the person actually entitled in his own right to receive the same; nor shall any contract or power of attorney relating to the same be regarded or held as of any validity unless signed and accepted after the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WINDOM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REDUCTION OF THE ARMY.

Mr. GARFIELD, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Military Affairs a bill (H. R. No. 1377) to reduce and fix the military peace establishment; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

RETIRED OFFICERS OF THE ARMY.

Mr. GARFIELD, by unanimous consent, also reported from the Committee on Military Affairs a bill (H. R. No. 1378) declaring the meaning of the several acts in relation to retired officers of the Army; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommittees.

PURCHASE OF ALASKA.

The SPEAKER. The House will now resume the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1096) making an appropriation of money to carry into effect the treaty with Russia of March 10, 1867, which bill was to be considered to-day in Committee of the Whole immediately after the reading of the Journal. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BANKS. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK.]

REAPPRAISEMENT OF FOREIGN MERCHANDISE.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee of Ways and Means, adversely, the petition of certain New York merchants in relation to the reappraisement of foreign merchandise imported. The petition is accompanied with drafts of two bills. The committee recommend that no such bills be passed. I will ask the reading of a short letter on this subject from the Secretary of the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the letter will be read.

There was no objection; and the Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 11, 1868.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith the petition of certain New York merchants and the drafts of two bills in relation to foreign merchandise, which were submitted by you on the 6th instant for my views thereon.

The legislation prayed for would, in my opinion, jeopardize the revenue from impost to an almost inconceivable extent, and would overthrow the whole revenue system and the laws and regulations governing it. Among the signers to the petition are to be found the names of firms who have been detected in heavy frauds upon the revenue, and the manifest object of the parties is to deprive the Government of the salutary checks it now holds over the unscrupulous importer.

I am, very respectfully,

H. McCULLOCH,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. JAMES K. MOORHEAD,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the petition and accompanying papers will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

TONNAGE DUTIES ON SPANISH VESSELS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury; which was read, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, July 8, 1868.

SIR: Permit me to call the attention of the House to a communication addressed to you from this Department on the 11th of February last respecting the laws governing tonnage duties chargeable against Spanish vessels in ports of the United States. The law upon this subject is, in my opinion, in urgent need of early amendment; and I may be pardoned for expressing an earnest hope that action will be taken upon it during the present session.

Very respectfully,

H. McCULLOCH,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. SCHUYLER COLFAX,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The communication was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. ECKLEY asked and obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of Benjamin Deford & Son.

THOMAS W. WARD.

Mr. ELIOT, by unanimous consent, reported back, from the Committee on Commerce, a bill (S. No. 542) for the relief of Thomas W. Ward, late collector of customs for the district of Corpus Christi, Texas.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to audit and settle the accounts of Thomas W. Ward, late collector of customs for the district of Corpus Christi, Texas, from March 5, 1867, to July 1, 1867, and to allow him the same compensation and emoluments as if he had been legally collector of customs for that district for the period named, and that the deputy collector appointed by Ward on the 7th of March, 1867, be recognized as the legal deputy collector of the district; and the accounting officers are authorized to settle the accounts of the deputy in the same manner as if he had been legally appointed and all his acts were legal.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC LANDS IN NEVADA.

Mr. JULIAN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1379) to aid in ascertaining the value of certain public lands in Story county, in the State of Nevada; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

TAXATION AND PUBLIC DEBT.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1380) to equalize taxation and reduce the interest on the public debt; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

REFERENCE OF BILLS, ETC.

Mr. UPSON. I move to reconsider the various votes by which bills and joint resolutions have been referred this morning, and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DONATION OF MARBLE COLUMNS.

Mr. O'NEILL, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 328) for the donation of certain columns; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was read. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to donate to such cemeteries as have been in whole or in part dedicated to the burial of soldiers and sailors who lost their lives in the service of the United States, or to such volunteer associations of citizens as attended to their wants and comforts while living, six columns taken from the old Pennsylvania bank building, provided only one column shall be donated to such cemetery or association in any one State and the same shall be used as a monument.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. O'NEILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ARKANSAS TAX COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. ROOTS. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 564, concerning tax commissioners for the State of Arkansas.

There was no objection, and the bill was taken up and read a first and second time.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that that bill be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

The motion was agreed to.

PURCHASE OF ALASKA—AGAIN.

Mr. BANKS. I now resume the floor, and will state that my purpose is to ask the House to postpone the vote on the Alaska bill until Tuesday next. A large number of members on the other side are absent attending the Democratic convention in New York city, while a large number on this side are absent attending the Republican convention at Syracuse. Many who are here are paired off. It is scarcely possible, therefore, that a quorum is present. I desire there shall be a full House when this question is decided, whatever the decision may be. I ask that the vote shall be taken on Tuesday next, under the same arrangement that we are now under.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I object.

The SPEAKER. The House, by unanimous consent, ordered this bill should be taken up in the Committee of the Whole and voted on after the reading of the Journal. It was postponed by a bill on which the previous question was called last evening, but which is now disposed of. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to postpone with the same priority to Tuesday next, after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. PAINE. I rise to amend the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I rise to a question of order. This bill was set down by unanimous consent for a vote to-day, and it is not in the power of a majority to postpone it. It can only be postponed by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. On page 182 of the Digest it will be found that "a special order may be postponed by a majority vote." It then goes on to state that according to the usage whenever the time arrives for the consideration of a special order in Committee of the Whole the same may be postponed by a vote in the House.

Mr. BANKS. The motion to postpone is always in order.

The SPEAKER. The bill having been reached for consideration in the Committee of the Whole, it may be postponed with the same priority. There was a precedent this session. The tax bill first reported from the Committee of Ways and Means was made a special order from day to day after the morning hour. The House will recollect the question being asked by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] whether each day, when the time arrived to go into committee, the bill could be postponed. The Chair stated that it could, as the bill was within the control of the House.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. There is a difference between that state of facts and where the matter has been set down by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Special orders are made by a two-thirds vote when the rules can be suspended, but when the rules cannot be suspended by unanimous consent. The tax bill was also made the special order by unanimous consent.

Mr. PAINE. I move the following as a substitute for the present motion.

The following is the proposition, only the first two lines of which were read:

Whereas it is one of the first duties of every Government to assert the just demands of its citizens against other Governments; and whereas Ann B. Perkins, administratrix, a citizen of Massachusetts, has petitioned the Government of the United States for its intercession with the Government of Russia for the adjustment of a certain demand for muskets and gunpowder sold to the Government of Russia during the Crimean war, which demand has been examined and pronounced just by the Secretary of State of the United States; and whereas in the treaty of the purchase of Alaska no provision is made for the adjustment of any demands of citizens of the United States against the Government of Russia; and whereas an opportunity ought to be afforded to the President of the United States to invite the Government of Russia to an examination and adjustment of the said demand of Ann B. Perkins: Therefore,

Resolved, That the further consideration of the appropriation for the payment for Alaska be postponed until the second Monday of next December.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order to the pending motion to postpone to move a proposition with "whereas."

Mr. PAINE. Let it be read. There is something more than "whereas."

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I object.

Mr. PAINE. So much as is unobjectionable I suppose I have a right to have reported.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] yields, the gentleman can have it reported.

Mr. PAINE. I claim that I have a right to offer it.

The SPEAKER. When the Chair decided that the amendment was not in order, that took the floor from the gentleman from Wisconsin and gave it to the gentleman from Massachusetts. When a member offers a proposition which is not in order under the rules he cannot hold the floor to make a subsequent proposition.

Mr. PAINE. My proposition changes the day.

The SPEAKER. That is a new proposition. If the gentleman from Massachusetts yields it will be reported.

Mr. BANKS. Will the gentleman tell me what day he wishes to substitute?

Mr. PAINE. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman moved to postpone to a certain day. I proposed to amend by changing the day upon which a vote is to be taken.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not stated precisely the fact according to the recollection of the Chair. The gentleman from Massachusetts moved to postpone the further consideration of the bill till Tuesday next, immediately after the reading of the Journal. The gentleman from Wisconsin moved to amend. The Clerk commenced reading the amendment which commenced with a "whereas," being an argument and not a motion to change the time. A motion to postpone with an argument is not privileged. The Chair so stated. The gentleman then asked that the proposition be read. The Chair said it would be if there was no objection. Objection being made, the Chair gave the floor to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. PAINE. That does not cover my point. I insist I have now a right to move an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order, as the floor came into the possession of the gentleman from Massachusetts when the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin was ruled out of order. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to allow the amendment to be offered?

Mr. BANKS. I do not.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Will it be in order to move to amend by substituting another day certain?

The SPEAKER. It will be if the gentleman from Massachusetts yields, or if the previous question is not sustained on the motion now pending.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Then I hope the House will vote down the previous question.

Mr. BANKS. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to occupy the time. My only reason for moving to postpone is that there shall be—

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Is this motion debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is within narrow limits. The Clerk will read the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

"The motion to postpone to a day certain under the practice admits of but very limited debate."

The SPEAKER. This has always been the rule. Limited debate, not touching the merits of the bill, but as to the question of the propriety of postponing it to some future day is allowable.

Mr. BANKS. My only reason for moving to postpone this bill is that there may be a full vote upon this question. It is a public question of great importance, and the House should be full when it is decided. There are members on both sides of the House absent, and other members who are present are paired with them. It is doubtful even if there is a quorum here to-day. I think the public interest requires that this question should be decided by the vote of a full House. I therefore ask that it may be postponed until gentlemen who are absent on public business, may have an opportunity to return. It is immaterial to me whether Saturday or Tuesday be the time fixed, except that I believe Tuesday will be the first day when the members of the House will generally be back here.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope we shall adjourn on Wednesday.

Mr. BANKS. I move that the further consideration of this bill be postponed until Tuesday next, immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I desire to move that it be postponed until the second Monday of December next.

Mr. BANKS. I do not yield for that amendment; I wish to have this question postponed till such time as members will be here.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. They will be here on the second Monday of December next.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I would ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] to make it Saturday next.

Mr. BANKS. If gentlemen are willing to agree to that I am willing to so modify my amendment.

Mr. PAINE. We are not willing.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. If this bill is put off till Tuesday next it will delay the adjournment several days.

Mr. BANKS. We will not adjourn on Wednesday next.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope we shall.

Mr. BANKS. I call the previous question on the motion to postpone.

The question was taken upon seconding the previous question; and upon a division, there were—ayes 77, noes 30.

Before the result was announced, Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, called for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

The previous question was accordingly seconded.

The main question was then ordered.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to postpone.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and upon a division, there were twenty-two in the affirmative.

So (the affirmative being one fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 96, nays 35, not voting 67; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ames, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Axell, Bailey, Baldwin, Banks, Barr, Beck, Benjamin, Benton, Blair, Bole, Boutwell, Calk, Carr, Churchill, Sidney Clarke, Dawes, Dewees, Dixon, Donnelly, Eckley, Eliot, French, Garfield, Glessbrenner, Golladay, Griswold, Grover, Hawkins, Higby, Hill, Hinds, Hopkins, Chester D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Hunter, Jencks, Johnson, Alexander H. Jones, Thomas L. Jones, Julian, Kitchen, Kootz, William Lawrence, Loughbridge, Mallory, Marshall, Marvin, Maynard, McClurg, McKee, Miller, Moorhead, Morrell, Mullins, Mungen, Myers, Nicholson, Nunn, O'Neill, Orth, Phelps, Plants, Poland, Pomeroy, Raun, Roots, Ross, Sawyer, Selye, Shanks, Sitgreaves, Smith, Spalding, Starkweather, Thaddeus Stevens, Stewart, Stokes, Stone, Taber, Taffe, Taylor, Thomas, Twichell, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, William Williams, John T. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—96.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Baker, Beatty, Bromwell, Benjamin F. Butler, Cobb, Coburn, Cook, Cullom, Delano, Elia, Farnsworth, Ferriss, Hamilton, Holman, Judd, Kelsey, George V. Lawrence, Logan, McCarthy, McCormick, Mercur, Moore, Paine, Perham, Peters, Price, Schenck, Scofield, Trowbridge, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburn, Welker, Thomas Williams, and James F. Wilson—35.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Anderson, Archer, Barnum, Beaman, Bingham, Blaine, Boyer, Brooks, Broomall, Buckland, Burr, Rodrick R. Butler, Chandler, Rander W. Clarke, Cornell, Covode, Dodge, Driggs, Eggleston, Eldridge, Ferry, Fields, Finney, Fox, Getz, Gravely, Haight, Halsey, Harding, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Kelley, Kerr, Ketcham, Knott, Laffin, Lincoln, Loan, Lynch, McCullough, Morrissey, Newcomb, Niblack, Pike, Pile, Polsley, Pruyn, Randall, Robertson, Robinson, Shellabarger, Aaron F. Stevens, John Trimble, Lawrence S. Trimble, Van Aernam, Van Anken, Van Trump, Van Wyck, Ward, Stephen F. Wilson, Wood, and Woodward—67.

So the motion to postpone was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Pennsylvania. I desire to make an inquiry in regard to the effect of this vote? Will it cut off debate on this bill?

The SPEAKER. It will, unless debate should transpire previous to Thursday next.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Pennsylvania. Then I ask leave to print in the Globe such remarks as I may desire to make on this bill.

No objection was made. [See Appendix.]

Mr. BANKS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion to postpone was agreed to; and I also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELECTION CONTEST—SWITZLER VS. ANDERSON.

Mr. POLAND. Mr. Speaker, I had designed to call up this morning the report of the Committee of Elections on the case of Switzler vs. Anderson, from the ninth district of Missouri; but for very much the same reason as that which has induced the postponement of the Alaska bill I have concluded not to press that case at this time, there being so many members absent. I give notice that I shall call up this case on next Tuesday after the morning hour.

MISSION BUILDING, SAULT STE. MARIE.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a communication from the corresponding secretary of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, respecting a mission building erected on the military reserve at Sault Ste. Marie, and asking relief; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of the tariff bill.

The SPEAKER. The motion in that form would require unanimous consent.

Mr. MOORHEAD. Well, I move then simply that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and I give notice that in Committee of the Whole I shall move to lay aside all other bills to get at the tariff bill.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Was not the deficiency appropriation bill, Mr. Speaker, made a special order for to-day?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the position of business. There has to-day been no morning hour. The morning hour would now commence, but the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORHEAD] rises to a privileged motion, that the rules be suspended and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole, his object being to lay aside all other bills in order to take up the tariff bill. The deficiency appropriation bill, in reference to which the gentleman from Illinois inquires, was made a special order for to-day after the morning hour and from day to day until disposed of; but if there should be no morning hour that bill will not be reached to-day.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I insist on my motion; and I give notice to the friends of the tariff bill that if they want it passed at this session now is the time to take it up.

On the motion of Mr. MOORHEAD there were—ayes 47, noes 49; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER, under the rule, ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. MOORHEAD and Mr. MARSHALL.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 62, noes 53.

So the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DAWES in the chair.)

MEETING OF CONGRESS.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MOORHEAD,] to lay aside the pending bill, being bill (H. R. No. 81) in regard to the meeting of Congress. At the last sitting of the committee tellers had been appointed on this question, and no quorum had voted. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORHEAD] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] will resume their places.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 66, noes 42.

So the bill was laid aside.

PAY OF MEMBERS OF CONGRESS, ETC.

The CHAIRMAN. The next bill on the Calendar is the bill (H. R. No. 87) to repeal part of an act therein named.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I move that that bill be laid aside.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Would it not be in order to move to lay aside all the bills till we come to the tariff bill?

The CHAIRMAN. That could be done by unanimous consent.

Several members objected.

Mr. PAINE. I call for the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read the bill. It provides for the repeal of section seventeen of the act approved July 28, 1866, entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes," except so far as the same relates to mileage.

On the motion to lay aside the bill there were—ayes 61, noes 40.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I demand tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the bill was laid aside.

REDUCTION OF THE CURRENCY.

The next bill upon the Calendar was House bill No. 89, relative to the reduction of the currency.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I move that bill be laid aside.

Mr. ROSS. I want that bill read and acted on. The bill was read. It provides that so much of any existing act of Congress as authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to retire from circulation any part of the United States notes in circulation, or now in the Treasury, shall be repealed; and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to pay out in pursuance of law all such United States notes as may be in or may come into the Treasury, retaining in the Treasury only such amounts as the public interests may require.

Mr. ROSS. I hope, sir, that will be put on its passage.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I insist on my motion that it be laid aside.

The committee divided; and there were ayes 64, noes 27; no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. POMEROY and Mr. COOK.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 65, noes 44.

So the bill was laid aside.

TREATY-MAKING POWER.

The next business upon the Calendar was the following resolution submitted by Mr. SPALDING:

Resolved, That it being declared by the second section of the second article of the Constitution that the President shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two thirds of the Senators present concur, the House of Representatives do not claim any agency in making treaties, but that when a treaty stipulates regulations on any of the subjects submitted by the Constitution to the power of Congress it must depend for its execution as to such stipulations on a law or laws to be passed by Congress according to its sound discretion.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope that will be put on its passage.

Mr. SPALDING. There will be no discussion on it.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I move it be laid aside.

Mr. SPALDING. I move that the resolution be reported to the House without amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion to postpone is not amendable.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 58, noes 27; no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. BUTLER of Massachusetts, and Mr. MAYNARD.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 16; no quorum voting.

Under the rules the roll was called, and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Messrs Adams, Allison, Anderson, Archer, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Baldwin, Barnes, Barnum, Beaman, Bingham, Blaine, Boles, Boyer, Bromwell, Brooks, Broomall, Buckland, Burr, Roderick R. Butler, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Cornell, Delano, Dodge, Donnelly, Eckley, Eggleston, Eldridge, Ferry, Fields, Finney, Fox, French, Getz, Gravely, Haight, Halsey, Harding, Hill, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Johnson, Kelley, Kerr, Ketcham, Knott, Ladin, Lincoln, Mallory, McCullough, Mercer, Morrissey, Newcomb, Niblack, Nunn, Orth, Phelps, Polsley, Pruyn, Randall, Robertson, Robinson, Ross, Shellabarger, Smith, Starkweather, Aaron F. Stevens, Stewart, Thomas, John Trimble, Lawrence S. Trimble, Van Aernam, Van Auker, Van Trump, Van Wyck, Ward, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Stephen F. Wilson, Wood, and Woodward.

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAWES reported that the Committee of the Whole had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly a resolution relative to the treaty-making power, and finding itself without a quorum had caused the roll to be called, and had directed him to report the names of the absentees to the House.

A quorum having appeared the committee resumed its session.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 64, noes 40.

So the resolution was laid aside.

TAXATION OF UNITED STATES NOTES.

The next business on the Speaker's table was House bill No. 323, to authorize the taxation of United States notes and national bank notes by or under State authority.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I move that be laid aside.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I make the point of order that a special order cannot be laid aside.

The CHAIRMAN. This does not appear to be a special order.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I should like to inquire whether, if the House refuses to lay this bill aside, it will come up for consideration at the present time?

The CHAIRMAN. It will.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I hope, then, we will go to the consideration of the taxation of United States bonds.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I hope we will not.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Bonds or tariff, that is the question.

Mr. BENJAMIN, and Mr. BUTLER of Massachusetts, demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Messrs. BUTLER of Massachusetts, and MOORHEAD.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I call for the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. It is too late; the committee is dividing.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 67, noes 32.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair votes in the affirmative; and the ayes have it.

So the bill was postponed.

CURRENCY AND NATIONAL DEBT.

The next business on the Calendar was a bill (H. R. No. 542) to establish a uniform currency, provide for the management and liquidation of the national debt, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. I call for the reading of the bill.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I move to lay aside this bill.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to ask whether it will be competent for the committee, if this bill is taken up, to amend it by substituting a bill for the taxation of United States bonds, and funding the United States debt?

Mr. MOORHEAD. I do not yield for that. It is in the nature of debate.

Mr. PIKE. I rise to a point of order. A motion to amend has precedence of a motion to postpone indefinitely.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has precedence of the motion to amend.

Mr. PIKE. Is that not a motion to postpone indefinitely?

The CHAIRMAN. It is to lay aside.

Mr. PIKE. Is not that equivalent to a motion to postpone indefinitely?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

The question being put on the motion to lay aside the bill, there were—ayes 58, noes 25; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. INGER-SOLL, and WASHBURN of Massachusetts, were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 67, noes 23; no quorum voting.

The roll was then called; and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Messrs. Adams, Archer, Axtell, Banks, Barnes, Barnum, Beaman, Beck, Benton, Bingham, Blaine, Boyer, Brooks, Broomall, Buckland, Burr, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Calk, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Cornell, Delano, Dodge, Donnelly, Eggleston, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Ferry, Fields, Finney, Fox, Getz, Golladay, Gravely, Grover, Haight, Halsey, Harding, Hawkins, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Johnson, Thomas L. Jones, Kelley, Kerr, Ketcham, Knott, Ladin, Lincoln, Logan, Marshall, McCullough, Morrissey, Mullins, Newcomb, Niblack, Nunn, Phelps, Pike, Polsley, Pruyn, Randall, Robertson, Robinson, Ross, Selye, Shellabarger, Aaron F. Stevens, Thaddeus Stevens, John Trimble, Lawrence S. Trimble, Van Aernam, Van Auker, Van Trump, Van Wyck, Ward, Stephen F. Wilson, Wood, and Woodward.

The committee then rose; and Mr. POMEROY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DAWES reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration a bill (H. R. No. 542) to establish a uniform currency, provide for the management and liquidation of the national debt, and for other purposes, and having found itself without a quorum, had directed the roll to be called and the names of the absentees to be reported to the House.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. GORHAM, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 818) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1869, and for other purposes, disagreed to the amendments of the House to other amendments of the Senate to the said bill, agreed to the conference asked for by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appointed Messrs. MORRILL of Maine, HARLAN, and COLE, conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a bill (H. R. No. 554) making a grant of land to the State of Minnesota to aid in the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi river, with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 579) to establish a new land district in the State of Nebraska; and Joint resolution (S. No. 151) to drop from the rolls of the Army certain officers absent without authority from their commands.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. HOLMAN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. No. 1156) to authorize the Commissioner of the General Land Office to issue a patent to F. N. Blake for one hundred and sixty acres of land in Kansas.

CURRENCY AND NATIONAL DEBT.

A quorum having appeared, the Committee of the Whole resumed its session. The question was on laying aside the pending bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will resume their places.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 60, noes 41.

So the bill was laid aside.

COLUMBIA DEAF AND DUMB INSTITUTION.

The next business on the Calendar was House bill No. 541, making appropriations for the service of the Columbia Institution for the Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb, and establishing additional regulations for the government of the institution.

Mr. SPALDING. I am entirely content that this bill should be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that the same do pass.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. This bill having been made the special order by order of the House, it cannot be laid aside by the Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. It can be laid aside to be reported to the House.

Mr. ROSS. I ask that the bill be read.

The bill was read. The first section appropriates for the support of the Columbia Institution for the Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb, in addition to the existing appropriation to meet the increased expense of maintaining pupils whose admission was authorized by an act of Congress, approved March 2, 1867, $3,000. For continuing the work upon the buildings of the institution, in accordance with plans heretofore submitted to Congress, $48,000.

The second section provides that in addition to the directors whose appointment has heretofore been provided for by law there shall be three other directors appointed in the following manner: one Senator by the President of the Senate, and two Representatives by the Speaker of the House; these directors to hold their offices for the term of a single Congress, and to be eligible to a reappointment.

The third section provides that no part of the real or personal property now held or hereafter to be acquired by the said institution shall be devoted to any other purpose than the education of the deaf and dumb, nor shall any portion of the real estate be aliened, sold, or conveyed, except under the authority of a special act of Congress.

The fourth section provides that so much of the act of February 16, 1857, as allows the payment of $150 per annum for the maintenance and tuition of each pupil admitted by order of the Secretary of the Interior, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The question was upon the motion of Mr. SPALDING, to lay the bill aside to be reported to the House.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 52, noes 20; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SPALDING and Mr. GROVER were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 75, noes 26.

So the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House.

BENEVOLENT INSTITUTIONS IN THE DISTRICT.

The next business on the Calendar was House bill No. 859, appropriating money in support of benevolent institutions and in aid of charities in the District of Columbia, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1869.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I move that this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that the same do pass.

Mr. PIKE. Are amendments to this bill now in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The bill is now open to amendment.

Mr. PIKE. Has the bill yet been read a first time in Committee of the Whole?

The CHAIRMAN. It has not.

Mr. PIKE. Then I ask that it be now read.

The bill was then read at length.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill is now open to amendment.

Mr. SPALDING. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to submit sundry amendments to this bill.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. My point of order is that this bill and the one just laid aside to be reported to the House were made special orders in Committee of the Whole, with the understanding that they should be fully discussed. Four of the members of the Committee on Appropriations have made a minority report, showing all the facts in regard to this deaf and dumb asylum. Now, I say it is wrong to put these bills through without discussion.

Mr. SPALDING. The gentleman is making no point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand the gentleman to be making any point of order, but merely stating reasons to affect the vote of the committee.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I was absent from the Hall on duty on a committee of conference when the bill was reached in committee, and a sort of snap judgment was taken on me.

Mr. SPALDING. I was obliged to take the course I did.

Mr. BANKS. I would make a suggestion, which I think will prove satisfactory. If these bills are laid aside informally, they can be taken up and discussed and amended when the House again reaches their consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I would ask that the bill which has been laid aside to be reported to the House be considered as laid aside informally in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PIKE. I object.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Then I would suggest that these two bills be reported to the House, with the understanding that they shall be again referred to the Committee of the Whole when we go back into the House.

Mr. SPALDING. I have no objection to both being reported to the House.

Mr. ROSS. I object.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I have no objection, provided these bills go over till next week; but this week we are all in confusion.

Mr. SPALDING. I will agree that the bill be reported to the House, and be next week considered by the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ROSS. I move that the committee rise.

On the motion there were—ayes 42, noes 58.

Mr. PIKE called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. PIKE and Mr. KNOTT were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 50, noes 52.

So the motion that the committee rise was not agreed to.

Mr. SPALDING. I understood that the arrangement which I suggested was assented to.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. ROSS and Mr. PIKE objected.

Mr. SPALDING. I move to amend the bill by striking out lines eighteen to twenty-two inclusive, reading as follows:

For the purchase, by the Secretary of the Interior, for the agricultural purposes of the institution, one hundred and forty-eight acres, more or less, of land lying directly east of the present grounds of the hospital, and separated from them by the public road, $23,000.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, if the committee should now rise, could not the House, by a vote, resolve that, on going again into Committee of the Whole, all other bills should be postponed for the purpose of taking up the tariff bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It would be in order to make such a motion; but any gentleman could call for a division of the question, so that the vote would have to be taken separately upon laying aside each bill.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I am willing to consent that both these bills shall be reported to the House with the understanding that they go back to the committee, or that they be considered in the House when consent can be had.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. ROSS. I object.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] can in the House move to refer the bills to the committee, and we will sustain the motion.

The amendment of Mr. SPALDING was agreed to.

Mr. SPALDING. I move further to amend by striking out in line thirty the word "five;" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "three;" so as to make the paragraph read as follows:

For the proper inclosure, improvement, and enlargement of the grounds of the institution, in accordance with plans heretofore submitted to Congress, $3,600.

On agreeing to the amendment there were—ayes 39, noes 15; no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN, under the rule, ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. BALDWIN and Mr. ROSS.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 60, noes 19; no quorum voting.

Mr. PIKE. I move that the committee rise.

On the motion there were—ayes 54, noes 52.

Mr. KOONTZ. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. KOONTZ and Mr. PIKE were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 57, noes 48.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAWES reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the bill (H. R. No. 541) making appropriations for the service of the Columbia Institution for the Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb, and establishing additional regulations for the government of the institution, had directed him to report the same back without amendment; also, that the committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 859) appropriating money in support of benevolent institutions and in aid of charities in the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1869, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. SPALDING. Mr. Speaker, I am content that the bill No. 541 shall be retained in the House and considered as in Committee of the Whole at some convenient time, as the gentleman from Illinois wishes to discuss it. Let it be postponed till next week and come up directly after the vote on the Alaska bill.

The SPEAKER. It will be postponed till the time indicated if there be no objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I yield to my colleague on the committee.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move that House bill No. 859, making appropriations for the service of the Columbia Institution for the Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb, and establishing additional regulations for the government of the institution, be postponed until next Wednesday after the morning hour.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. HOPKINS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled Senate bill No. 542, for the relief of Thomas W. Ward, late collector of customs, district of Corpus Christi, Texas; when the Speaker signed the same.

UTAH CONTESTED ELECTION.

Mr. CHANLER, from the Committee of Elections, reported the following resolutions: Resolved, That William McGrorty is not entitled to a seat in this House as a Delegate from the Territory of Utah.

Resolved, That William H. Harper is entitled to a seat in this House as a Delegate from the Territory of Utah.

The report and -accompanying papers were laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SCHENCK moved that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved that the House adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 58, noes 50.

Mr. MOORHEAD demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will consider, unless objected to, the adjournment shall be until half past seven o'clock p. m., this evening having been set apart for invalid pension bills.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 39, nays 76, not voting 83; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Axtell, Bailey, Baker, Baldwin, Barnes, Beck, Benton, Blair, Boies, Bromwell, Sidney Clarke, Eckley, Ela, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Ferriss, Glossbrenner, Golladay, Hamilton, Hawkins, Holman, Honkins, Ingersoll, Judd, Loan, Mallory, Marshall, McCormick, Nicholson, Orth, Ross, Sitgreaves, Stewart, Taber, Cadwalader C. Washburn, James F. Wilson, John T. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—39.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnell, Delos R. Ashley, Banks, Beatty, Benjamin, Boutwell, Cake, Cary, Chanler, Churchill, Cobb, Coburn, Cook, Covode, Dawes, Deweese, Driggs, Eliot, French, Garfield, Griswold, Grover, Hill, Hinds, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, Hubburd, Hunter, Jenckes, Alexander H. Jones, Julian, Kelsey, Kitchen, Koontz, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loughbridge, Lynch, Marvin, Maynard, McCarthy, McKee, Mercer, Miller, Moore, Moorhead, Morrill, Mullins, Myers, O'Neill, Paint, Peters, Plants, Poland, Pomeroy, Price, Sawyer, Schenck, Seefield, Selye, Smith, Spalding, Starkweather, Stokes, Taffe, Taylor, Trowbridge, Tywicheil, Robert T. Van Horn, Henry D. Washburn, Welker, Thomas Williams, and William Williams—76.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Archer, James M. Ashley, Barnum, Benham, Bingham, Blaine, Boyer, Brooks, Broomall, Buckland, Burr, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Reader W. Clarke, Cornell, Cullom, Delano, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Eggleston, Ferry, Fields, Finney, Fox, Getz, Gravelly, Haight, Halsey, Harding, Higby, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Humphrey, Johnson, Thomas L. Jones, Kelley, Kerr, Ketcham, Knott, Laffin, Lincoln, Logan, McClurg, McCullough, Morrissey, Mungen, Newcomb, Niblack, Nunn, Perham, Phelps, Pike, Pile, Poley, Pruyn, Randall, Raum, Robertson, Robinson, Roots, Shanks, Shelabarger, Aaron F. Stevens, Thaddeus Stevens, Stone, Thomas, John Trimble, Lawrence S. Trimble, Upson, Van Arnam, Van Auker, Burt Van Horn, Van Trump, Van Wyck, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Stephen F. Wilson, Wood, and Woodward—83.

So the House refused to adjourn.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MERCUR was granted leave of absence until Monday, Mr. INGERSOLL until Tuesday, and Mr. HOLMAN indefinitely on account of sickness of one of his family.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The question then recurred on Mr. SCHENCK's motion to go into committee.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I rise for the purpose of appealing to gentlemen. We do not expect to proceed with the tariff bill. All we wish is to get it up and then adjourn. I ask that it be considered as the pending question in the committee.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I object.

Mr. SCHENCK's motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DAWES in the chair.)

Mr. SCHENCK. I suggest that by unanimous consent all bills preceding the tariff bill be considered as laid aside, and then I will move the committee rise.

Mr. STEWART. I object.

COMPENSATION TO GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.

The next business upon the Calendar was House joint resolution No. 245, giving additional compensation to certain employes in the civil service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I move that be laid aside.

The motion was agreed to.

INTERNAL TAX BILL.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 106) to reduce into one act and to amend the laws relating to internal taxes.

Mr. SCHENCK. I am willing that this bill shall go over until the first week of the next session, when I confidently expect to pass it.

No objection being made, the bill was postponed accordingly.

NIAGARA FALLS SHIP-CANAL.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1202) to provide for the construction of a ship-canal around the Falls of Niagara.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I move to lay that bill aside.

The motion was agreed to.

TARIFF BILL.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1349) to increase the revenue from duties on imports, and tending to equalize exports and imports.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I ask for the reading of the bill.

Mr. SPALDING. I move that the first reading be dispensed with.

Mr. STEWART objected.

The Clerk commenced the reading of the bill.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask unanimous consent that the further reading be dispensed with.

Mr. BROMWELL objected.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the first reading of the bill, and then read the first paragraph for amendment, as follows:

That from and after the passage of this act, in lieu of the duties heretofore imposed by law on the articles hereinafter mentioned there shall be levied, collected, and paid on the articles herein enumerated and provided for, imported from foreign countries, the following specified duties and rates of duty, that is to say: on all copper imported in the form of ores, three cents on each pound of fine copper contained therein; on all regulus of copper, and on all black or coarse copper, four cents on each pound of fine copper contained therein; on all old copper, fit only for remanufacture, four cents per pound; on all copper in plates, bars, ingots, pigs, and in other forms not manufactured or herein enumerated, five cents per pound.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAWES reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the special order under consideration, being House bill No. 1349, to increase the revenue from duties on imports and tending to equalize exports and imports, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ELECTION IN VIRGINIA.

Mr. FARNSWORTH reported from the Committee on Reconstruction a bill (H. R. No. 1881) providing for an election in Virginia; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was reported. It provides that the constitution adopted by the convention which met in Richmond, Virginia, on the 3d day of December, 1867, be submitted for ratification on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, the 13th, 14th, and 15th days of August, 1868, to the voters of the State of Virginia, who shall then be registered and qualified as such in compliance with the acts of Congress known as the reconstruction acts, the vote to be for and against the constitution, the election to be held at the same places where the election for delegates to said convention was held, and under the regulations to be prescribed by the commanding general of the military district, and the returns to be made to him as directed by law.

Section two provides that an election shall be held at the same time and places for members of the General Assembly and for all State officers to be elected by the people under said constitution, the election for State officers to be conducted under the same regulations as that for the ratification of the Constitution and by the same persons, the returns to be made in duplicate, one copy to the commanding general and one to the president of said convention, who shall give certificates of election to the persons elected, the officers so elected to enter upon the duties for which they are chosen as soon as elected and qualified in compliance with the provisions of said constitution, and to hold their respective offices for the term of years prescribed by the constitution, counting from the 1st day of January next, and until their successors are elected and qualified.

The third section provides that an election for members of the Congress of the United States shall be held in the congressional districts as established by said convention, one member of Congress being elected in the State at large, at the same time and places as the election for State officers, said election to be conducted by the same persons and under the same regulations mentioned in this act, and the returns to be made in the same manner provided for State officers.

The fourth section provides that no person shall act either as a member of any board of registration to revise and correct the registration of votes, or as a judge, commissioner, or other officer at any election to be held under the provisions of this act, who is a candidate for any office at the election to be held as herein provided for.

The fifth section provides that the General Assembly elected under and by virtue of this act shall assemble at the capitol in the city of Richmond, on Tuesday, the 1st day of September, 1868.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. This bill is simply to give a remedy to the people of the State of Virginia which they can get in no other way. Their constitutional convention provided for an election and fixed the day for the election, the election to be called and provided for by rules and regulations to be issued by the general commanding the district. The general so commanding did not call the election or make any provision for it on the day fixed, and the time passed over. His reason for not doing so was because there was no money appropriated for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the election. The time having passed, the commanding general thinks he has no authority to designate a day for the election. This bill is reported for the purpose of giving the people of Virginia a chance to vote on their constitution. It proposes no change of the reconstruction acts so far as registration is concerned, but simply fixes the time when they shall vote. It also provides that they may elect officers at the same election, as the other reconstructed States have done.

Mr. MULLINS. Does this bill state that this election shall be held in accordance with the provisions of the reconstruction act?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. It provides that the election shall take place in accordance with the reconstruction acts of Congress, and that the commanding general shall issue the needful rules and regulations, as has been done in other States.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FARNSWORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. PRICE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be instructed to furnish to this House a copy of the report of General G. M. Dodge, chief engineer of the Union Pacific railroad, concerning the surveys and operations of the company for the year 1867.

SCHOOLS FOR DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, reported, from the Committee on Education in the District of Columbia, a bill (H. R. No. 1382) to establish a system of common schools for the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed and recommitted.

Some time afterward,

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was recommitted; which motion was entered upon the Journal.

NIAGARA SHIP-CANAL.

Mr. VAN HORN, of New York. I ask consent to submit the following resolution for consideration at the present time:

Resolved, That the bill now in Committee of the Whole, providing for the construction of a ship-canal around the Falls of Niagara, be postponed to and made the special order for Thursday, the 10th day of December next, immediately after the morning hour, and continue as the special order from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. KELSEY. I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move that the House proceed to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table.

The motion was agreed to.

WAGON-ROADS IN DAKOTA TERRITORY.

The first business on the Speaker's table was the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 650) to amend the act of March 3, 1865, providing for the construction of certain wagon-roads in Dakota Territory.

The amendments were read, as follows:

In line one, after the word "that," insert the words "so much of."

In line four strike out the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary" and insert in lieu thereof the words, "as shall not exceed the sum of $6,500."

Mr. COOK. I move that the House concur.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. COOK moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONNECTICUT AVENUE AND PARK RAILWAY.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 420) to incorporate the Connecticut avenue and Park Railway Company in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 3 strike out in line two the words "Baltimore and Ohio railroad," and insert in lieu thereof "Washington and Georgetown railroad."

The amendment was concurred in.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1068) to provide for certain claims against the Department of Agriculture.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, in these words:

That there is hereby appropriated the sum of $47,000 out of the Treasury of the United States, from which shall be paid such indebtedness and claims against the Department of Agriculture contracted prior to the 1st day of July, 1867, and included in the report of the Committee of Claims herewith, as shall be submitted to the Fifth Auditor of the Treasury, with sufficient evidence, under oath, as to the origin and validity of the same, respectively, and decided by the Fifth Auditor and the final accounting officer of the Treasury to be due to the respective claimants according to the rules and laws of equity.

And in lieu thereof insert the following:

That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be authorized to audit the claims included in the schedule following, to wit: W. L. Ellison, $150; C. C. Anderson, $750; M. W. Beverage, $150; W. B. Berry, $647; J. H. Bourne, $35; John Bell, $22; C. J. Brewer, $85; E. Baker, $7; T. L. Boggess, $450; J. A. Blake, $4; Baltimore Journal of Commerce and Price Current, $15; George Brown, $13; L. C. Campbell, $250; G. B. Carrow, $85; Crut & Campbell, $20; Carter, Yates & Wiswell, $6325; F. W. Christensen, $2; H. L. Chapin, $650; Craigen & Clever, $5; Collins, Alderson & Co., $1,733 11; William B. Dana, $5; R. F. Eaton & Co., $150; Espey & Burdoff, $62; Samuel S. Foss, $2; Fisher & Schaeffer, $10 90;

Nathaniel B. Fagitt, $364 41; Fowler & Co., $153 29; Z. D. Gilman, $22; William Hacker, $6,709 40; Hovey & Co., $0 83; International Exchange, (J. Mudie, agent), $2; Irving & Willey, $397 35; Journal of Commerce, $17; A. J. Joyce & Co., $48 13; Aug. Jordan, $25; J. Knox, $15 50; J. M. Kuester, $2; J. F. Luhn & Co., $391 05; Linton & Co., $45; A. M. Lawza, $6 in gold; D. T. Moore, $3; Pascal Morris, $13,223 66; J. Markritor, $10; W. B. Moses, $316 65; Myers & McElhan, $25 23; J. W. Marlin, $86 98; E. Madlack, $0 25; Munn & Co., $3; National Intelligence, $16; Plant & Brother, $2; Z. Pratt, $10; Philips & Solomon, $15; R. & J. Rives, $5; William Smith, $6; John Saul, $45 65; H. A. Swasey & Co., $3; Schaeffer & Karadi, $67 70; W. B. Smith & Co., $4; E. W. Stewart, $60; E. Slade, $30; Stevens Brothers, (London), $58 20; Sibley & Guy, $44 97; J. Turner, $1; R. O. Thompson, $15; Charles S. Taft, $128 47; J. E. Tilton & Co., $3; Andreux, Vilmorin & Co., $12 70; T. B. Winner, $150; William Wood & Co., $29; J. B. Ward, $35 38; G. E. Woodward, $250; Samuel Wagner, $2; J. F. Wright, $1; A. H. Young, $48 17; Paschall Morris, $20; A. S. Yorke, $65 20; Stevens & Brother, (London magazine), $80; James Sheehy, $6 50; R. O. Thompson, $80; W. C. Lodge, $35; James S. Rippencott, $428; J. F. Walfinger, $47 50; Samuel Rixwalt, $104; William H. Gardner, $20; G. Hubart Bates, $37 50; William W. Bates, $204; H. D. Dunn, $232; K. A. Willard, $192; N. B. Cloud, $28; S. F. Baird, $20; H. F. French, $149 50; C. W. Howard, $67 50; John White, $15 56; Henry A. Dreer, $163 75; Israel S. Diehl, $900; and to allow so much of the same as shall appear upon due proof under oath to be due and unpaid for goods delivered and services rendered to the Department of Agriculture upon contracts made by the Commissioner prior to the 1st day of July, 1867, for the payment of the same, $40,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That if any Commissioner or other officer of the Department of Agriculture shall hereafter, in the name of the United States, or in the name of said Department, contract for any goods or services for the use thereof beyond the amount of money appropriated and remaining in his or their hands unexpended at the time of such contract, the officer so offending shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor in office, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding two years, or both, at the discretion of the court.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. This amendment of the Senate simply corrects a clerical mistake, ($47,000 having been erroneously inserted instead of $40,000,) and adds a new section, to which there can be no objection. I hope the amendment will be concurred in.

The amendment was concurred in.

WASHINGTON TARGET-SHOOTING ASSOCIATION.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 344) to incorporate the Washington Target-shooting Association, in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 2, insert at the end of line twenty-seven, the following:

Provided, That the amount of real property or estate to be held or owned by said association shall not exceed in value the sum of $5,000; And provided further, That the property of the said association, real, personal, and mixed, shall be held for the purposes, and none other, expressed in the first section of this act.

Mr. WELKER. I move concurrence.

Mr. KOONTZ. I hope it will be non-concurred in.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

IMPROVEMENT OF MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

The SPEAKER next laid before the House the following amendment of the Senate to House bill No. 554, making a grant of land to the State of Minnesota to aid in the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi river:

Add the following as a new section:

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That there be, and hereby is, granted to the State of Minnesota, the further quantity of one hundred thousand acres of public lands, subject to the same restrictions as to selection and sale as are hereinbefore named, the proceeds whereof shall be used in making such improvements in the Mississippi river at the Falls of St. Anthony as may be deemed necessary by the Legislature of that State to protect and secure the existing navigation immediately above said falls.

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the attention of the House to a brief explanation of this matter. The House will recollect that some time since we passed through the House a bill making a grant of lands to the State of Minnesota of two hundred thousand acres, for the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi river between the Falls of St. Anthony and the city of St. Paul, the object being to bring the navigation of the Mississippi river up to that great water-power. The bill, after being thoroughly discussed, passed the House and went to the Senate for concurrence. The Senate have amended the bill by adding an amendment increasing the grant made by the House one hundred thousand acres. It was added for this reason: it was ascertained by the Senate committee upon examination of the whole subject that the Falls of St. Anthony were in the process of disintegration and destruction; that they had receded during a great number of years from the point where the Minnesota river joins the Mississippi river, back to the point where the Falls are now found. The process is as follows: the sand rock formation below the magnesian limestone formation being worn away by the action of the water the rock, losing its support, breaks off in great fragments. In other words, they are undergoing the same process that has been going on for ages in the great Falls of Niagara. The Senate committee have ascertained that there are but about one thousand feet of that rock left, and it diminishes in width as it approaches its northern limit. One or two more freshets of that river would destroy the falls entirely by carrying off the entire rocky formation. The result would be the water-power of St. Anthony would be destroyed, a result which would be a calamity of almost national proportions, for that water-power is the greatest available water-power on the continent. The Senate have added this amendment of one hundred thousand additional acres for the preservation of that water-power.

Mr. MULLINS. Who derives benefit from that water-power, the Government or individuals?

Mr. DONNELLY. In one sense individuals will be benefited by it, because the water-power is the property of individuals; but the results of the destruction of that water-power would be enormous. They would include not only the persons who own the water-power, but a large population gathered about that falls, consisting of many thousands of people in St. Anthony and Minneapolis, and including the whole agricultural country tributary to those falls. They are used in the manufacture of lumber and flour, consumed not only by the people of Minnesota, but by the people of the entire Mississippi valley. So in the judgment of the Senate the destruction of that water-power would be a national calamity. I will say further that this amendment is made to conform to the original bill, which was very carefully drawn in the interest of the settlers. It provides the land granted shall be sold to actual settlers at $1 25 per acre, the proceeds to be devoted to this work. It is a grant of one section in each township; so that if there are any evil consequences to flow from it they will be diffused over a large extent of country. I now ask the Clerk to read a letter from General G. K. Warren, one of the most capable and efficient officers in our Army, and who has been, by the War Department, charged with the surveys of the upper Mississippi river.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 27, 1868.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 26th instant, expressing the solicitude felt in regard to the breaking away of the rocks and recession of the Falls of St. Anthony, and asking my views concerning the formation of the falls, the danger of their destruction by successive floods, and the injury to navigation above the falls that would result from their destruction.

A brief description of the structure of the rocks at the Falls of St. Anthony is as follows:

The rock forming the bed of the river at and just above the falls is a stratum of hard magnesian limestone, having a well-marked jointed structure, so as to readily separate into large blocks from fifteen to thirty feet square. Immediately in contact with limestone, beneath it, is a layer of clay at about three feet in thickness, nearly or quite impervious to water.

Beneath this clay stratum is a very soft siliceous sand rock, easily worn away by the water, and extending downward an unascertained depth, into which the water washes deep holes below the falls. The hard capping rock is thus being undermined, especially in flood stages, and falling off in large blocks, which are subsequently broken up into smaller pieces and carried away by the current.

This is the case with nearly all our waterfalls, but the preceding action is much more rapid at the Falls of St. Anthony than at any other existing fall with which I am acquainted.

It is obvious to an observer that at a distant period the falls were at Fort Snelling, the present junction of the Minnesota river, and that they have receded to their present position in the manner before described a distance of about seven miles.

Did this same formation of rock extend indefinitely above the present falls along the river the continued recession might only be considered as endangering the dams and mills in their present location and not to concern the question of navigation. And, as a consequence, the prevention of this wearing away by the water might be considered a mere local interest, and to be provided for by those specially concerned.

But it so happens that the stratum of hard magnesian limestone thins out and rises entirely above the surface of the river a few hundred feet above the present crest of the falls, and further on the soft sand rock alone is to be found in the bed of the river, so that when the action of the stream has destroyed all that remains of the hard layer but a few days will be necessary to lower the bed and produce a continuous rapid far above, not merely destroying the present water-power, but a long reach of navigable channel.

The Water-Power Company at Minneapolis expended in 1866 between thirty and forty thousand dollars in an unavailing attempt to stop this wearing away. The undertaking is a difficult and expensive one, and it is but fair that the protection and extension of the river navigation should lend its aid to that of the Water-Power Company in effecting a common object.

The danger which threatens the destruction of the Falls of St. Anthony requires prompt attention.

The present condition of the falls is further exhibited by the annexed diagram.

On this diagram the banks of the river are represented in green, the water blue, the soft sand-rock yellow, the magnesian limestone brown, and the clay bed pink.

The section is constructed to cut the dam at the point furthest up the stream, from which point the dam inclines downward toward each shore. This apex of the dam is at the upper end of the magnesian limestone, above which the bed of the river is twenty feet deep.

The water is represented falling over the lower edge of the magnesian limestone in two places, four hundred feet apart; the lower one is at the place where the crest of the falls was in 1866, at which time the Minneapolis Water-Power Company put in the apron below the falls to protect them from further wear; the upper place is where the crest of the falls was left after the flood of July, 1867, four hundred feet having been washed away in one flood, notwithstanding the attempt to prevent it. One more like freshet would probably destroy the falls, for only one thousand feet of the magnesian limestone remains, and its thickness diminishes as the recession goes on; it was eighteen feet thick at the crest in 1866, and at the present position of the crest of the falls it is about eight feet thick; hence the present pressing emergency.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

G. K. WARREN,

Brevet Major General United States Army, Major of Engineers.

His Excellency Hon. WILLIAM R. MARSHALL,
Governor of Minnesota.

Mr. DONNELLY. I yield a moment to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. JULIAN. This proposition was before the House Committee on the Public Lands, and in that committee I voted against it. I subsequently voted against it in the House, and I shall vote against it now when it comes from the Senate with one hundred thousand additional acres of land granted. My reason for my vote is this: it allows the State of Minnesota to go out two hundred miles or more and cull lands here and there for a local improvement. It is a proper case for a grant in money, but a grant in land is in contravention of our policy in like cases. The conditions of the bill as to settlement and price are wholesome, and the bill is as little obnoxious as any bill of this character can be, yet I cannot consistently vote for it for the reasons stated. I desired simply to say this much in justice to myself, leaving the House to dispose of the measure as it may deem right.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I desire to put an inquiry to the gentleman from Indiana. I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact—and I wish to inquire of the gentleman if it be a fact—that the additional one hundred thousand acres of land which is proposed to be given away by this amendment of the Senate is simply a proposition to appropriate so many acres for the benefit of private mill owners, perhaps involving no public interest at all except so far as it may be involved in the interest of these mill owners? Now, I submit to the House, if we are to go on with this indiscriminate squander of the public lands for the benefit of mere private parties, we may as well give them all away at once and put an end to the matter.

Mr. JULIAN. I only say that while this bill may benefit private mill owners, it is likewise of public interest; but, for the reason I have given, I cannot favor this grant of land.

Mr. DONNELLY. I would say, in answer to the statement of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE,] that the magnitude of this question far exceeds any private interest involved in it. It is true the owners of the water-power will receive some benefit from this grant, but at the same time it will benefit the entire population gathered around these falls, numbering, I think, some fourteen thousand people. Now, if this bill does not pass it is evident from the statement made by General Warren in the letter which has just been read, accompanied with a map which is here for the inspection of the House, that this water-power will soon be destroyed. There are but one thousand feet of magnesian limestone rock eight feet thick intervening between the navigation above and below these falls, so that if that small belt is swept away the water-power will be gone and the people gathered around that place will have to seek homes elsewhere.

Mr. WINDOM. Allow me to ask what will be the effect upon some eighty miles of navigation above the falls, if they are swept away.

Mr. DONNELLY. I am obliged to my colleague for the suggestion. The bill is based not so much upon the preservation of this water-power, important as that is, as upon the preservation of the navigation above the falls for a distance of eighty miles. If you take away the magnesian limestone one thousand feet in breadth, which now constitutes a natural dam across the river, the sandstone rock will be swept away, the bed of the river will fall, and the entire navigation above that point will be destroyed. So that it is for the preservation of the entire navigation above the falls and for the interest of the people both above and below the falls that this bill should be passed.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. How far has the limestone washed away?

Mr. DONNELLY. The letter of General Warren states that in the last year there were some four hundred feet of the rock destroyed by the freshets. There is a breadth of but one thousand feet left, and he states that it is diminishing in thickness as the falls recede, so that the probability is another great freshet will sweep away the whole stratum. Now, the owners of this water-power have attempted in their own interest to preserve it. They expended $37,000 in the attempt, and found they had not money enough. The strength of their work was not great enough to resist the immense flood, and it was swept away. We ask the Government to give this aid out of the lands of Minnesota. There are in the State of Minnesota fifty-three million acres of land. We ask for only one hundred thousand of those acres for the preservation of this great water-power.

Mr. MULLINS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. DONNELLY. Certainly.

Mr. MULLINS. What plan is proposed for this purpose for the benefit of private individuals?

Mr. DONNELLY. Of course the expenditure of the money arising from this grant of land would be a question of engineering skill. The proposition, as I understand it, is to make a wooden sheathing—"aprons" the technical name is—across the crest of the falls, which would serve as a roof, if I may so call it, over which the entire body of water would pass, so that the disintegrating process now going on, by eating away the sand below the rock, thus causing the rock to break off, would be arrested.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. Under whose direction is the money to be expended?

Mr. DONNELLY. Under the supervision of the Engineer Bureau. We do not ask for one instant to interrupt the settlement of the country. We propose to let settlers take these lands at the same price they would have to pay the Government for land under the preemption act.

Mr. LOAN. Will the gentleman allow me to offer an amendment?

Mr. DONNELLY. I will hear it.

Mr. LOAN. I move to amend the amendment of the Senate by adding the following:

Provided, That said lands be selected from any public lands in Alaska.

With that amendment I would be very glad to support this bill.

Mr. SCHENCK. Are there any public lands in Alaska?

Mr. LOAN. Certainly; we have the assurance of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs [Mr. BANKS] that there are in Alaska some of the best lands in the world, and with the most beautiful climate on earth. I hope the gentleman will agree to my amendment.

Mr. DONNELLY. I cannot yield for any such amendment. We are not asking for lands in the State of Missouri, but for lands in the State of Minnesota. The entire delegation from Minnesota are united in asking for this grant. If any evil consequences shall result from this grant, they will result to the people of Minnesota. We, as their representatives, are willing to take the responsibility. I now call the previous question.

Mr. MULLINS. I hope the previous question will not be seconded until something better than this is proposed. This wood stratum is not worth anything; I have tried it myself. Whenever a freshet comes it will carry away your wood-work and all.

The question was upon seconding the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; which was upon agreeing to the amendment of the Senate.

The question was taken; and upon a division, there were—ayes 35, noes 37; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. LAWRENCE of Ohio, and Mr. DONNELLY, were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—yeas 54, noes 46.

Before the result was announced, Mr. JULIAN called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was again taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 54, noes 58; not voting 86; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Axtell, Bailey, Barnes, Benjamin, Boies, Benjamin F. Butler, Calkins, Sidney Clarke, Dawes, Deweese, Donnelly, Driggs, Eliot, Hamilton, Higby, Hinds, Hopkins, Chester D. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Jencks, Alexander H. Jones, Loan, Logan, Loughridge, Marvin, McClure, McCormick, McKee, Morrill, Myers, O'Neill, Peters, Pike, Platts, Price, Ham, Root, Sawyer, Smith, Spalding, Starkweather, Stokes, Taff, Brownbridge, Twichell, Robert T. Van Horn, William Williams, James F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodward—54.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Baldwin, Banks, Barnum, Beaman, Benton, Bingham, Blaine, Blair, Boyer, Brooks, Brodhead, Buckland, Burr, Roderick, B. Butler, Reader, W. Clarke, Correll, Delano, Dixon, Dodge, Eckley, Eggleston, Farwell, Ferry, Finney, Fox, French, Getz, Grady, Griswold, Haight, Halsey, Harding, Hawkins, Holman, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Richard D. Hubbard, Humphrey, Kelley, Korr, Ketcham, Knott, Laffin, George V. Lawrence, Lincoln, Lynch, Mallory, McCarthy, McCullough, Mercur, Morrissey, Newcomb, Niblack, Nicholson, Nunn, Phelps, Poland, Polsey, Pruyn, Randall, Robertson, Robinson, Selye, Shanks, Shellabarger, Stigmeaves, Aaron F. Stevens, Thaddeus Stevens, Stone, Taylor, John Trimble, Lawrence S. Trimble, Van Aernam, Van Aukon, Van Trump, Van Wyck, Ward, Cadwalader, C. Washburn, Eliza B. Washburne, Thomas Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, Wood, and Woodward—86.

So the amendment of the Senate was not agreed to.

Mr. PIKE. I move to reconsider the vote just taken, and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. DONNELLY. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SPALDING. I move that the House now take its recess.

INTERNAL TAX BILL.

The SPEAKER. Before putting the question on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SPALDING,] the Chair will state that probably the tax bill will, during the session of this evening, be returned from the Senate with amendments. Although the business for this evening has been limited to the consideration of reports from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, it would expedite business if the Chair should be authorized to order the printing of those amendments when received and their reference to the Committee of Ways and Means. If there be no objection, that order will be considered as made.

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. SPALDING was agreed to; and the House (at half past four o'clock p. m.) took a recess till half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m., and was called to order by the Speaker, who announced as the only business in order reports from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SARAH BRIGGS—THOMAS MASON.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I moved that the Committee on Invalid Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of the application of Sarah Briggs for a pension, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and of the War of 1812. I find that in submitting that motion I made a mistake. The papers from the consideration of which our committee should have been discharged were those of Thomas Mason. I move that the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and of the War of 1812 be discharged from the further consideration of the application of Sarah Briggs, and that the same be recommended to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. I also move that the Committee on Invalid Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of the case of Thomas Mason, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and of the War of 1812.

The motion was agreed to.

SARAH E. BALL.

Mr. MILLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill (H. R. No. 13824) granting a pension to Sarah E. Ball, widow of James Ball, deceased, late a fireman on the steamer Vidette, connected with the Burnside expedition; which was read a first and second time.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah E. Ball, of Poughkeepsie, New York, widow of James Ball, deceased, who was a fireman on the steamer Vidette, belonging to the Government of the United States, and connected with the Burnside expedition, and who died of disease contracted in the service, leaving a widow and two children under sixteen years of age; Elmore, born June 26, 1853, and George D., born January 3, 1855. She is to be paid a pension of eight dollars per month during her widowhood, to commence May 9, 1862, and at her death or marriage the pension is to be paid to such of the children of James Ball, deceased, as may then be under the age of sixteen years.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MILLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MISS ANN E. HAMILTON.

Mr. MILLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1383) granting a pension to Miss Ann E. Hamilton, of Alleghany City, Pennsylvania, aunt and adopted mother of James E. McKillip and Charles B. McKillip, deceased, late soldiers in the Union Army; which was read a first and second time.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Miss Ann E. Hamilton, aunt and adopted mother of James E. McKillip, late a private in company F, sixty-first regiment Pennsylvania volunteers, who was wounded in the battle at Fair Oaks, Virginia, May 31, 1862, and died of his wounds in Richmond, June 30, 1862; and Charles B. McKillip, late a corporal in company G, sixty-second regiment Pennsylvania volunteers, who was killed in battle at Gaines' Hill, Virginia, June 27, 1862, the pension to be at the rate of eight dollars per month during her natural life, to commence June 27, 1862.

Mr. MAYNARD. This is a rather unusual case, and I should like to have some explanation of it.

Mr. MILLER. The mother of these two young men died when one was a little over one year old and the other was three years old. On her death-bed she requested her sister to take charge of these children. The father lived but a year afterward. The sister, a milliner in Alleghany, took charge of these children and raised them up. Both went into the Army and both fell in battle.

Mr. MAYNARD. That is enough.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MILLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. I ask that the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions upon the bill just passed be printed in the Globe, as the case is a peculiar one.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the application of Miss Ann E. Hamilton, of Alleghany city, Pennsylvania, for a pension, beg leave to report:

That from the evidence laid before your committee it appears that in the year 1833 the sister of the applicant, to wit, Mrs. Emma McKillip, who was intermarried with Samuel McKillip, a resident in Indianapolis, in the State of Indiana, died, leaving two small children, named respectively James E. and Charles P. McKillip; the former of which was born in December, 1835, and the latter in August, 1837. That their father, Samuel McKillip, died in March, 1839, leaving said orphan children in destitute circumstances. That their aunt, the said Miss Ann E. Hamilton, then took said children to her home, and though dependent upon her own industry, (having to make her living by her needle,) fed, clothed, and educated them, giving them the same parental care and attention as if she had been their natural mother, they being in like manner attached to her, and after being raised and educated, and while in return for the parental care, were by their industry aiding in support of their said aunt, the rebellion broke out, known as the war of 1861, and both the young men, being patriotic, enlisted in the Union Army in defense of their country. Said Charles P. McKillip was enrolled and mustered into service July 31, 1861, as corporal in company G, sixty-second regiment Pennsylvania volunteers, to serve three years, and was killed in battle at Gaines' Hill, Virginia, June 27, 1862; and said James E. McKillip was enrolled August 1, 1861, and mustered into service October 31, 1861, in company F, sixty-first regiment Pennsylvania volunteers, to serve three years, and was wounded May 31, 1862, in battle at Fair Oaks, Virginia, taken prisoner by the rebels and died of wounds in Richmond, June 30, 1862.

Thus the two brothers both lost their lives battling in defense of the Union. Neither of them were married or left issue. Their kind aunt and adopted mother who had reared them from their infancy was deprived in her advanced age of these young men, on whom her affections centered, and of that support which they were then rendering her in return for what she had done for them. She now makes application for a pension, back pay, and bounty. As to the back pay and bounty, though she seems in justice entitled to whatever was due these two young men, still that question properly belongs to the Committee on Military Affairs to decide; but as to the pension your committee are of opinion that, under the circumstances disclosed, the said Miss Ann E. Hamilton ought to be allowed a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month, during her natural life, to commence on the 27th of June, 1862, and therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill, and as to the application for back pay and bounty, your committee ask to be discharged from the further consideration thereof, and request that so much of her application as relates thereto be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

GEORGE F. MILLER,
In behalf of the Committee.

CAPTAIN JAMES DONALDSON.

Mr. MILLER, from the same committee, also reported back adversely the petition of Captain James Donaldson for pension as captain, or to be allowed to retire on same allowance as those in the Military Asylum; and the same was laid upon the table.

JASPER EVELAND.

Mr. MILLER, from the same committee, also reported back adversely the petition of Jasper Eveland, of company E, seventh regiment Illinois volunteers; and the same was laid on the table.

MRS. ELIZABETH LANE.

Mr. MILLER, from the same committee, also reported a bill (H. R. No. 1384) granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth Lane, of Boston, Massachusetts, mother of John Lane, deceased, late private in company A, twelfth regiment Massachusetts volunteers; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Elizabeth Lane, mother of John Lane, deceased, late private in company A, twelfth regiment Massachusetts volunteers, killed in action August 30, 1862, at the second battle of Bull Run, Virginia, and that she shall be paid a pension of eight dollars a month during her widowhood, commencing the 80th of August, 1862.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MILLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. CHRISTIANA DICKEY.

Mr. MILLER, from the same committee, also reported back House bill No. 563, granting a pension to Mrs. Christiana Dickey; and moved that it be laid upon the table, as the Commissioner of Pensions proposed to allow the pension.

The motion was agreed to.

MRS. ROSALINDA McCABE.

Mr. MILLER, from the same committee, also reported a bill (H. R. No. 1385) granting a pension to Rosalinda McCabe, widow of Barney McCabe, deceased, late private tenth regiment New York cavalry volunteers; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Rosalinda McCabe, widow of Barney McCabe, tenth regiment New York cavalry volunteers, who died 14th July, 1863, leaving surviving said widow, who has not remarried, and issue three children under sixteen years of age, namely, William, born October 20, 1859; Charles Edwin, born January 29, 1861; and Emily Jane, born May 11, 1863; and that there be paid during her widowhood a pension at the rate of eight dollars a month, to commence the 14th of July, 1863, and also be paid under the provisions of the act of Congress relative to pensions approved July 25, 1861, a further sum of two dollars per month for each of said children until they shall respectively arrive at the age of sixteen years.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MILLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HINMAN L. HALL.

Mr. MILLER, from the same committee, also reported a bill (H. R. No. 1386) granting a pension to Hinman L. Hall; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Hinman L. Hall, late private company D, ninety-seventh regiment New York volunteer infantry, commencing July 17, 1862.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MILLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELIZABETH G. HIBBEN.

Mr. MILLER, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1387) granting a pension to Elizabeth G. Hibben, widow of Rev. Samuel Hibben, deceased, late chaplain of the fourth cavalry regiment Illinois volunteers; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of the applicant, widow of Rev. Samuel Hibben, who was appointed chaplain with the rank of captain, and who died of disease contracted in the service, leaving surviving said widow and one child, a son, of the name of John G. Hibben, born April 19, 1861; and that she be paid during her widowhood a pension of twenty dollars per month, to commence the 10th of June, 1862; and in the event of her marriage or death the pension to be paid to said child if then under sixteen years of age.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MILLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

KATE HIGGINS.

Mr. MILLER, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1388) granting a pension to Kate Higgins; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of the applicant, widow of John Higgins, late private in company F, twenty-eighth regiment Kentucky volunteers, commencing November 11, 1865.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MILLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELIZA DONNELLY.

Mr. MILLER, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1389) granting a pension to Eliza Donnelly, mother of Dudley Donnelly, deceased, late colonel of the twenty-eighth regiment infantry, New York State volunteers; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of the applicant, and that she be paid during her widowhood a pension at the rate of thirty dollars per month, to commence on and after the 4th of December, 1868.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MILLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MICHAEL REILLY.

Mr. MILLER, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1390) granting a pension to Michael Reilly; which was read a first and second time.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of the applicant, late a private in company A, thirteenth regiment Massachusetts volunteer infantry, commencing June 9, 1865.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MILLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JANE McNAUGHTON.

Mr. MILLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1391) granting a pension to Jane McNaughton; which was read a first and second time.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of the applicant, widow of Peter McNaughton, late contract surgeon, and pay her a pension as the widow of a contract surgeon, commencing June 13, 1864.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MILLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ANN WILLIAMS.

Mr. MILLER, from the same committee, reported back a bill (S. No. 851) granting a pension to Ann Williams.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of the applicant, widow of John Williams, late of company E, third regiment Wisconsin cavalry, commencing May 26, 1864.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MILLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHAUNCEY D. ROSE.

Mr. MILLER, from the same committee, also reported a bill (H. R. No. 1392) granting a pension to Chauncey D. Rose, father of Alvin G. Rose, late a sergeant veteran of company A, second regiment of Ohio cavalry volunteers, who was killed in action at Five Forks, Virginia, April 1, 1865; which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Chauncey D. Rose, father of Alvin G. Rose, late a sergeant-veteran in company A, second regiment of Ohio cavalry volunteers, who was killed in action at Five Forks, Virginia, April 1, 1865, to be paid a pension of eight dollars a month, to commence on the 1st of April, 1865, and to continue during his natural life.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MILLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HUGO EICHHOLTZ.

Mr. MILLER, from the same committee, also reported a bill (H. R. No. 1393) granting a pension to Hugo Eichholtz, which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Hugo Eichholtz, late a sergeant in company L, fifteenth New York heavy artillery, and pay him a pension from August 22, 1865, to April 23, 1866.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MILLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ZADOCK T. NEWMAN.

Mr. MILLER, from the same committee, reported back, with an amendment, a bill (H. R. No. 991) for the relief of Zadock T. Newman.

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Zadock T. Newman, at the rate of eight dollars per month from the 2d of January, 1864, and to continue during his natural life.

The amendment was to reduce the pension from eight dollars per month to four dollars per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MILLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DANIEL SHEETS.

Mr. MILLER, from the same committee, also reported a bill (H. R. No. 1394) granting a pension to Daniel Sheets; which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

CHILDREN OF WILLIAM M. WOOTEN.

Mr. MILLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with an amendment, the bill (S. No. 521) granting a pension to the children of William M. Wooten, deceased.

The bill provides for placing on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the names of Alfred C. Wooten, Susan M. T. Wooten, Jesse Wooten, and Rosalia M. Wooten, children under sixteen years of age of William M. Wooten, deceased, late a private in the Daviess county company of home guards, Kentucky militia, who, or their legally-appointed guardian or guardians, are to receive a pension at the rate of fourteen dollars per month, to commence on the 11th day of August, 1864, and to continue until they severally attain the age of sixteen years.

The amendment of the committee was to strike out the words "at the rate of fourteen dollars per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MILLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN SHEETS.

Mr. MILLER, from the same committee, also reported back Senate bill No. 547, granting a pension to John Sheets, with an amendment.

The bill was read. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Sheets, late a private in company F, twelfth regiment West Virginia volunteers, and to pay him a pension at the rate of fifteen dollars per month, to commence on the 14th day of March, 1863.

The amendment of the committee was to strike out the words "at the rate of fifteen dollars per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MILLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN P. FETTY.

Mr. MILLER, from the same committee, also reported back Senate bill No. 518, granting a pension to the widow and child of John P. Fetty, with an amendment.

The bill was read. The Secretary of the Interior, under its provisions, is to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the names of Fannie Fetty, the widow, and Ethel May Fetty, child under sixteen years of age, of John P. Fetty, late a private in company I, fourteenth regiment West Virginia infantry volunteers, and to pay her a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month for herself during widowhood, and two dollars per month for the child until she shall attain the age of sixteen years, commencing October 31, 1864.

The amendment of the committee was to strike out all after the words "pay her a pension" and insert in lieu thereof "commencing October 31, 1864."

The bill, as amended, was ordered to a third

MARY A. DAVIS.

Mr. MILLER, from the same committee, reported adversely on the bill (H. R. No. 596) granting a pension to Mary A. Davis, widow of William P. Davis, a private in the eighteenth regiment of Indiana volunteers in the war of 1861; and the same was laid on the table.

PAY OF A CLERK OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. MILLER. I am instructed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to report back the following resolution; on which I demand the previous question:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the clerk of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, a sum of money which shall make his compensation equal to that of the clerk of the Committee of Claims, to commence July 1, 1868.

Mr. MAYNARD. I must object to that.

Mr. MILLER. This is for the present Congress. The reason why we only say from July 1 is his account is settled up to that time, and we could not go back.

Mr. MAYNARD. The understanding was we should act on pension bills only.

The SPEAKER. The Journal reads "to receive reports from the Committee on Invalid Pensions."

Mr. MAYNARD. Whatever the Journal may say the understanding was manifestly that only pension bills were to be acted upon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] is the author of the resolution, and probably remembers its language better than the Chair does.

Mr. MAYNARD. I am not making a point of order, but I am appealing to the gentlemen of the committee not to bring this subject up which does not relate to the passage of pension bills. We had this matter up before, and it underwent some discussion. If it is to be pressed I should feel it incumbent upon me to oppose the resolution in the shape in which it now is.

Mr. MILLER. I will merely state that this clerk's compensation is entirely inadequate. We have had before us some seven hundred cases. This resolution will give him $1,500 a year, just what the clerk of the Committee of Claims and the clerk of the Committee of Private Land Claims receive. When this case was up before the objection of the gentleman was that he did not want any more perpetual offices. We do not require this office to be perpetual; but upon consulting the Clerk of the House (Mr. McPHERSON) we find that we cannot go back beyond the time named, because the accounts up to that time are settled. We only propose to pay him a proper compensation for the duties he has performed. The committee of which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] is a member has a clerk who will receive for the remainder of this session the same compensation we propose for our clerk; and surely he has no more work to do than our clerk has.

Mr. MAYNARD. I have notified the gentleman that I shall feel it incumbent upon me to resist this proposition. I trust he will not press it at this time, for we want this evening session for the benefit of the widows and children of soldiers who are the proper objects of our legislation.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I suggest to my colleague on the committee [Mr. MILLER] to withdraw the resolution for the present.

Mr. MILLER. Very well; I will withdraw it for the present; but I will offer it at another time.

HANNAH HINDMAN.

Mr. BENJAMIN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported adversely upon the petition of Hannah Hindman, for a pension; and the same was laid on the table.

GENERAL WARD H. BURNETT.

Mr. BENJAMIN, from the same committee, reported adversely upon House bill No. 618, for the relief of General Ward H. Burnett; and the same was laid on the table.

WILLIAM B. EDWARDS.

Mr. BENJAMIN, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1399) granting an increased pension to William B. Edwards; which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William B. Edwards, who was granted a pension of eight dollars a month by an act approved April 20, 1854, and to pay him a pension at the rate of fifteen dollars per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving, the increase to commence June 6, 1866.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BENJAMIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JONATHAN H. PERRY.

Mr. BENJAMIN, from the same committee, also reported a bill (H. R. No. 1400) granting a pension to Jonathan H. Perry; which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of eight dollars a month, the name of Jonathan H. Perry, father of Anthony H. Perry, late of company I, third regiment New Jersey volunteer infantry, commencing August 15, 1865.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BENJAMIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM I. COTTY.

Mr. BENJAMIN, from the same committee, also reported back, with a recommendation that it do pass, House bill No. 1295, granting a pension to William I. Cotty, late of the twenty-first Missouri infantry volunteers.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of eight dollars per month, the name of William I. Cotty, late a member of the twenty-first Missouri infantry volunteers, commencing June 30, 1862.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARIA RAFTERY.

Mr. BENJAMIN, from the same committee, also reported back, with a recommendation that the same do pass, Senate bill, No. 292, granting a pension to Maria Raftery.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be read a third time.

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Maria Raftery, widow of Patrick Raftery, late a corporal in company H, thirty-third regiment Massachusetts volunteers, on the pension-roll, at the rate of eight dollars per month during her widowhood, commencing June 2, 1863, and two dollars per month for each child of Patrick Raftery, under the age of sixteen years, commencing June 25, 1866, and to continue until they shall respectively attain the age of sixteen years.

The bill was then read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BENJAMIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ANNA M. HOWARD.

Mr. BENJAMIN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back without amendment a bill (S. No. 498) granting a pension to Anna M. Howard.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Anna M. Howard, mother of George W. Howard, late a private in company C, eleventh regiment New Jersey volunteers, and allow and pay her a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month, from February 12, 1864, to continue during her widowhood.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BENJAMIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FRANCIS T. RICHARDSON.

Mr. BENJAMIN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, without amendment, a bill (H. R. No. 1337) granting an increase of pension to Frances T. Richardson, widow of the late Major General Israel B. Richardson.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Frances T. Richardson, widow of the late Major General Israel B. Richardson, for pension at the rate of fifty dollars per month from November 3, 1862, when General Richardson died from wounds received in the battle of Antietam, the pension to be continued during her widowhood, and if that should terminate, then to be paid to Israel Philip Richardson, sole surviving child of General Richardson, until he shall become sixteen years old. The second section provides for the discontinuance of the pension heretofore allowed to Frances T. Richardson under general law; and the sum so received by her is to be deducted from the pension granted by this bill, which pension is to be subject to the provisions of the general pension law.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BENJAMIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INTERNAL TAX BILL.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McDONALD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (H. R. No. 1284) to change and more effectually secure the collection of internal tax on distilled spirits and tobacco, and to amend the tax on banks.

The SPEAKER. By order of the House, this bill with the amendments of the Senate will be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

MARY A. DAVIS.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. I desire to ask that in the case of the bill granting a pension to Mary A. Davis, instead of the adverse report being accepted and the papers being laid on the table, the bill be taken up for action now, in order that I may make a few remarks on the subject.

Mr. MULLINS. I shall object to that.

Mr. MILLER. I will merely say to the gentleman that the unanimous opinion of the committee was that this case was not one upon which they would be justified in reporting favorably.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. The House, I think, will not object to my making a few remarks on this bill when I state that the case occurred in my own regiment, and that I know more about it than any committee can know.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can discuss the bill if the Committee on Invalid Pensions will grant him the time. This evening was set apart for business of that committee.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. This is a pension case.

Mr. PERHAM. If there is anything in the case meritorious the committee will be glad to hear it and to report favorably if the facts show that we can do so. From the papers before the committee we did not feel authorized to report on it favorably. The gentleman from Indiana can come before the committee, and if he can convince us, well and good.

The bill was recommitted to the committee with leave to report at any time after the morning hour.

Mr. BEATTY, from the same committee, also reported back, with a recommendation that the same do pass, Senate bill No. 501, granting a pension to Harriet W. Pond.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be read a third time.

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Harriet W. Pond, wife of James Pond, formerly Harriet W. Stinson, and to allow and pay to her as in her own right, and not subject to the claim or control of her husband, a pension at the rate of seven hundred dollars per month, to commence on the 21st day of August, 1864, and to continue during her natural life.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BEATTY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Some time subsequently,

Mr. MAYNARD said: I did not at the time pay particular attention to the bill granting a pension to Harriet W. Pond, or I would have asked some explanation of it, as it seems to be a bill granting a pension to a woman who has a husband living.

The SPEAKER. The Chair noticed at the time the bill was read that it was a peculiar bill.

Mr. BEATTY. The report accompanying the bill explains it fully. I ask that the report be printed in the Globe, in connection with the bill.

No objection was made.

The report was as follows, made by Mr. VAN WINKLE, of the Senate:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. Harriet W. Pond, respectfully report:

That the said petition, with accompanying papers, was originally referred to the Committee of Claims, who reported the facts of the case as follows, which, after due examination, this committee adopt as correct:

She represents that she volunteered her services to minister to the necessities of the soldiers during the rebellion; that she left her home in Old Town, Maine, and went out with the sixth Maine volunteers, and continued an active attendant upon the sick and dying until the close of the war; was on thirteen battle-fields and many heavy skirmishes, and among other things assisted in preserving the names of the dead and procuring the bodies of many for their friends; and spent freely of her own money for the sick, wounded, and dying to the amount of at least $3,000. Her son, of that regiment, was killed in battle, but had expended $1,000 of his own money, at his mother's request, for the same purpose.

She represents that in field and hospital she attended to the necessities of all soldiers alike, and without any expectation of remuneration, and would not ask for it now but her health and constitution have suffered by fatigues, hardship, and exposure, and she is left without means of support.

She further represents that at the battle of Antietam, while assisting in the removal of wounded soldiers, a wagon was overthrown, killing three soldiers and breaking her own leg; that she renewed her labors for the soldiers before her limb was strong, causing it to be thrown out of place, and erysipelas set in, by which she is permanently disabled.

She shows, too, that in 1863, while with the Maine regiment, she was captured by the rebels, and by them robbed of $250 in money, and clothing beside.

Her affidavit shows that she expended $4,000 in the service, and there is some corroborative testimony upon the subject. The papers indicate her good character and persistency in the work.

The Committee of Claims conclude their report as follows:

Your committee are of opinion that compensation in such cases, if made at all, should be by the States whose regiments accept the services and permit such attendance. This committee has hitherto declined to recognize such claims. But in consideration of the injury she has received, and loss of her son, on whom, it is alleged, she leaned for support, it may be proper that a pension be provided for the petitioner in this case; and they recommend that her papers be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

In accordance with this recommendation the said petition and papers were referred to this committee, who proceeded to consider the same. They do not find that there is any law under the provisions of which the petitioner is entitled to a pension, unless on account of the death of her son, a private in the service, who was killed in battle; but it does not appear that she was so dependent on him at and before the time of his death as to bring her within the said provisions.

If this is so, the case is one of a class of which several, within the last few years, after being previously referred to the Military, Naval, or other Committees, have been sent to the Pension Committee. The class referred to consists of cases in which relief or reward is asked of the Government on account of alleged exemplary services in the Army or Navy. It is evident that the consideration of such cases does not fall within the proper duties of the Committee on Pensions. They have, however, for two or three years reported on them, usually adversely, or have asked to be discharged from their further consideration, not because they had been improperly referred, but as a conclusion from the facts presented. Many of these cases have asked a double or increased pension for the widows of officers of the higher rank, the rate not increasing after the rank of lieutenant colonel is reached in the ascending scale. Such increase not being allowed by law, it will be readily perceived that what is asked in such cases is a mere gratuity. For at least two years past no such case has been reported on favorably by this committee. If they approved such increase, they would deem it their duty to report an amendment to the general law, increasing the rates of pensions in the cases mentioned, thus putting all on the same footing.

There are, however, in the case of the petitioner to whom this report more particularly relates, some facts at least analogous to the cases in which pensions are allowed by law. The petitioner had devoted herself to the service of her country by administering to the wants of sick and wounded soldiers, and this for years continuously; and while actually assisting in removing some of the wounded from the battlefield of Antietam, an accident by which three of her charge were killed made her a cripple for life. In consideration of this the committee submit to the Senate the accompanying bill granting her the pension of an acting assistant surgeon, as in her own right, from the time she left the Army during her natural life.

It is proper, in explanation of some of the phraseology of the bill, to state that since the war the petitioner, who during its continuance was a widow, was again married; but that her husband is himself greatly disabled by disease contracted while an officer in the Army during the war, and unable to contribute to her subsistence. In ordinary cases pensions are not granted to married women, but as in this case the pension, if granted, is in consideration of her own personal services and permanent disability, the committee have sought and intended to make it payable to her in her individual right until her death.

LUCINDA R. JOHNSON.

Mr. BEATTY, from the same committee, also reported back, with a recommendation that the same do pass, Senate bill No. 500, granting a pension to Lucinda R. Johnson.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be read a third time.

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of Lucinda R. Johnson, the widow of Dr. B. Johnson, of Illinois, late a contract surgeon in the military service of the United States, and to pay her a pension at the rate of seventeen dollars per month, to commence March 7, 1865, and to continue during her widowhood.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BEATTY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HENRY BROWN.

Mr. BEATTY, from the same committee, also reported back, with an amendment, Senate bill No. 517, granting a pension to the widow and children of Henry Brown.

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the names of Rehman Brown, the widow, and Nacey J., Alvey F., Sarah C., and Henry, children under sixteen years of age of Henry Brown, late a private in company K, tenth regiment Tennessee cavalry volunteers, and to pay her a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month during widowhood, and two dollars per month for each of the children until they shall attain the age of sixteen years, commencing January 31, 1864.

The amendment was to strike out from and including the words, "at the rate of eight dollars per month" and to insert "commencing January 31, 1864."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BEATTY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARIA SCHWEITZER AND CHILDREN.

Mr. BEATTY, from the same committee, also reported back, with an amendment, Senate bill No. 422 granting a pension to Maria Schweitzer and the minor children of Conrad Schweitzer, deceased.

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll the names of Maria Schweitzer, the widow, and Carl B. and Maria Schweitzer, children under sixteen years of age of Conrad Schweitzer, late a private in company C, sixty-first regiment New York volunteers, and allow and pay her a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month for herself during widowhood, and two dollars per month for each of the children, until they severally attain the age of sixteen years, commencing February 2, 1865.

The amendment was to strike out all after the words "pay her a pension" and to insert the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, commencing February 2, 1865."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BEATTY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHILDREN OF ROBERT T. WEED, DECEASED.

Mr. BEATTY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with an amendment, a bill (S. No. 583) granting a pension to John A. Weed and Elizabeth J. Weed, minor children of Robert T. Weed, deceased.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the names of John A. Weed and Elizabeth J. Weed, only surviving children of Robert T. Weed, late a private in the second Indiana volunteer battery, who died in the service of the United States and in the line of duty, and to pay to them, or their legally-appointed guardian or guardians, a pension of eight dollars per month from November 10, 1864, the date of the death of their father, until they respectively attain the age of sixteen years.

The amendment of the committee was to strike out all after the words "a pension," and insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, commencing November 10, 1862."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BEATTY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JULIA WHISTLER.

Mr. BEATTY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back adversely a bill (S. No. 516) granting a pension to Julia Whistler; which was laid on the table.

JACOB LEIT.

Mr. BEATTY. I move that the Committee on Invalid Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Jacob Leit, of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, for additional bounty, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

GEORGE T. BRIEN.

Mr. VAN AERNAM, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with an amendment, a bill (S. No. 314) for the relief of George T. Brien.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to allow and pay to George T. Brien, out of the naval pension fund, a pension at the rate of fifteen dollars per month, in lieu of the pension of five dollars per month heretofore allowed him, the pension to commence from and after the passage of this act and to continue during his natural life.

The amendment of the committee was to strike out all after the words "at the rate of" and insert in lieu thereof "eight dollars per month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VAN AERNAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PATRICK COLLINS.

Mr. VAN AERNAM, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1406) granting a pension to Patrick Collins; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Patrick Collins, a resident of Columbus, Franklin county, Ohio, and late an employé of the United States military railroad construction corps, and to pay him a pension at the rate of ten dollars per month.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VAN AERNAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN GRIDLEY.

Mr. VAN AERNAM, from the same committee, also reported a bill (H. R. No. 1407) granting a pension to John Gridley; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Gridley, late of company G ninth regiment Michigan volunteers, commencing February 4, 1865.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VAN AERNAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CATHARINE GENSLE.

Mr. VAN AERNAM, from the same committee, also reported a bill (H. R. No. 1408) granting a pension to Catharine Gensler; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Catharine Gensler, mother of John D. Gensler, late private company I one hundred and sixty-ninth regiment Pennsylvania volunteers, commencing June 29, 1864.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VAN AERNAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ASA F. HOLCOMB.

Mr. VAN AERNAM, from the same committee, also reported a bill (H. R. No. 1409) granting a pension to Asa F. Holcomb; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Asa F. Holcomb, private company B twenty-fourth regiment New York cavalry, commencing September 29, 1864.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VAN AERNAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EMILY B. BIDWELL.

Mr. VAN AERNAM, from the same committee, also reported back House bill No. 1363, granting a pension to Emily B. Bidwell, widow of the late Brigadier General Daniel B. Bidwell, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Emily B. Bidwell, widow of the late Brigadier General Daniel B. Bidwell, at the rate of fifty dollars per month from the 19th of October, 1864, at which date he was killed at the battle of Cedar Mountain, Virginia, to continue during her widowhood; and the pension heretofore allowed her under the general law shall be discontinued, and the sum received by her under the same shall be deducted from the pension hereby granted.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VAN AERNAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. EMMA M. MOORE.

Mr. BENJAMIN, from the same committee, also reported back adversely Senate bill No. 519, granting a pension to Mrs. Emma M. Moore.

Mr. MAYNARD. I hope the gentleman will give the House some reason why that bill ought not to pass.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Mr. Chairman, in that case the facts are about as follows: Mrs. Moore was at one time the widow of Lieutenant Cox, United States Navy. He died about fifteen years ago, and his widow was pensioned under the general law at the rate of twenty-five dollars per month. She continued to receive that pension for several years until she married Commodore Moore. Commodore Moore, prior to his marriage with widow Cox, had belonged to the United States Navy. He resigned from the United States Navy and went into the navy of Texas when Texas was an independent nation. He continued in the Texan service until about the time that country was annexed to the United States, and although the Texan navy was annexed to that of the United States, the officers belonging to the Texan navy were not commissioned in the United States service. They for a long time importuned Congress, and finally got their claim into the courts, but both the courts and Congress decided adversely to them. Commodore Moore remained a private citizen up to his death, which was some five years ago. Mrs. Moore comes in now and asks that the pension she received by her former husband, who at the time of his death was an officer in the United States Navy, may be revived to her. The Senate passed a bill reviving it. The Committee on Invalid Pensions are of opinion that we should not extend the provisions of the pension law that far, or if we do, that it should be by general law which should cover all such cases. We are of opinion that this party has no claim on the United States Government for a pension; certainly not in consequence of her marriage with Commodore Moore, and certainly not, having married after the death of her first husband, by virtue of whose death she received the pension I have stated. Hence we report adversely upon the bill.

Mr. MAYNARD. If my memory is not at fault, there are some personal considerations clustering around this widow, this patriotic woman, that would incline the House to take the same view of the case that is taken by the Senate. She was unquestionably entitled to a pension by reason of the services and death of her first husband. She drew a pension until she married her second husband. The second husband is now dead, and she is doubly a widow. I see no principle that is to be violated, as we have intermitted the pension during the time of her coverture, by restoring her again to the pension-list, and I confess it would gratify me much to see that done. I speak without any personal knowledge of the party, without ever having even seen her, but merely from what I have learned through others who are somewhat acquainted with her personal history. If the gentleman will allow me, I will move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions with permission to report at any time, and will ask them to give it another examination.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I do not think there is any necessity for recommitting the bill to the committee. I presume no instance can be found in the history of our legislation where we have revived a pension that has lapsed by virtue of the marriage of a widow. I am not aware of any such precedent. If there is any reason why it should be done in this case the same reason would unquestionably apply to every case of the kind, and they are numerous, as the committee know. Were the committee instructed by the House to inquire into the expediency of so amending the general law that in the event of the death of a second husband the pension should be revived to the widow, that would present the question distinctly as applied to all such cases. But I am decidedly opposed, and I believe that is the view of the committee, to taking this isolated case and making it an exception to all other cases. Numerous cases of the kind have come before the committee, and they have reported adversely upon them in every instance, so far as I know.

Mr. MAYNARD. If I am not mistaken in reference to the identity of this party, she presents an unusually strong and an unusually meritorious claim, if there can be such a thing as a meritorious woman connected with the naval service. If I am not mistaken she is descended on her father's side from a naval officer who has reflected great renown on our Navy. I mean Commodore Rogers.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I know nothing of her parentage.

Mr. MAYNARD. If I am not mistaken the family have reflected upon our naval service more renown than, perhaps, any other family in the country that has served in the Navy. If that be the case, it presents an appeal to us, it seems to me, that scarcely any other woman in the country could present. For that reason I would be glad to have this bill recommitted, so that the committee may again examine it and see whether there are not facts connected with it which would take it out of the general run of cases.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I know nothing of the parentage of this lady, or of her history, except what is contained in the papers before the committee. But I am of opinion that it makes no difference in that respect, and that we should not bend our legislation when dispensing favors of this kind—for they are nothing but favors—to fit any particular case; but we should legislate for all cases, and preserve a principle in the legislation for all these cases. If the principle in this bill is correct, it will apply with the same force to all the other cases of a like character; and, as I said before, they are numerous. This party received a pension under the law; she married the second time with the full knowledge that the pension would lapse in consequence of her second marriage. The committee of the Senate base their report in favor of this bill upon the fact that her second husband should have been incorporated in the Navy of the United States; that is the argument that is used in the report of the Senate committee. But the House committee were not able to see the force of that argument in every way. That question has been discussed over and over again in Congress, and had received an adjudication in the courts of the country, and the decision had been the same in each case; and we could see no good reason for coming in at this late day, when more than twenty years had elapsed, and reversing the decision of former Congresses, and the decision of the courts, and placing this party upon the pension-roll of the country; we did not think it would be right and just to do so. Hence there was no other alternative than to report adversely upon the bill of the Senate. I have no objection to having the bill recommitted, but I think the result would still be the same.

Mr. MULLINS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a few moments?

Mr. BENJAMIN. Certainly.

Mr. MULLINS. I know nothing of this case beyond what has been stated on this floor. But it strikes my mind forcibly that the Committee on Invalid Pensions have taken the right view of the matter. Because reminiscences cluster around this woman on account of her name or anything else, that is no argument to my mind in favor of departing from our general principles. As to her noble birth and the line from which she has descended, I beg leave to say that there are those who have sprung from very low families, whose parents were, perhaps, kicked out of the furrow a half dozen times by a bad plow while endeavoring to get corn for their children to live on, are just as much entitled to the mercy and magnanimity of this Government, and even much more so, than any one who had rich parents, or who may happen to be the widow of a naval officer.

Mr. MAYNARD. I would ask my colleague [Mr. MULLINS] whether all the pensions that we give by special legislation to widows and children are not in cases which come outside of the ordinary rule of law; the cases of persons who cannot obtain pensions at the Pension Bureau under our general laws? And I would also ask whether we do not give pensions to them in consequence of meritorious services rendered the country by their fathers, by their husbands, and possibly in some instances by their sons?

Mr. MULLINS. I comprehend the idea, and I would reply—

Mr. MAYNARD. The gentleman will allow me a moment further. Did we not, very early in the history of this country, give to the daughters of Count de Grasse, a foreigner, a gratuity, a bonus, and finally place them on the pension-roll?

Mr. MULLINS. Yes, I think the Government has fully acquitted itself in all such cases, and ought to have stopped long ago in many of them. And here there comes up a lady, who, being of proper age and disposing memory, [laughter,] elected by her own choice to abandon the protection of the Government and take to her side one whom she looked upon as a more reliable support than the Government, which was pensioning her in consequence of the chivalrous acts of her first husband.

Mr. MAYNARD. My colleague will allow me to ask whether he, of all the men in this House, would interpose any obstacle in the way of either man or woman contracting a second marriage? [Laughter.]

Mr. MULLINS. By no means; but when persons do elect of their own choice to marry a second time I do not want to pay them for doing it. [Laughter.] It might be considered something like bribing them to go against their will. I want their choice to be open and free. We should not give a pension in this case. The lady might have a third husband, and he might die, and we might have to give her another pension for him. [Laughter.] To grant pensions in this way is perhaps bad luck to the husband. [Laughter.] I want this lady to die in peace and quietude. As she has elected her present position let her remain in it peacefully and quietly. She is now in fine credit. She is the widow of two naval officers, one of whom seems to have been in the service of a foreign country. The courts and Congress have decided that enough has been done in the way of payments for Texas by our paying in the first place millions on millions to buy her and afterward paying millions to fight her. I think it is time we should stop paying people coming from Texas, whether male or female. [Laughter.] I do not care to run in debt in that way. It does not pay. I think the committee are right in their report in this case.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I desire to correct the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. MULLINS.] This lady was never a Texan.

Mr. MULLINS. But she chose a husband who was a citizen of Texas; and husband and wife being one, how you can make her otherwise than a citizen of the same country? [Laughter.]

Mr. BENJAMIN. This lady married Commodore Moore in 1849, after the annexation of Texas, and when he was a citizen of the United States.

Mr. MULLINS. Had he become naturalized? He had been a citizen of the republic of Texas. Did he become naturalized by the annexation?

Mr. BENJAMIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that this bill be recommitted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

HENRIETTA NOBLES.

Mr. PERHAM, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back without amendment a bill (S. No. 232) granting a pension to Henrietta Nobles.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll the name of Henrietta Nobles, widow of Daniel G. Nobles, late a captain of the fourth regiment Tennessee infantry, and to pay her a pension at the rate of twenty dollars per month, to commence November 2, 1862, and continue during her widowhood.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PAYMENT OF PENSIONS IN COIN.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions whether there is any prospect of the committee acting on the bill referred to them for the payment of pensioners in coin?

Mr. PERHAM. Mr. Chairman, in regard to that subject I have to answer that the committee has been very busily engaged during all the session, when they could possibly be in committee, in providing pensions for the widows and orphans and invalid soldiers and sailors who have no pensions, and have not been able to get any under the general law. They have not, however, been entirely regardless of the subject of the increase of pensions either in this or the preceding Congress. It will be recollected that a few years since our pension laws were such that a poor widow who had six or eight or ten children, as many had, dependent upon her for support, she received eight dollars a month. Measures have been matured and passed by this Congress whereby a widow who has children receives an additional pension of two dollars a month, and twenty-four dollars a year for each child dependent upon her for support. We found, so far as individuals were concerned, that a great many entirely disabled, where they had lost both arms, both legs, or both eyes, were receiving eight dollars a month. We have increased those in proportion to the disability; those partially disabled getting eight dollars; those very severely, fifteen dollars; another class, twenty dollars; and those totally disabled, so as to be entirely dependent on others, twenty-five dollars a month. This makes an increase on the pension bills of something like fifty per cent. We have thus done tolerably well in increasing pensions. So far as the particular subject referred to is concerned, the committee will be glad to take it up, as they have all questions in regard to pensions, at the earliest possible opportunity. They may be able to report at this session, but I cannot say whether they will or not.

CATHARINE ECKHARDT.

Mr. PERHAM, from the same committee, also reported back the bill (S. No. 549) granting an increase of pension to Catharine Eckhardt, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to pay to Catharine Eckhardt, widow of Henry L. Eckhardt, late a private in company C, fifth regiment Missouri volunteers, in addition to the pension heretofore granted her, the further sum of two dollars per month, for and on account of the care, custody, and maintenance by her of Anna M. Eckhardt, a child under sixteen years of age of Henry L. Eckhardt by a former wife, from the 3d day of February, 1868, while she has such care, custody, and maintenance, until the child shall attain the age of sixteen years.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CARRIE E. BURDETT.

Mr. PERHAM, from the same committee, also reported the bill (S. No. 238) granting a pension to Carrie E. Burdett, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was read. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Carrie E. Burdett, widow of James F. Burdett, late an acting assistant surgeon in the military service, on the pension roll, at the rate of seventeen dollars per month, to commence on the 6th of August, 1866, and to continue during her widowhood.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN W. JAMISON, DECEASED.

Mr. PERHAM, from the same committee, also reported back Senate bill No. 427, for the relief of the widow and children of John W. Jamison, deceased, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CATHARINE WANDS.

Mr. PERHAM, from the same committee, reported back a bill (S. No. 497) for the relief of Catharine Wands, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HENRY REEMS.

Mr. PERHAM, from the same committee, reported back a bill (S. No. 495) for the relief of Henry Reems, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SYLVESTER NUGENT.

Mr. PERHAM, from the same committee, reported back a bill (S. No. 456) for the relief of Sylvester Nugent, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SARAH K. JOHNSON.

Mr. PERHAM, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1414) granting a pension to Sarah K. Johnson; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah K. Johnson, late of Salisbury, North Carolina, and pay her a pension at the rate of thirty dollars per month, commencing March 4, 1868, and to continue during her natural life.

Mr. MULLINS. I desire to inquire why the committee propose in the case of this lady that the pension shall continue during her natural life?

Mr. PERHAM. It is a pension on account of her own services.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. PERHAM. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. POLSLEY] has prepared a most interesting report in this case, and I move that it be printed in the Globe with the other proceedings.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that would be proper, as it is a novel case.

Mr. MILLER. I think where there are reports in these cases they should go into the Globe.

The SPEAKER. That would enlarge the Globe very much.

The report was ordered to be printed. It is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. Sarah K. Johnson, have given the same their most careful consideration, and ask leave to make the following report:

That our northern women have won the highest praise for their devotion and self-sacrifice in the cause of their country, but great as their labors and sacrifices have been they are certainly inferior to those of some of the loyal women of the South, who, for the love they bore to their country and its flag, braved all the contempt, obloquy, and scorn which southern women could heap upon them; who lived for years in utter isolation from the society of relations, friends, and neighbors because they would render such aid and succor as was in their power to the defenders of the national cause in prison, in sorrow, and in suffering. Among these heroines none deserves a higher place in the record of womanly patriotism and courage than Mrs. Sarah K. Johnson.

At the breaking out of the war Mrs. Johnson was teaching a school in Salisbury, where she was born and always resided. When the first prisoners were brought into that place the southern women turned out in their carriages and with a band escorted them through the town, and when they filed past saluted them with contemptuous epithets. From that time Mrs. Johnson determined to devote herself to the amelioration of the condition of the prisoners; and the testimony of thousands of the Union soldiers confined there proves how nobly she performed the duties she undertook. It was no easy task, for she was entirely alone, being the only woman who openly advocated Union sentiments and attempted to administer to the wants of the prisoners. For fifteen months none of the women of Salisbury spoke to her or called upon her, and every possible indignity was heaped upon her as a 'Yankee sympathizer.' Her scholars were withdrawn from her school, and it was broken up, and her means were very limited; nevertheless, she accomplished more by sympathetic arrangements than many would have done with a larger outlay of money.

When the first exchange of prisoners was made she went to the depot to arrange some pallets for some of the sick who were leaving, when she stumbled in the crowd, and looking down she found a young Federal soldier who had fainted and fallen, and was in danger of being trodden to death. She raised him up and called for water, but none of the people would get her a drop to save a 'Yankee's' life. Some of the soldiers who were in the cars threw their canteens to her, and she succeeded in reviving him; during this time the crowd heaped upon her every insulting epithet they could think of, and her life even was in danger. But she braved it all, and succeeded in obtaining permission from Colonel Godwin, then in command of the post, who was a kind-hearted man, to let her remove him to her own house, promising to take care of him as if he were her own son, and if he died to give him Christian burial. He was in the last stages of consumption, and she felt sure he would die if taken to the prison hospital. None of the citizens of the place would even assist in carrying him, and after a time two gentlemen from Richmond stepped forward and helped to convey him to her house. There she watched over him for hours, as he was in a terrible state from neglect, having had blisters applied to his chest which had never been dressed and were full of vermin.

The poor boy, whose name was Hugh Perry, was from Wisconsin, and belonged to the fifth Michigan cavalry, only lived a few days, and she had a grave dug for him in her garden, for burial had been refused in the public graveyard, and she had been threatened that if she had him interred decently his body should be dug up and buried in the street, and they even threatened to take his body from the house for that purpose. Mrs. Johnson assured them that they could only do that over her dead body, and that she would resist them to death.

For this and similar things she was cited to appear before the sessions of the Presbyterian church; for this and similar acts of humanity she was literally ostracised from society, and when the war came to an end she was compelled to leave the place.

During the first two years she was enabled to do a great many acts of kindness for the prisoners, but after that time she was watched very closely as a Yankee sympathizer, and the rules of the prison were stricter, and what she could do was done by strategy. Her means now were much reduced, but she still continued in her good works, cutting up her carpets and spare blankets to make into moccasins, and when new squads of prisoners arrived supplied them with bread and water as they halted in front of her house, which they were compelled to do for hours, waiting the routine of being mustered into the prison. They were not allowed to leave the ranks, and she would turn an old-fashioned windlass herself for hours, raising water from her well; for the prisoners were often twenty-four to forty-eight hours on the railroad without rations or water.

Generally the officer in command would grant her request, but once a sergeant told her, in reply, if she gave any of them a drop of water or a piece of bread or dared to come outside of her gate for that purpose he would pin her to the earth with his bayonet. She defied him, and taking her pail of water in one hand and a basket of bread in the other, she walked directly past him on her errand of mercy; he followed her, placing his bayonet between her shoulders, just so that she could feel the cold steel. She turned and coolly asked him why he did not pin her to the earth, as he had threatened to do, but got no reply. Then some of the rebels said, "Sergeant, you can't make anything out of that woman, you had better let her alone," and she performed her work unmolested. She came North last summer to visit her daughter who had been placed in school in Connecticut by the kindness of some of the officers she had befriended while in prison, transportation having been given her by Generals Schofield and Carter, who testified to the services she had rendered our prisoners, and that she was entitled to the gratitude of the Government and all loyal citizens.

Your committee desire to include in their report extracts from a letter of Mr. Eddy, who was confined in Salisbury prison, North Carolina:

"I was a prisoner at that place, and as such formed the acquaintance of Mrs. Johnson, an acquaintance never to be forgotten. Her kindness to the prisoners literally knew no bounds but her abilities, and these seemed to increase with the demands of the case.

"For, like the poor woman of old, 'her barrel of meal wasted not, neither did her cruse of oil fail.' She was one of those mysterious women who seemed always to abound, and yet to have nothing herself. She is a wonderful woman. No prisoner was sick the fact of which she did not hear at once, and some comfort always came. There was not a single exception. She attended to our washing at a pecuniary loss to herself. She wrote letters of comfort and good cheer. She wept with us, and when we went away she rejoiced with us, and was the only one who extended to us a kind and parting hand.

"That she did what she did from pure motives is clear to my mind; first, in that she did it in face of such opposition; second, in that she did it to the impoverishing of herself; third, in that she did it when the almost universal sentiment of the South was that the confederacy must be a success. I believe her motives were pure. I believe she sacrificed everything for the Union soldiers. She was one among the few. We prisoners found but one woman like her."

The following is a copy of a letter signed by twelve officers of the United States Navy, and at the time it was written were prisoners in Salisbury:

CONFEDERATE STATES MILITARY PRISON, SALISBURY, NORTH CAROLINA, January 22, 1863.

MADAM: Allow me to tender you my many grateful acknowledgments, and those of my officers and fellow-prisoners, for your kind and very acceptable loan of crockery for the use of the mess, without which we should be compelled to take our meals with no regard to proprieties, not to say the decencies of civilized life.

Poor as we are in everything but thanks, we can only pray that this and all the other similar acts of kindness on your part may be abundantly recompensed by Him who has declared that inasmuch as they are done unto the least of one of these his brethren they are done unto Him. I trust that when (if ever) we are so happy as to be released from these bonds we shall be privileged, before returning to our homes and the beloved ones whose hearts are this day full of sorrow and anxiety on our account, to express to you in person our gratitude for your kindness and sympathy for us in the calamity which has befallen us, strangers as we are to you, and with no other claims than that of a common humanity and Christian brotherhood, both unhappily too often disregarded by both parties in these evil times.

Dr. C. D. Palmer, of Cincinnati, Ohio, certifies as follows:

"I have known her personally and intimately since September, 1866, during which time I have been family physician of Mrs. Sarah K. Johnson. My attention was first drawn to her in the capacity of city physician for the poor, on account of her pecuniary want. I found her much reduced in health, requiring my services almost constantly. Her nervous system has been so seriously impaired from what she has undergone during the war that she has not been, nor do I think she ever will be, able to maintain herself, or attend even to her ordinary household duties. She is a woman of great force of character and strength of will, and no ordinary amount of physical and mental labor could have so wrecked her constitution."

From evidence and letters presented to the committee they are of the opinion (as expressed in one of the letters written to her by one who had received aid and comfort from her) that she "lives in the hearts and memories of thousands of our people." She was "the angel of mercy—nobly stepping between the forlorn prisoner and the phantom of despair—giving to his crushed heart a bright remembrance of a good and kind mother, bidding him be patient and cheerful, that the hour of deliverance might find him able to enjoy the anticipated pleasure of a union with the loved ones around the family hearth."

Your committee have examined the case with much care, and take pleasure in reporting the accompanying bill, granting her a pension of thirty dollars per month, commencing March 4, 1868, it appearing that Mrs. Johnson is very feeble in health, and that she has been obliged to leave her native State of North Carolina in consequence of her continued kindness to Union prisoners in the Salisbury prison.

LAND BOUNTIES.

Mr. PERHAM, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back the following resolution; and the same was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law for bounties in land, to be given to the soldiers of the nation in the late war of the rebellion, and report by bill or otherwise.

CLERK OF PENSION COMMITTEE.

Mr. MILLER. I now submit the resolution which is reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the clerk of the Committee on Invalid Pensions a sum of money which shall make his compensation equal to that of the clerk of the Committee of Claims, to commence July 1, 1868.

Mr. MAYNARD. I desire to say in this case that in the opposition I have made to the resolution I have not been moved by any doubt that the present clerk has rendered service commensurate with what it is proposed to pay him. It is not because I do not think he is worthy of all the resolution would give him; but I can see in this resolution that it fastens upon us another salaried officer in the shape of a committee clerk. Reference has been made to the clerk of the Committee of Claims. Before the establishment of the Court of Claims that committee had all the business before it that now devolves upon the Court of Claims. It was really a judicial body. It kept a record, and it was necessary to have a clerk of considerable acquirements. He was, in fact, a man of very high character. But since the Court of Claims has been established the business of the committee has dwindled and become inconsiderable, and the clerk of that committee ought not to be salaried any more than ten other clerks of committees in the House. We know that the Committee on Invalid Pensions has a great amount of business to do at this time, but after one or two Congresses the business will fall off unless we have another war. We know the claims of pensioners under the revolutionary war and the war of 1812 are referred to a single committee, and that it has very little work at all. If I am incorrect my colleague will correct me. I should be unwilling, therefore, to see the clerk of this committee made a salaried officer. The House has never been niggardly toward its officers. It has always been liberal, and I am quite sure it will be so in this case. I trust, therefore, that the gentleman will not feel bound to pass his resolution.

Mr. MILLER. A word in reply to the gentleman from Tennessee. I hope he will not insist upon his objection. This laborer is certainly worthy of his hire. We have had during this session seven hundred and eighty-five cases before the committee. This gentleman has received for his compensation during the last Congress for one year only $792. He has had to commence early in the morning and work till late in the day. The lowest salary of Department clerks is $1,200, and they work from nine till three or four o'clock. Now, I am perfectly willing to limit the compensation to the present Congress. We ought to include the entire Fortieth Congress, but as the Clerk of the House has settled the account till the 1st of July we cannot go back. This gives the young man a meager compensation for the labor he has before him. The constituents of the gentleman from Tennessee bring before our committee their full share of the labor which this clerk has to perform. I hope, therefore, the resolution will pass. I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman to amend the resolution limiting the compensation to the 4th of March, 1869. If there is no objection the amendment will be considered as agreed to. The question is on the resolution as amended.

Mr. MAYNARD. I understood the gentleman to demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman insist on the previous question?

Mr. MAYNARD. Suppose the previous question is sustained, and the House then adjourns, when will the resolution come up before the House again?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it will come up as unfinished business as soon as the business pending at the recess to-day is completed in reference to the Falls of St. Anthony.

Mr. MAYNARD. I suggest that it take that course.

Accordingly, by unanimous consent, the previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at nine o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. COBURN: A memorial of Delass Root and others, citizens of Indianapolis, Indiana, praying for the enlargement of the ship-canal at Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, July 10, 1868.

Prayer by Rev. E. H. GRAY, D. D.

On motion of Mr. WILLIAMS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

RESIGNATION OF SENATOR JOHNSON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following communication; which was read:

WASHINGTON, July 10, 1868.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that I write by this day's mail, to the Governor of my State, resigning my seat as a Senator of Maryland, the resignation to take effect at once. Do me the favor to make the fact known to the Senate.

I remain, with high regard, your obedient servant,

REVERDY JOHNSON.

HON. BENJAMIN F. WADE, President United States Senate, Washington.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 1381) providing for an election in Virginia, yesterday received from the House of Representatives for concurrence, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WILSON presented a petition of officers of the United States Army praying the passage of the bill to fix and equalize the pay of officers and to establish the pay of enlisted soldiers of the Army; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. HOWE presented a petition of soldiers and widows of soldiers of the war of 1812, praying to be allowed pensions; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DRAKE, from the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, submitted a report accompanied by a joint resolution (S. R. No. 157) in relation to the Union Pacific railway, eastern division. The joint resolution was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORGAN. The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the draft of a section prepared by the Secretary of the Treasury for incorporation into one of the fiscal bills, together with a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury recommending the repeal of all acts and parts of acts which authorise the abatement, reduction, or return of duties on account of damages occurring to merchandise during a voyage; or from injury or destruction by fire, or other cause, after reaching port and while yet in custody of customs officers, have had the same under consideration, and have come to a conclusion unfavorable to the recommendation of the Secretary, and have directed me to make a report in writing. I move that the report be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the following bills, reported them without amendment:

A bill (H. R. No. 1222) granting a pension to Catharine Ginsler;

A bill (H. R. No. 1223) granting a pension to Margaret Filson;

A bill (H. R. No. 1224) granting a pension to Jane E. Rogers;

A bill (H. R. No. 1225) granting a pension to Patrick Collins;

A bill (H. R. No. 1226) granting a pension to Barbara Weisse;

A bill (H. R. No. 1228) granting a pension to Joanna L. Shaw;

A bill (H. R. No. 1229) granting a pension to Anna H. Pratt;

A bill (H. R. No. 1230) granting a pension to Hannah K. Cook;

A bill (H. R. No. 1231) granting a pension to John Morley;

A bill (H. R. No. 1232) granting a pension to Ruth Barton;

A bill (H. R. No. 1233) granting a pension to William F. Moses;

A bill (H. R. No. 1234) granting a pension to Frederica Brielmayer;

A bill (H. R. No. 1235) granting a pension to Johannah Connelly;

A bill (H. R. No. 1236) granting a pension to the minor children of Michael Travis;

A bill (H. R. No. 1237) granting a pension to the widow and minor children of James Cox; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1238) granting a pension to Lavinia A. Gittings, mother of Andrew J. Gittings.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I also report back the bill (H. R. No. 1227) granting a pension to Martha Ann Wallace, with a view of asking to be discharged from it, and at the request of the friends of the applicant I move its reference to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the memorial of members of the First Church and Society of Boston, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of the Protestant Episcopal parish of St. Mary's, Burlington, New Jersey, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

TRUSTEES OF COLORED SCHOOLS.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New Hampshire. The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom the subject was referred, have directed me to report a bill (S. No. 609) transferring the duties of trustees of colored schools of Washington and Georgetown, and to ask for action upon it at this time. It is very short and will take but a moment.

By unanimous consent, the bill was read twice by its title and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to so modify the acts of Congress authorizing the appointment and defining the duties of the board of trustees of colored schools for the cities of Washington and Georgetown as to transfer all the duties heretofore imposed by those acts on the trustees of colored schools to the trustees of the public schools in those cities.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC EXPENDITURES.

Mr. HOWARD. I ask the Senate to take up the joint resolution (S. R. No. 72) for the relief of John M. Broome and others, the band of the twelfth Kentucky infantry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It requires unanimous consent to take it up at this time.

Mr. POMEROY. Are resolutions in order. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They are, if we can get at them.

Mr. POMEROY. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. HENDRICKS] some time ago offered a resolution of inquiry in the morning hour which was passed. Subsequently I moved a reconsideration with a view of amending it. I now desire to have the motion acted upon, and then to offer an amendment to the resolution and let it be passed. I suppose it is in order to do that now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question on the motion to reconsider.

The motion was agreed to; and the question returned on the passage of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to inform the Senate what have been the monthly expenditures and the average expenditures per month of the War, Navy, and Interior Departments since the 1st day of July, 1865; and also the monthly expenditures of each bureau of said Departments during the present fiscal year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is now open to amendment.

Mr. POMEROY. I offer the following amendment—

Mr. CONNESS. I suppose it is not proposed to consider it now.

Mr. POMEROY. If it takes any time I do not wish to urge it.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope it will lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It cannot be considered, objection being made. Reports from committees are still in order.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not understand the Chair. Does the Chair rule that it is not in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not in order because it is objected to, and the morning business has not been gone through with.

Mr. POMEROY. This is morning business, and resolutions are now in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution has been reconsidered, and now you propose to put it on its passage, and I suppose that does not come within the rule. It must wait until the morning business is disposed of if objection is made.

Mr. POMEROY. Is there any objection?

Mr. HENDRICKS. It will be discussed.

Mr. CONNESS. I think it had better be laid over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the resolution will lie over.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. RAMSEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 608) to incorporate the United States Postal Telegraph Company and to establish a postal telegraph system; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILLIAMS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 158) to extend the act establishing the Court of Claims to the claims arising under the act of the 2d of March, 1861, providing for the payment of the expenses of the Washington and Oregon Indian war of 1855-56; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CONKLING asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 610) in relation to corporations created by laws of the United States; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

RESERVATIONS IN SAN FRANCISCO BAY.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I submit the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to furnish the Senate with a description of the Presidio military reservation, including Black Point, lying upon the Bay of San Francisco; accompanied by a diagram showing the external boundaries, the area, and the portions of said reservation actually occupied by the United States.

Mr. CONNESS. I wish to suggest that these are two several reservations, and the language ought to be changed a little if the information is wanted as to both.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I desire a description of all the military reservations lying between San Francisco and the ocean, both of the Presidio and of the Black Point reservation.

Mr. CONNESS. They are separate reservations.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I say "including Black Point."

Mr. CONNESS. Very well.

Mr. COLE. I suppose they are really all occupied by the military authorities as reservations and reserved for military purposes. I do not know the object of the resolution. I have no special objection to it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I simply wish to say that there are questions pending before the Committee on Private Land Claims that render it necessary for that committee to have this information. I understand that there is a large tract of land reserved there by the United States, exceeding fourteen hundred acres, and I desire to know exactly the external boundaries of the reservations and these portions that are actually occupied. There are certain portions of the reservations that are not actually occupied by the United States for any purpose. I simply wish that information to enable the Committee on Private Land Claims to transact its business and to investigate claims that are pending before the committee.

Mr. COLE. Will the Senator from Oregon be so good as to state what claims there are before the committee on which this information is desired?

Mr. WILLIAMS. There may be business before the Committee on Private Land Claims of which the honorable Senator is ignorant. I have no objection to stating the business. One case is an application on the part of Mrs. Jessie Frémont for indemnification for property that was taken, as she claims, by the military authorities in violation of her rights; and this information is desired for the purpose of enabling the committee to consider that claim.

Mr. CONNESS. There can be no objection to it.

Mr. COLE. As it is an application for information, I do not suppose there can be any objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

INTERNAL TAXES.

Mr. YATES. I happened to be absent yesterday in my committee-room when the final vote was taken on the tax bill. I simply desire to say that if I had been present I should have voted for the bill.

BILL RECOMMITTED.

On motion of Mr. HENDRICKS, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 215) relative to the Louisville Bridge Company, was taken from the table and recommitted to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

PRINTING OF A DOCUMENT.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate the day before yesterday rejected a resolution to print a report from the Quartermaster General of the Army. I desire to have it reconsidered with a view of recommitting it to the Committee on Printing.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I now move to recommit it to the Committee on Printing.

The motion was agreed to.

RIGHTS OF CITIZENS ABROAD.

Mr. CONNESS. I move that the bill (H. R. No. 768) concerning the rights of American citizens in foreign States be made the special order for Monday next at one o'clock.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to have that lie over until the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations comes in. I presume he will be here in a short time.

Mr. CONNESS. I wish to say that the honorable chairman has already suggested that he would be ready for its consideration at the beginning of the week, and it is in accordance with that suggestion that I make this motion.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think it would be no more than right to let it lie until he comes in.

Mr. CONNESS. To let it lie until he comes in is simply to let it lie for another day. I ask a vote on my motion. There can be no objection to it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to have an understanding with the Senator from California, that it shall not be antagonized to the funding bill which is now the special order, and on which I hope to get a vote to-day or to-morrow.

Mr. CONNESS. I agree with the Senator that that bill must have precedence.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is the only thing I have charge of, and with that understanding I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on making the bill mentioned by the Senator from California the special order for Monday next at one o'clock.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope not; I only ask the Senator to wait until the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations is present.

Mr. CONNESS. I make a full answer to that. It appears to me that the Senator ought to accept my answer. The whole Senate will bear witness to the motion I made a few days since, and at the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts I withdrew the motion that I then made. The suggestion was that he would be ready in the beginning of the week for that bill. I now make this motion in accordance with that suggestion, which I know will be acceptable to him.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not wish to object to the bill being considered; I want to consider it, but there are bills to protect American citizens at home that should be considered. I am quite as anxious to protect American citizens at home as I am to protect American citizens abroad, and I should not like to sacrifice the interests of American citizens at home to those abroad. I am ready to consider that bill at any time the Senator can get it up.

Mr. CONNESS. The honorable Senator is a little at fault in what he says. American citizens at home are not in jeopardy as citizens abroad are.

Mr. POMEROY. Some of them are very much so.

Mr. CONNESS. I ask for a vote on my motion.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope the bill will not be made a special order under the circumstances.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on making the bill a special order for Monday next at one o'clock.

Mr. CONNESS. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORTON. As a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, I hope the bill will be made a special order for Monday. I know of no reason why it should not.

Mr. CONNESS. There is not any reason at all.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 22, nays 8; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cameron, Gattell, Cole, Conness, Davis, Drake, Harlan, Hendricks, Howard, McCreery, Morgan, Morton, Nye, Ramsey, Ross, Stewart, Thayer, Wade, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Edmunds, Fessenden, Fowler, Morrill of Vermont, Pomeroy, Trumbull, and Vickers—8.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Chandler, Conkling, Corbett, Cragin, Dixon, Doolittle, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Henderson, Howe, McDonald, Morrill of Maine, Norton, Osborn, Patterson of New Hampshire, Patterson of Tennessee, Rice, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Tipton, Van Winkle, Welch, and Willey—27.

So the motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A bill (S. No. 314) for the relief of George T. Brien;

A bill (S. No. 383) granting a pension to John A. Weed and Elizabeth J. Weed, minor children of Robert T. Weed, deceased;

A bill (S. No. 517) granting a pension to the widow and children of Henry Brown; and

A bill (S. No. 521) granting a pension to the children of William M. Wooten, deceased.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 1337) granting an increase of pension to Frances T. Richardson, widow of the late Major General Israel B. Richardson; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1363) granting an increase of pension to Emily B. Bidwell, widow of Brigadier General Daniel D. Bidwell.

ROCK ISLAND BRIDGE.

Mr. HARLAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 201.

Mr. CATTELL. I cannot refrain from saying that I think a bill of a good deal of public importance, which was up yesterday and pretty well discussed, and laid over at the request of the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. TRUMBULL,] should properly come up first this morning and be disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is nothing for the Senator to do but to object until the morning business is disposed of.

Mr. CATTELL. I do not like to do so ungracious a thing as to object.

Mr. HARLAN. I hope the Senator will not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 201) in relation to the Rock Island bridge.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move to amend the joint resolution by inserting after the words "Rock Island," in the ninth line, the words "to connect said island with the cities of Davenport and Rock Island." That is the language of the original act. It will make it more specific.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Explain the necessity of it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I want it to be specific, that it is the bridge provided for there, and not elsewhere.

Mr. SHERMAN. The island of Rock Island, as I understand, is a little above those two cities.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The language of the original act passed in 1867, is "a bridge to connect the island of Rock Island with the cities of Davenport and Rock Island," and I propose to insert these words so as to have it specific. They are the very words of the original act.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does that increase the length of the bridge?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not think it changes it at all; but I thought it was proper that it should be specific, and as the joint resolution must go back to the House I thought it better to adopt the very words of the law.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I desire to ask my friend from Iowa whether he would object to an amendment of this character:

Provided, That in no case shall the cost of the bridge exceed $1,000,000?

Mr. HARLAN. The joint resolution now provides that it shall not exceed the estimates, and I think the estimates were $1,000,000. Therefore I do not see any necessity for the amendment suggested by my honorable friend from Vermont.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I think you had better accept it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARLAN. I will not object to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Then I move to insert at the end of the first section the following proviso:

And provided also, That in no case shall the expenditure on the part of the United States exceed $1,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to say a word in regard to this measure. It is a very large appropriation, but I suppose we must make it as we have undertaken this work. I hope, however, that we shall for some time to come be spared the pressure that I plainly see is to be made upon us for expenditures at Rock Island, amounting to millions of dollars. In the first place, as a matter of fact, it was not necessary to have this arsenal there. We have an arsenal now that can make ten thousand arms a day, three hundred thousand arms a year, and we have more than two million muskets and rifles on hand. We do not wish to make any, and do not wish to improve any. We have improved about fifty thousand of the Springfield muskets that we have on hand at the present time. That institution is more than ample for all the needs of the country. But it was thought best for local reasons to establish this arsenal. I voted for it on account of the fact that it was claimed as a local measure; but when I did so I had no idea that we were to go on and establish an institution on a plan so vast as is now proposed, and that we proposed to expend such enormous sums of money upon it. I know vast sums are to be asked for it, sums that will dwarf this appropriation or any that we ever dreamed of.

I consider it a great mistake that we entered on this work, because we do not need it, and we ought not to establish such institutions East, West, North, or South unless they are absolutely needed for the good of the common country; but we have entered upon it. This bridge, which is to connect the cities of Davenport and Rock Island, will be, of course, for the interest of this arsenal if we are to go on and build it up.

A considerable sum of money has already been expended there; and I know that the gentleman who has charge of it feels that it is a magnificent place; that it is a place where we should lay out several million dollars in establishing an arsenal. I expect that Congress will be called to appropriate six or ten million dollars to build up this work. I do not wish to undertake to arrest this work after we have begun it; but I hope that those who take an interest in it will see to it that all these extravagant aspirations and pretensions are kept down, and that we spend only such amounts of money as are necessary for the country at this place, and that we proceed gradually and slowly in building up that institution. It is fixed there, and I have no doubt will stay there.

I desire to say this much because I know that the gentleman who is at the head of this institution at Rock Island, desires to lay the foundations there on a large and broad scale, of an establishment that must cost many million dollars before it is completed. I hope that those who are friendly to it will not press us into these extravagant appropriations, and especially that those of us who think we ought to proceed with some degree of care in this project, will not be held here or elsewhere as being actuated by a local spirit or a feeling of jealousy simply because this institution is in another part of the country.

General Dyer, chief of the ordnance office, states in a note to me that the expenditures at Springfield armory from 1795 to 31st May, 1868, and at Rock Island arsenal from its establishment in 1862 to 31st May, 1868, have been as follows:

	Springfield armory.	Rock Island arsenal.
For purchase of land, including buildings, water privileges, &c., &c.	$77,442 62	$242,082 52
For erection of buildings, mills, dams, canals, races, and other improvements, machinery, &c., including repairs (if the same)	2,552,076 55	645,022 18
Total of each	$2,629,519 17	$887,104 70

It will be seen that the land and water privileges have already cost three times more at the Rock Island armory than at the Springfield armory, and that about one fourth as much have been appropriated at Rock Island as at Springfield for buildings, improvements, and machinery. Unless carefully watched by Congress we shall soon find that the expenditures at Rock Island will cast in the shade all the expenditures made at Springfield during the past seventy years. I call the attention of our friends from the West to this demand for vast expenditures for this armory in time of peace.

Mr. HARLAN. Perhaps I ought to say, in response to the Senator's appeal, that I shall not press any appropriation for the construction of additional works at Rock Island beyond those which the committee, over which the Senator so ably presides, shall deem demanded by the best interests of the country. I do not agree with him as to the original propriety of locating these works there; I think it was highly proper that they should be located there. Arms will be needed on that side of the Republic probably for a long series of years, more than at any other point. I think it is a very appropriate place to have a depot of arms; but I shall not press any appropriation beyond that which his committee will recommend.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I shall content myself with merely calling for the yeas and nays on this resolution. Without any reference to the arsenal, I consider this appropriation wholly improper. I merely ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator ask for the yeas and nays on the third reading or on the passage of the joint resolution?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. On its passage.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time. It was read the third time.

Mr. MORGAN. I beg to inquire of the Senator from Vermont whether it is expected that the Government is to pay $1,000,000 for the building of this bridge?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. The estimate is that it will cost $1,000,000. There is a provision in the resolution that the railroad company across the river there may have the use of it by paying one half of the cost. There is also another provision that provides for tearing down the existing bridge, by which I think we shall render ourselves liable, if we go on, to pay probably more than half as much more.

Mr. HARLAN. The resolution provides specifically that the Rock Island Railroad Company shall pay one-half the cost of this structure, and if the old bridge is torn down, it renders it absolutely necessary that they should for their own convenience. It also provides that if any other railroad company shall avail themselves of this structure across the river they shall pay a proportional part of the cost, and I have been informed it is probable that another road will avail themselves of the opportunity, and this will still further reduce the amount that the Government will be called upon to pay.

Mr. YATES. I desire to state that I have seen the old bridge at this point, and it is perhaps the greatest obstruction to the Mississippi river. It is constructed so as not to run at right angles across the channel, but diagonally, so that a boat in passing is in danger all the time of being carried by the current on to the piers of the bridge. The consequence is that there have been many steamboats lost there, and navigation has suffered very materially. By the provisions of this joint resolution that obstruction is to be removed—a duty which devolves upon the United States, and is to a great extent the consideration for which the Government makes this appropriation. I think there can be no reasonable objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the joint resolution, on which the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 26, nays 10; as follows: YEAS—Messrs. Cameron, Cattell, Cole, Conness, Cragin, Davis, Drake, Fowler, Harlan, Howard, Morton, Nye, Osborn, Pomeroy, Ramsay, Ross, Stewart, Sumner, Thayer, Tipton, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Wiley, Williams, and Yates—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Conkling, Edmunds, Fessenden, McCreery, Morgan, Morrill of Vermont, Sherman, and Vickers—10.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bayard, Chandler, Corbett, Dixon, Doolittle, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Grimes, Henderson, Hendricks, Howe, McDonald, Morrill of Maine, Norton, Patterson of New Hampshire, Patterson of Tennessee, Rice, Saulsbury, Sprague, Welch, and Wilson—21.

So the joint resolution was passed.

TEMPORARY LOAN CERTIFICATES.

Mr. CATTELL. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 543.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 543) to provide for a further issue of temporary loan certificates, for the purpose of redeeming and retiring the remainder of the outstanding compound-interest notes.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move to amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting:

That for the purpose of redeeming and retiring the remainder of the compound-interest notes, saving the unnecessary payment of interest and reducing the public debt, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to make sale of $10,000,000 of the surplus coin in the Treasury of the United States on the first Monday of the month of August next, and on the first Monday of every month thereafter, until the amount of coin in the Treasury, exclusive of that for which no certificates of deposits shall have been given, shall be reduced to the sum of $10,000,000; the sale to be made in the manner following: The Secretary shall give five days public notice in one daily newspaper published in each of the cities of Washington and New York, that sealed proposals for ten millions of gold coin will be received at the office of the Assistant Treasurer in the city of New York, till three o'clock p. m. of the day appointed for the sale. Such proposals shall be addressed to the Assistant Treasurer at New York, and shall be opened by him in the presence of such persons as may choose to attend at the time designated in the notice. No proposals shall be received unless accompanied by a certificate of deposit in the Treasury of the United States of five per cent. in currency of the amount of coin bid for in such proposal, which shall be received in part pay for the coin bid for in case the bid is accepted, and if not accepted shall be returned to the party who made the bid. Payments may be received for coin in currency, or compound-interest notes with the interest accrued thereon. When compound-interest notes are received, they shall be canceled by the Secretary of the Treasury, and with the currency received he shall purchase and cancel any interest-bearing indebtedness of the United States, paying therefor not exceeding its current market value at the time. None but the highest bids shall be accepted for gold, and in case of different bids at the same rate said bids shall be accepted only pro rata; and the Assistant Treasurer, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall have the right to reject all or any bids if deemed by him less than the fair value of gold at the time.

Mr. President, it will be observed that the amendment which I have offered proposes to reduce the coin in the Treasury of the United States to $40,000,000 by monthly sales of $10,000,000 until it is reduced to that amount. Had I followed my own inclinations entirely I should have introduced a proposition to reduce it much lower than that. I do not think there is any reason for retaining so large a sum as $40,000,000 in gold in the Treasury. But inasmuch as Congress has manifested a disposition to keep more than twice that amount in the Treasury for the last two years, I thought it would be accomplishing much if we could reduce the amount to $40,000,000.

Since this subject was up yesterday I have sent to the Treasury Department and received from that Department a statement showing the amount of coin on hand in the Treasury of the United States at the close of each month for the last two years beginning with July 1, 1866, and ending with July 1, 1868. The amount of coin, including that deposited for which certificates were issued, has frequently exceeded $100,000,000. The average for the last year, after deducting the gold for which certificates of deposit have been issued, exceeds $83,000,000. More than eighty-three millions of gold have lain idle in the Treasury for the last twelve months. Besides, an average of about twenty millions of gold certificates were issued. So that considerably over one hundred millions have been there in all. Over eighty-three millions in gold have been in the Treasury all the time for the last twelve months, and for the last two years I think the average would be about the same. I have the figures here showing the amounts. The amount of currency on deposit during the same length of time and lying idle in the Treasury is also stated in a table which I have before me. The average for the last year has exceeded $34,000,000. Now, if you change the gold which has lain idle in the Treasury for the last year into currency at its market value, and add to it the currency that has lain in the Treasury, you will find that more than one hundred and fifty million dollars of currency and gold turned into currency have lain idle in your Treasury for the last twelve months.

Mr. MORTON. I should like to ask the Senator if he can state the amount of gold that has been sold by the Treasury within the last two years?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I cannot; I have not those figures, but this amount remains after all the sales. I will state to the Senator that I can give him the receipts of gold for the year ending June 30, 1867. The amount received from customs, which is collected, as the Senator is aware, in gold coin, was $176,000,000. One hundred and seventy-six millions were received during the last fiscal year which has been reported, and for the quarter ending on the 30th of September last there were received $48,000,000. I have not the figures to show what the receipts into the Treasury for the entire year were, but assuming that the other quarters yielded as large an amount of customs as the quarter ending the 30th of September last, there would have been received during the fiscal year which has just expired into the Treasury $192,000,000 in gold. The amount of the indebtedness of the United States as reported on the 1st day of June, 1868, upon which we have agreed to pay the interest in gold is $2,020,827,841 80. This indebtedness does not at all bear the same rate of interest. Some of it bears a less rate than six per cent. interest; but assuming that we paid six per cent. upon the whole indebtedness of the United States on the 1st of June last, which we have agreed to pay in coin, the whole amount would be $121,000,000. Thus you see that we are receiving very considerably more in gold for duties than the amount of interest which we pay in gold. We received $50,000,000 more in gold during the last year which is reported than will be our interest for the coming year.

This being so, I can see no necessity for retaining on hand a surplus of forty millions of gold; but I have framed my amendment so as to require the disposition only of the excess over forty millions, and that at the rate of ten millions a month, and providing that there shall be received for the gold, when it is disposed of, the compound-interest notes, with their accruing interest, and the currency of the country; and that it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, on the receipt of the compound-interest notes, to cancel them, and with the currency to purchase the interest-bearing indebtedness of the United States in the market, and destroy that interest-bearing indebtedness as soon as he receives it. This will be a saving to the United States of many millions of dollars. During the last year we might, by the disposition of gold which we had on hand, have saved in currency to the United States at least $6,000,000, probably something more. In former times $6,000,000 would have been considered a very considerable sum; and at this time, when the country is complaining of taxation, when the feeling of the nation is such that an attempt is being made to tax the bonds of the United States, as some suppose in violation of the good faith of the Government, it does seem to me that we should save this $6,000,000 to the Treasury of the United States, and not suffer this money to lie idle in its vaults.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the duty of the Chair to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the morning hour having expired the unfinished business of yesterday is before the Senate regularly.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask whether the unfinished business takes precedence of the special order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the rule of the Senate the unfinished business supersedes everything else.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If we can once get up the joint resolution, which is the unfinished business, we can dispose of it in two or three hours.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to the special order going over informally, in the hope that we may get a speedy vote on that resolution.

Mr. POMEROY. It cannot go over informally, because the unfinished business takes precedence of it.

Mr. SHERMAN. But I want to continue the funding bill as a special order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The special order will be laid aside informally, if that be the wish of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not ask it in regard to this; but I say I hope the unfinished business will be disposed of in a short time, so that we can proceed with the special order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We shall get rid of it very soon, I trust.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business of yesterday is before the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 554) making a grant of land to the State of Minnesota to aid in the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi river, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. F. A. PIKE of Maine, Mr. IGNATIUS DONNELLY of Minnesota, and Mr. WILLIAM MUNGEN of Ohio, managers at the same on its part.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 329) to amend the fourteenth section of the act approved July 28, 1866, entitled "An act to protect the revenue, and for other purposes."

The message also informed the Senate that Mr. JAMES B. BECK, of Kentucky, had been appointed a manager on the part of the House, at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 318) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1869, and for other purposes, in the place of Mr. W. S. HOLMAN, of Indiana, excused.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 420) to incorporate the "Connecticut Avenue and Park Railway Company" in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 650) to amend act of 3d March, 1865, providing for the construction of certain wagon-roads in Dakota Territory; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1068) to provide for certain claims against the Department of Agriculture.

IMPROVEMENT OF MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 554) making a grant of land to the State of Minnesota to aid in the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi river, disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

On motion by Mr. RAMSEY, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendment to the said bill disagreed to by the House, and agree to the conference asked, by the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. RAMSEY, Mr. HENDRICKS, and Mr. POMEROY.

ELECTORAL VOTE OF LATE REBEL STATES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. No. 139) excluding from the Electoral College votes of States lately in rebellion which shall not have been reorganized, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. CONKLING to the amendment of Mr. DRAKE.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I believe the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. DAVIS] wishes to address the Senate for a short time this morning.

Mr. DAVIS. I believe the pending proposition is the substitute offered by the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the pending question.

Mr. DAVIS. It is not my purpose to make many remarks upon the subject, but I would prefer that the vote should be taken upon that proposition before I make any.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator from Kentucky does not wish to submit his remarks now, I may just as well at this time, although an amendment is pending, (because these amendments are only changes of phraseology after all,) occupy ten or fifteen minutes of the time of the Senate in stating the grounds upon which I think this joint resolution ought to pass; and in doing that I shall endeavor to refrain from going into any political questions that are not necessarily connected with this measure; and I appeal to Senators on all sides of the Chamber, considering the lateness of the session, considering the nature of this joint resolution, to confine themselves in debate, so far as I may in courtesy appeal to them, to the very questions that are presented, and leave platforms and other considerations that appeal to the general political campaign to be discussed upon some bill that will not occupy so much time in its return to us as this may, possibly.

Therefore, Mr. President, confining myself strictly to the real question of the propriety of this joint resolution, I have to say, in the first place, that I think there is clearly no constitutional doubt of our power to pass it; that it comes clearly within the scope of those duties that the Constitution has remitted to us as lawmakers. The Constitution does not prescribe in terms how the votes of a State shall be ascertained to be its votes, but only prescribes that the votes of a State shall be opened and counted in the presence of the two Houses; but it gives to Congress the power to pass all laws that are necessary to carry into proper effect all the functions that are granted to any Department of the Government. Therefore, it seems plain that this is the proper subject of law to ascertain and define a rule of action in a case that may arise, that enters into the laws of all the States that we know of, under constitutions in these respects much like ours, providing by law as to how the people's will shall be ascertained, and providing some board or tribunal, regulated by law, pointing out their duties beforehand, who shall go through with the necessary functions of ascertaining what that will has been. So, I take it, that it is clearly within the scope of our constitutional powers.

This same question was up four years ago, and it was then fully debated, upon the passage of a resolution similar to this, excluding, after the votes had been taken in two of the States, the votes of the ten States to which this resolution applies; and in the course of that debate the propriety of legislation in advance was thoroughly laid down, and the propriety of it shown in order to avoid leaving anything to contests and discretions afterward. It was said by the honorable Senator from Illinois [Mr. TRUMBULL] the other day, against this resolution, that it was leaving discretion to somebody; but as he himself then stated, the propriety of passing a law in advance and of regulating the matter by law was to avoid leaving anything to be the subject of contest when the votes should come actually to be counted in the convention of the two Houses; and I think then he was clearly right. The effect and object of the joint resolution is to remove from the arena of passion and of prejudice questions which would appeal to passion and prejudice when it was known at the time that a particular decision or a particular rule would produce a certain result. Now we declare the rule before any of us can know upon which political side of the question it is to operate. We do not declare, as I said yesterday, who shall vote, or how they shall vote, but we simply declare what we the political communities within the territories embraced in these States which make up the State in a political sense, and declare that those political communities, and no others, are the States mentioned in the Constitution as the ones whose electors shall vote for President.

Mr. TRUMBULL said on the 1st of February, 1865, on this same question:

"It is important to settle at an early day the mode of counting the votes for President and Vice President, which, under the Constitution and laws, are to be opened and canvassed a week from to-day in joint session of the two Houses. It is known probably to every member of the Senate that no rules have ever been adopted for action in that joint convention."

And then he goes on to say, with great propriety, that it is extremely desirable and proper that a rule provided by law should be laid down, and the scope and tenor of his remarks, properly and conclusively, were that that rule was to obviate as far as it is possible for the law to obviate such a thing, any discretion, any flexibility being left to the person or the bodies who were to count those votes. In that he was entirely right, although I regret very much to perceive that he, apparently, has changed his view on that subject now.

At a later point in the debate he stated the propriety of this in so much better and stronger language than I can, that I beg leave to read a little further:

"Now, sir, it is said that the votes of these States will not affect the result. That may be so; we may know outside that it probably is so; but this war may last four years more. I trust in God it will not; I do not believe it will; but suppose it shall run four years longer, and the doctrine contended for here is to obtain, how do you know but that at the next presidential election your President may be selected by these very States in rebellion? Sir, I say to you here what I believe, that if the result of the presidential election depended upon the vote of Louisiana, I care not which way it was cast, if the pretended electoral votes of Louisiana were to choose the next President of the United States after the 4th of March, decided either way, it would produce a revolution in this country unless you had some provision to settle it by law in advance."

That is precisely what this resolution proposes to do in all these States, to determine which are the political communities, and to declare in advance that none but those communities shall participate in this election.

The honorable Senator from Maryland [Mr. JOHNSON] said:

"The question, then, Mr. President, is whether Congress have any authority to legislate at all on this subject. I agree with the chairman of the Judiciary Committee and my friend from Vermont?"

The predecessor of my present colleague, Mr. COLLAMER—

"that the authority exists; and I was somewhat surprised to find that it was disputed by gentlemen of such distinction every way, and particularly in their profession, as the honorable member from Wisconsin and the honorable member from New York."

"I never heard before—I speak it with entire respect to my learned brothers—that it was doubted that it was within the province of Congress to provide for cases of this description. The doubt was, and perhaps that doubt was well founded, whether votes could be excluded by either branch of Congress or by the two when they met in convention. Nobody supposed that the Vice President could exclude them. But I was about to say that I never heard it doubted before that such a contingency, as might well happen, because of the manner in which the constitutional provision was framed, could not be provided for by legislation."

Then he quotes from Chancellor Kent to show that in the opinion of that eminent jurist, it is a proper and fit subject of legislation in advance, as much as it is in the States, to provide for ascertaining who are the persons who have voted and who they have voted for.

Now, I beg leave to read from an authority quite as high and as respectable, the honorable Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. DAVIS.] He says:

"And the question now under consideration is, have the two Houses of Congress in their legislative capacity the power to lay down certain rules by which this office of counting the vote may be performed? I think that they have. The clause in the Constitution read first by the Senator from New Hampshire, and subsequently by other Senators, seems to me to confer full and plenary power in relation to the manner of counting the votes upon Congress; and Congress may declare by its legislative action certain rules to regulate the count of the presidential vote."

Still later he says:

"Now, sir, as I understand the effect of this joint resolution, it is simply in a form to do that duty."

Which he has described to be the duty of ascertaining whether the votes given are the votes of the State, and he illustrates by supposing the vote to have been given to some person whose eligibility was in question—

"that is, to ascertain whether the vote of certain States has been cast in conformity to the Constitution or not, and deciding that they have not been cast in conformity to the Constitution, to exclude them from the count. Some gentlemen here think the election in Louisiana was illegal for one class of reasons; I think it was illegal for another class of reasons; but as we both come to the same conclusion, it is immaterial upon what grounds. The vote of that State is illegal."

The honorable Senator moved an amendment to the joint resolution that was then pending, and apparently as expressive of his views, which contains in it so clearly the precise principle upon which this bill proceeds that I cannot forbear from reading it:

"Mr. DAVIS. I move to amend the amendment by striking out all after the word 'that,' where it first occurs, and inserting:

"The States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, and Tennessee, are not entitled to representation in the Electoral College for the choice of President and Vice President for the term of office commencing on the 4th day of March, 1865; and no electoral votes shall be received or counted from said States concerning the choice of President and Vice President for the said term of office."

At another place in the debate, which I will not occupy time in turning to, the honorable Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. DOOLITTLE]—

Mr. DAVIS. Will the honorable Senator give me the exact date of that debate?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will give you the book that contains the marks, so that you can look into it. It was between the 1st and 4th of February. The debate ran through two or three days.

Mr. DAVIS. What year?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Eighteen hundred and sixty-five. The honorable Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. DOOLITTLE,] not now in his seat, expressed substantially the same opinions. The fault that he found with the passage of that resolution was that it was passed after the fact, after the votes had been cast, and he contended, and with a good deal of plausibility, that the law ought to provide in advance the rule which should govern. I cite him also as a good authority.

After this debate, in which all these eminent gentlemen on all sides agreed as to the power of Congress and the propriety of a regulating rule which should leave nothing to discretion or doubt when the event should come, the resolution passed by yeas 29, nays 10, and among the yeas are the names of my honorable friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BUCKALEW,] the Senator from Kentucky, to whom I have referred, [Mr. DAVIS,] the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. HENDRICKS,] and, I believe, one or two other distinguished members of that political party. I take this, in connection with the well-known principles of the Constitution and of the practice of all the States, to be, what is so well called by my friend from Kentucky, plenary proof that we have the power to pass a bill of this description, and that it is proper that we should exercise that power if there is any reasonable possibility that a case of dispute may arise.

Now, the honorable Senators are opposed to this resolution undoubtedly because those communities that have been permitted, after the rebellion has been crushed, to organize themselves are not the sort of communities that they wish to recognize. They would be glad to have a bill passed, I do not doubt, which should declare that the men who were entitled to vote in 1860, and no others, in those States should be entitled now to vote for President. The honorable Senator from Pennsylvania put his opposition distinctly, last night, to this resolution upon the ground that those governments that are now organized there are irregular, usurpations, unconstitutional, void governments; and he went so far as to intimate—but I do not wish to follow him into that, because that enters into the political field, and I desire to have this resolution considered upon its merits and got through—he went so far as to intimate that the reception of the votes from those reorganized communities and under their authority would be resisted if they affected the result. But I will not follow him into that. I merely allude to it now so far as I can legitimately, to show that here is a possibility of a question being raised which ought to be provided for in advance by the law.

Other citizens of our country of great distinction, the newspaper press of the country of the party to which the honorable Senator belongs, have intimated a different line of policy, but still opening the question; that is to say, not only that the votes of these organized communities should not be counted, but that votes taken under some preëxisting organization, or without any organization at all, from the body of electors who by the old laws before the rebellion were entitled to vote, should be the votes received and counted in this election for President. Now, all those are questions. They are fair questions for debate; and I respect the opinions of any Senator who believes that any of these branches of the proposition is the true one. All that I beg to remind these Senators of is that, it being a question of dispute, the law-making power, binding upon us all, upon our consciences, requires the concurrence of a majority to determine the rule beforehand how this dispute shall be disposed of; that is all. There must be, in the nature of things, rules where there is this possibility, a provision made which shall be a controlling guide to the disposition of the question; and the Constitution, happily for the peace of the country, has confided the making of that rule, as I have shown from these debates and from the Constitution itself, to the law, just as in all systems of civilized governments such questions are confided to the disposition of the law, made in advance of the fact, and laying its calm but steadfast hand upon whatever state of circumstances and in whatever interest they may arise, when they do arise, impartially and according to that rule; leaving no discretion to anybody, as the honorable Senator from Illinois supposed it was to do, but taking away discretion from everybody, and pointing out, as the Senator confessed we were the political power who were to point out and to ascertain, which are the States now embraced within the territories that were the States in 1860, what political communities are the ones which are the States; because there cannot be two States within one territorial boundary of a State.

There can be but one political community that is the true one; and as my honorable friend from Pennsylvania conceded last night—and it is nothing new, of course; we all understand it—it is the political department of the Government, the law-making power, acting through its laws which recognize that condition of things that is to determine what the State is. We have determined as to these States we have provided for the readmission of, who have chosen to reorganize themselves after this rebellion, that that political community is the State. We have not undertaken to interfere in that political community, as the Senator said, to compel them to organize a State. We have not undertaken to interfere by excluding one half of the people from determining what sort of institutions they would have; but we have, with a very narrow class of exceptions founded upon crime, appealed to the whole body of the community to organize such governments, republican in form, as they should think fit. Having organized them and submitted them to our approval, they have been completely restored and rehabilitated. Now, we must decide that they, and no other organization, are the political community in those States; and therefore from them, and from no other organization, can votes for President and Vice President be received.

I should have been glad, if the time would permit, to make some remarks especially in reply to some of the observations of the Senator from Illinois, founded upon the fear that somebody would say that this was a partisan movement; but I have not the time consistently with the patience of the Senate to do that. He of all other men, I think, ought not to be afraid of doing what justice and propriety would seem to require on account of people finding fault with his action. He has given us eminent proofs of his courage in that respect a great many times.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, between the resolution presented by the Senator from Vermont and the substitute offered by the Senator from New York, I believe there is only a formal difference. The one speaks in particular terms designating States, and the other in general terms, which necessarily comprehends them. I agree with the Senator from Vermont in one of his propositions most unhesitatingly, that there can be but one State within the same limits. I lay down the further proposition that the State, the true State, that occupies and consists of the people within the particular boundary of a State, has the right to elect presidential electors.

I agree with the Senator in another of his propositions, that any law of Congress or any regulation which does not infract the Constitution, but which is merely directory of the manner in which the ministerial duty of counting the votes of the presidential electors may be prescribed by Congress; but whenever such a law in any of its provisions impinges upon any of the provisions of the Constitution, to that extent it is null and void. I will read what the Constitution says on this subject of presidential electors:

"Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors, equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress."

Now, as to what is to be done with the votes of those electors when they are chosen:

"The electors shall meet in their respective States, and vote by ballot for President and Vice President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same State with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice President; and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as President, and of all persons voted for as Vice President, and of the number of votes for each, which lists they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate. The President of the Senate shall, in presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates, and the votes shall then be counted."

These are the portions of the text of the Constitution which settle the principles, and I concede that any legislation within the limit of those principles would be constitutional.

Now, I will proceed to examine each one of the principles established by these provisions of the Constitution which I have read, and endeavor to compare them with the proposition of the honorable Senator:

"Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors."

The first question is, What is the State that is to appoint in such manner as the Legislature thereof shall direct, the electors to which that State is entitled? It is the people of the particular portion of the country organized into a State, under a constitution formed by the people who are clothed with the political power within that State. The first requisite in the process is that there must be a State. The people alone can form a State. To constitute a State, it must have a government, a government by a constitution; and that is just as necessary as people or territory to constitute a State. How is this government of constitution to be formed? It is to be formed by the people of the State alone. Congress has no power to form the government of a State. It has no power to form that government in whole or in part. It has no right to meddle with that duty and right of the people of the State, the formation of their government, except on a single point; and that is, to see that it is republican in form.

Now, when it is inquired whether a particular country being called a State has elected presidential electors or not, I admit that the two Houses may and must necessarily inquire whether there is a State within that country. To reach that conclusion there must be a defined territory; there must be a people; there must be a constitution or a form of government creating a Legislature; and this form of government must be made by the people of the State in their sole and sovereign capacity, irrespective of any manipulation or interference by Congress. The government of the State made by the people thereof must have a legislative body, and that legislative body that is created and organized must direct the manner in which the presidential electors shall be chosen. If there are any of these essential, constitutional requisites absent, it is a fatal defect in its non-conformity to the Constitution, and such a State in which such constitutional and organic defects exist has no power whatever to choose electors.

I will illustrate my proposition by an example, and I will take an example in point. Here are Alabama and Arkansas. It is said they have been reconstructed. Both of those States before their governments were destroyed had constitutions and State governments formed by or with the consent and acquiescence of the people of those States respectively, and those governments have been recognized by Congress and all the departments of this Government in various official acts. The honorable Senator from Vermont and his associates on this floor were not satisfied to let those governments formed by the people remain and perform their legitimate functions, but they proceeded to pass what are called the reconstruction laws of Congress, which profess to abrogate those governments, and to dictate conditions upon which they should be reformed in conformity to the laws of Congress.

My position is that those governments which Congress found in existence, and which it recognized by passing laws for the government of those respective States, being formed by the people of the States, or they having acquiesced in and adopted those governments, were the only legitimate, constitutional governments of the States. It was not competent for Congress to abolish those governments. The reconstruction laws which proposed to effect that object were flagrantly in violation of the Constitution, and are utterly null and void. They had no right to abrogate a State government. A State government can be formed by but one power on earth under the Constitution of the United States, and that is by the people of the State. They are not only to exercise the power, but all the power; and if Congress interferes by its dictation and by military force for the purpose of coercing, constraining the people of a State to form a government after a particular manner, or not to form it after a particular manner, it is an interference without sanction of power and utterly destroys and renders null and void the bastard fruit of such interference.

Then, sir, I am led to this position: not only that the State governments of Alabama, Arkansas, and all the other southern States which had been formerly adopted by their people, could not be legitimately or constitutionally or authoritatively abolished by Congress, but also to the second position that Congress had no legitimate or constitutional power to build up other States in their stead. This reasoning leads me to the conclusion that electors chosen by the governments and the Legislatures of those States that were provided for by their previous constitutions would be literally and strictly in conformity to the Constitution, and that any electors chosen by these spurious and bastard governments in those or in any of the other southern States that have been erected by the usurped power of Congress, in conjunction with the military power of the nation, perverted to that illegitimate and unconstitutional use, with the instrumentality of the negroes, who are not entitled, constitutionally, to vote at all, are utterly null and void, and have no power whatever to choose electors in the presidential election.

Suppose there should be two electoral tickets elected from the southern States, one under their governments that existed before the interposition of Congress by force to destroy them, and by the Legislatures of those States respectively, and then other classes of electors chosen or appointed by these subsequent illegitimate governments. My position is that the former would have all the legitimate and constitutional power to cast the vote of their respective States in the presidential election, and that the latter would not have a particle of power to do it.

Mr. CONKLING. To which governments do you refer, the provisional governments, or those before the rebellion?

Mr. DAVIS. I refer to the governments which the people recognized after the rebellion had ceased. They were not provisional governments. The people do not make provisional governments. They make absolute governments. The provisional governments were set up afterward by military power, in derogation of and upon the ruins of the legitimate governments which the people themselves had formed. I maintain that it is the right of those previously existing legitimate governments formed by the people themselves, and not the right of those meretricious governments set up by Congress, to choose electors for those respective States; and I believe that whenever the question is presented that a class of electors chosen by the negro governments offer to vote for President of the United States the white people will see to it that the negro governments do not cast their votes, and that the white men do.

Now, sir, what does this joint resolution propose? I will read it:
